JAZZ: IT'S ONLY A PAPER BOOM

50 (Well, Probably) Scripts in Silos As Tryouts Pitch for Haymakers

Strawhat tryouts are apparently still pie-in-the-sky for legit managements. Despite the rarity of Broadway payoffs from citronella circuit break-ins, the low-cost angle remains a compelling lure. From present indications, the barn-bow orop this summer will number somewhere around 50, about the same as last year and more or less par for the field.

As always, some of the so-called tryouts appear to be cases of great expectations. Increasingly in recent seasons, the tryout tag is apt to be a matter of courtesy or just false optimism. On the other hand, there has been at least one show, "An Evening With Beatrice Lillie," put together primarily as a silo belt vehicle and subsequently serving as a cleanup on Broadway.

Despite the soaring cost of production and operation on the mosquito trail, it's still a bargain compared to the ruinous spiral on Broadway. Also, when authors and author-agents are unable to scare up a New York production for a script, the rural trial spin offers a chance to get a look at the piece in performance, plus audience reaction (if any) and a hoping-against-hope stab at recognition.

In the tabulations below, only the seemingly serious tryout projects are included. From advance reports, at least one, "Man in the Dog Suit," is figured a virtual certainty for Broadway production in the fall. But haymow tourers such as George Jessel's solo "Show Time" obviously don't rate as "tryouts." Also, items like Paul Green's "The Founders" and Kermit Hunter's historical pageants

Remake of Hemingway 'Farewell' Again Stirs Italy's World War I Vets

Rome, July 2.

Producer David O. Selznick called a hasty press conference here following a published protest by an Italian veterans group against the shooting of "A Farewell to Arms" in this country. Original work included the Italian retreat before the Austrio-Hungarians in World War I.

Group of local vets of World War I including some generals and other high echelon officers, asked that work on the Hemingway novel be stopped, or, if the film was completed, that release of it in this country be prohibited. Group said the story "could be constructed as degrading to the Italian Armed Forces." Same complaint was made when "Farewell" was filmed first time.

Selznick, in his press confab, asserted his film "contained nothing offensive nor even remotely damaging to Italian military

PAR'S 7-DAY WONDER VIA REHEARSAL SKED

Hollywood, July 2.

What may be the shortest shooting schedule ever assigned a major studio production has been worked out for "Hear Me Good," which rolls at Paramount Monday (8). Film will be shot in seven days.

Short shooting schedule is the result of extensive pre-production planning, including three weeks of dress rehearsals on completed sets and utilization of the tape recording method to help actors prepare their roles.

Hal March stars in the film which Don McGuire wrote and will produce and direct.

Church Boycott Hits Conn. Barn

Litchfield, Conn., July 2.

Members of the local Roman Catholic parish have been warned to boycott the Litchfield Summer Theatre on the basis of "objectionable" shows it has presented. The ban was announced from the pulpit Sunday of last week (30) by Rev. Lawrence E. Skelly, of St. Anthony's Church.

According to parishioners, the priest condemned the strawhat's current production, "Pajama Tops," and also cited such other recent offerings as "Rose Tattoo" and "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter." He asserted that they are among seven plays found objectionable this season by the archdiocesan paper, but also mentioned that he has been following the summer theatre play ratings of the church magazine, Sign, and also the Legion of Decency classifications.

Skelly has reportedly sent word

Stars Pay Own Fares To Danny Thomas Show For New Catholic Hosp.

Memphis, July 2.

Although cash receipts are undisclosed, some 20,000 persons filled Russwood baseball park here for the benefit organized by Danny Thomas on behalf of St. Jude Hospital. This was fullfillment of a promise made by Thomas to Cardinal Stritch of Chicago. Goal is the erection of a new $2,000,000 Catholic hospital in the Memphis area.

Thomas had unusual support. All performers took care of their own travel tabs and other costs while the musicians and stagehands' locals, respectively, dead-

BIG-PAY NAMES VS. B.O. PAYOFF

By MIKE GROSS

In the practical world of show biz economics, the jazz artists are running ahead of the "boom"—a "boom" that's reflected in the press and magazines rather than at the b.o.

"The jazz artists themselves," says indie jazz promoter Don Friedman, "are making the 'boom' financially unrealistic." It's his opinion that the "write-up" splurge that jazz has been receiving recently has thrown jazz artists' salaries out of proportion to their actual draw potential. Despite the fact that many recent jazz tours have fallen by the b.o. wayside, the jazz artists are steadily hiking their price demands. "This," says Friedman, "is making it difficult for promoters of concerts and festivals, as well as club owners, to operate."

He puts the price onus on the handful of top jazz names operating today. "The second-stringers are okay when it comes to salary," he admits, "but a jazz promoter can't afford to gamble without a name and names are making a jazz presentation virtually prohibitive."

Any decent jazz package now, he claims, costs a promoter between $3,500 and $4,500 against 50% of the take from the first dollar. This leaves the promoter with 50% of the gross to take care of the cost of the hall, advertising and promotion expenses. "It's gotten so," he states, "that you can't go into New York's Carnegie Hall with only one show and make money. You need two performances and you've al-

'Island In Sun' Beats Dixie Rap?

Hollywood, July 2.

20th-Fox sales chief Alex Harrison stated here that Darryl F. Zanuck's "Island in the Sun" is outgrossing "King and I" in supposedly race-touchy cities of Lexington, Louisville, Oklahoma City and Charleston, W. Va.

Resultantly the film will pick up Texas, Virginia and Florida playdates.

Stanton Speaks Up in Defense of Khrushchev Telecast, Editorializing

Washington, July 2.

After maintaining a discreet and virtually complete silence for the past four weeks over criticism of CBS' Nikita Khrushchev interview, Columbia prexy Frank Stanton today (Tues.) entered a strong defense of the web's news operation and furthermore declared that on-the-air editorializing is a must for the future.

Speaking before the National Press Club, Stanton led off his speech with a swipe at President Eisenhower's remarks anent CBS' position as a "commercial enterprise" in the Khrushchev situation. "I come from a commercial organization," Stanton said in his opening line.

"A major duty of that organization is to report the news. A major right is to editorialize about the news."

Describing the television interview as "a wholly new dimension of journalism" which has the "ability to confront viewers with personalities in the actual process of making news," Stanton stated that "in its use, we feel duty bound to bring the most important men and ideas of our times to the American people. And in the manner in which this is done we are determined to acquit ourselves as your brothers in a free press.

"For if we define as 'the most important men and ideas' those that are most apt to affect importantly the lives of our viewers and listeners and readers, then we must, I think, place our whole confidence in the wisdom of Jefferson's statement that the people 'may be

JACK BENNY'S JACKPOT PAYOFF IN LAS VEGAS

Las Vegas, July 2.

Jack Benny is hitting jackpot takes in his first Las Vegas booking at the Flamingo Hotel. According to operator Al Parvin, about 1,000 customers have been turned away at each show during the first 10 days. Up to 800 are being seated at each session.

According to Parvin, the first 10 days of Benny's engagement took in more coin than the first 20 days of the preceding show, and 33% more than any other layout in the Falmingo's history including Judy Garland. The minimum $3 per person built up to an average of $6 for food and $4 for drinks. Casino biz also up by 33% especially on the slot machines, roulette and blackjack.

Skouras to Tour 14 Soviet Cities

Spyros P. Skouras, president of 20th-Fox, is going to Russia in September as guest of the Soviet Government.

Skouras discloses that he will make Russia his first stop, visiting some 14 cities in the Soviet Union. He is planning also to tour some of the other countries in the Red orbit.

Asked whether he'd go to Hungary, Skouras said he'd like to "but it's difficult to get visas." Before going behind the Iron Curtain, the 20th topper plans to visit South Africa, where his company has extensive holdings.

Skouras has been planning the Soviet trip for at least two years.

Costello Link to Vegas Prowled by Ill. and Ind. Through Insurance Firm

Chicago, July 2.

Impact of the Tropicana case has state authorities in Illinois and Indiana also in the act supporting the efforts of New York and Nevada authorities to link Frank Costello to the operation of the Vegas nitery. According to a Chicago Daily News story, Illinois and Indiana insurance departments are investigating the Guarantee Reserve Life Insurance Co. here which holds a mortgage on the club totalling $2,801,111, or 30% of its assets as of last September.

The insurance company obtained the Tropicana mortgage through its former prexy Frank Jaffe who Bard Fest Brings Mobs, Culture, Exotic Foods To Artier Stratford, Ont.

By PAUL A. GORMLEY

Stratford, Ont., July 2.

What does an annual diet of culture do for a town? Take this once shabby railroad burg of 20,000 population. It started with a Shakespeare Festival in 1953 to which has since been appended jazz music and film festivals. Here are some of the results:

Besides getting free newspaper space, town has been visited by tourists from 32 of the American states, plus Hawaii, from European lands and Korea, Japan and Indonesia. Overflow from hotels and motels puts money in pocketbooks of room-renting burghers, not less than $35,000 each summer. The whole town is spruced up, classier and definitely artier. Both long-hair and cool jazz records now sell two-for-one over former times. Film houses gross double when exhibiting Shakespeare, historical and art subjects.

Not the least piquant development in the town is a Gourmet

'Aging' Crack Riles Crawford

She Sees Established Drawing Power Keeping Film Industry Afloat Today

By DAVE KAUFMAN

Hollywood, July 2

Joan Crawford has unloosed a blast at a poll taken recently by Extension mag, a Catholic monthly. She asserts that if it weren't for the established, so-called "aging star," the pix biz would be in really serious trouble today. Poll of mag's predominantly youthful subscribers reflected a strong sentiment that the stars of middle age or over should either quit or stop playing romantic roles opposite youngsters.

Miss Crawford rapped Extension poll and other surveys indicating the picture-going audience today is mainly teenage. The star declared "they're not getting their results from moviegoers. And I don't think teenagers comprise the majority of the movie audiences. I'd hate to think what would happen to picture business if Gregory Peck, Cary Grant, Gary Cooper, Katherine Hepburn, Bette Davis and Jimmy Stewart retired. There's no reason why they should retire."

She took special exception to Extension poll's criticism of an older star such as Gary Cooper playing the romantic lead opposite Audrey Hepburn in "Love in the Afternoon." "I saw the picture and was enchanted by every minute of it. How will the younger stars make the grade if they don't have the well-known ones to

Tebaldi's Grand Evening At Lewisohn; Not SRO But a Tumult of Love

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

Renata Tebaldi, the Met's tall-doll Italian prima donna, slimmed down 20 pounds during her American season, was a crashing success last Thursday (27) at Lewisohn Stadium, N. Y. The mob howled at the end and she fed them two encores and flung kisses in the profusion only a diva from La Scala knows how to manage. She then wrapped herself in a stylish gown and went home to get ready to sail for Italy the next morning on the Christoforo Colombo.

Since the soprano does not fly (many opera singer refuse), it was her last available night and Minnie Guggenheimer's calculated risk that it didn't rain, since there was no "come again another day" possible. As it was, the threateningly clouds an hour before the concert probably kept the stadium considerably short of capacity, especially in the cheaper seats. False rumors of "no seats left" also hurt.

Pushed to its limits, Lewisohn will hold 20,000 people. It had about 14,000. That will still be one of the summer's best nights in at-

VANDALS WORK HARD TO RUIN MEN'S ROOM

Minneapolis, July 2.

Juvenile theatre vandalism is taking new forms in some parts of the territory. In Luverne, Minn., the local ozoner's men's room newly painted walls and ceiling were "walked on."

It develops that the two culprits, who later were apprehended and have agreed to pay for the damage, entered the men's room following a rainstorm. After removing their shoes they took turns standing on each other upside down and sideways to implant their footprints on the ceilings and wall.

'Variety' Heads Part Of Satevepost's OK 'Salute to Hollywood'

Hollywood, July 2.

Themed on two premises—"what does the magazine do to the reader?", and "what does the reader do to the rest of his world as a result of having read the magazine?"—the conservative Saturday Evening Post made a pitch for the film ad dollar at its recent "Salute to Hollywood."

The magazine described the event staged at the Beverly Hilton last week (24) as a "goodwill gesture to Hollywood at a time when it has become the fad to make it a whipping boy in print." Highlight of the evening, which opened with cocktails and closed with dinner in the Bali Room, was the skit presented by Robert S. Hills, associate editor, who illustrated points made with graphs, pictures and re-

Kaufman, former VARIETY staffer and former Chicago Sun drama critic, currently living in Paris, thus becomes the only American member of the exclusive French critics' association.

This Is Opera?

Greensboro, N. C., July 2.

Representatives of NBC Opera Co. visited Greensboro June 2 to inspect Aycock Auditorium at Woman's College and make plans for the presentation of an opera here on Nov. 18.

The group also made a stop at Winston-Salem to visit WSJS-TV, the NBC television outlet there.

Visitors were Lew Ames, director of the opera company; Robert Chandler, general manager; David Cantor, stage manager; Robert Cunnis, press director; Robert Aaron, NBC station relations representative; and two aids. They travelled in a chartered airliner.

Hurok's Global Talent for U.S.

Paris, July 2.

S. Hurok spent a busy five days in Paris interviewing a couple of dozen longhair artists anxious to make an American trek. He signed a long-term contract with Eric Heidsieck, young French pianist, who has never been in America.

While here Hurok met with Leonide Kogan, violinist, and Emil Gilels, pianist, both from Soviet Russia, both of whom are being brought to America in January, lining up their dates and repertoires. They both gave concerts in Paris last week.

After Moscow, Hurok will go to Warsaw to finalize some cultural exchange deals, also with the State Dept. blessing, then to London, to finalize deals for a return visit to the U.S. of the Old Vic late in 1958 or early in 1959.

Tentative deals in Italy, Spain and Austria will be held open by Hurok depending on length of his London visit, since he must return to New York early in August.

SKELTON'S HEARTBREAK TRIP

Take Their Son, Leukemia Victim, on Fun Voyage

Washington, July 2.

Washington news corps, which takes its kings and heads of state in stride, was frankly touched by five day visit here of comic Red Skelton and his two children. The junket with a heart throb was part of a sightseeing jaunt through this country and Europe to bring excitement and fun into the life of nine-year old Richard Skelton, a victim of leukemia. Sister Valentina, Richard's senior by one year, was along to share the fun.

Comic and his family came into town sans fanfare or publicity in an attempt to move about freely, but were spotted by newsmen. The agenda, which included the usual tours of Capitol Hill, Mt. Vernon and government buildings, also included a look-see at the White House with presidential Gen. Homer Gruenther as guide.

The Skeltons have already been to Plymouth for the arrival of Mayflower II, to New York and to Philadelphia. They leave soon for Europe.

EDDIE ALBERT'S VACASH

Paris, July 2.

Eddie Albert, having concluded filming in Darryl Zanuck's "Farewell to Arms" here, has tucked his wife, Margo, and their six-year-old son, Eddie Jr., into an automobile for a slow three-week vacation tour of Europe.

They return here afterwards to record some phonograph disks, flying back to Hollywood about the end of July.

More Paris-Rome Capers

By ABEL GREEN

Paris, July 2.

On the overall aura, prices have stabilized themselves. Italy is still much cheaper than France but the spiral has not gone up again, and once again revives an observation by this reporter, "Paris is like a beautiful woman, and beautiful women always must be supported in handsome style."

Last season, striptease and snack-bar were the Yank evolutions, while Paris has always had female impersonators (Madame Artur's, and the like), somehow Coccinelle at the Carrousel, has taken the epidermis display play away from the stripperies.

Unabated Tourism

Postwar tourist traffic has increased the savvy patois and Americanisms for the trained help in the deluxe hostelries and restaurants so that they now top you with indigenously American expressions like "on the rocks." It even discourages usage of restaurant French, and that also goes for the valet and femme de chambre. They used to say "whiskey" but now they know the difference between Scotch (still pronounced "Scutch") and bourbon (still pronounced "Boorbohn").

Those Tourist 'Bites'

Tourism is such a big business to most European countries—it's France's No. 1 industry—that they'd be smart to cut out that hits-you-as-you're-leaving "airport tax." It's a chisel and a nuisance. Most of the times the tourist has unloaded his hot francs, sterling, lira or what-not, is content to use U. S. coins to tip for any last-minute luggage-toting for the weigh-ins (that, too, should be gratis, but is now a "bite" on the traveler), and then finds himself tapped for an "airport tax" (from one country to another) that ranges from $2 to $3.50 a head. This is a paradox amidst current European country moves to eliminate the "douane" (duty) nuisance, the red-tape and paper work, and open frontiers for free commercial access.

Plane tourists are conditioned to the fancy viands and vintages, but as the services extend more and more into the east the traveler notices good beer (in cans, a la the American idea) from Switzerland and Germany are now put on east of Paris or Rome.

Another thing: mechanical delays are now accepted by almost all passengers with the same casualness as a flat tire or an overheated motor on the road. On the Rome-to-Madrid hop back, for instance, there was a possible fire signal in the pilot control. The engines were cut, just before the start of the runway takeoff, the plane taxied back to the main shed, there was a re-check, and off again. The air pressure failing in Lisbon was met with the same casual unconcern by almost all, as was the necessity to stop off at the Azores for refueling before the long hop to Idlewild.

Class Eateries

An excellent gastronomique eatery is Le Relais de la Butte, near the Sacre-Couer in Montmartre, where Charles, a chefs' chef (member of the Freres en Gueule, one of those gourmet groups) holds forth. It's especially good.

Lasserre on the Ave. Franklin D. Roosevelt is a class eatery of special quality, with its trademarked and symbolic copper skillets for VIP members, which entitle them to a cuffo bottle of champagne. (Usually the invitation says come over in such un-touristy months like January or February, but the charm and the spirit and, above all, the quality cuisine is there).

Fred Payne's Bar on the rue Pigalle remains a show biz haunt as it has been since the golden 1920s when he came over from London. Payne admits to being "70 and a bit." Like many a Montmartre and, for that matter, tonier environment, hot dogs and hamburgers are standard fare now, along with the cognac and champagne.

Offbeat eateries include a new one on the Left Bank titled Le Cannibal. Motif is mau-mau,

Leaping U.S. Pix Embargo, Bald Yul Brynner Hits Madrid, But with Hair

Madrid, July 2.

"Port of New York," an Eagle Lion 1949 release, opened here last night (July 1), ushered in with a jubilant big space ad campaign informing the Spanish public it could at last see '57 Oscar winner, Yul Brynner, described here as "the actor who revolutionized he-man appeal." Motion Picture Export Assn. embargo of the local market during the past 22 months had, until last night, successfully kept the billiard bald star off Spanish screens.

Victory of local distrib Rosa Films is, however, only partial. Yul Brynner in "Port of New York" has an unstarred, minor role and—disconcertingly—a headful of hair. To ease public identification, the distrib inserted side-by-side photos of the actor in some ads—one with and the other without.

Local distrib also tampered with billing clause in actors' contracts, giving Brynner's name top prominence with "Port" stars Scott Brady and Richard Rober as lower case forgotten men.

Blackstone's Booneing

Paris, July 2.

Milton Blackstone is off on a quick tour of Madrid, Rome and Vienna to hunt talent for Eddie Fisher's tv programs, while Fisher is in London. Blackstone is also looking for talent for the Las Vegas Tropicana, and is setting up contacts in all European cities for future drift of talent.

He will join Fisher in Paris next week, where Fisher will do a television program, both returning then to London.

BERLIN FESTIVAL: NO GLAMOUR

LOTSA ACTIVITY, NOT MUCH 'ART'

By HANS HOEHN

Berlin, June 25.

In the initial five days of the Berlin Film Festival the auspices could boast the participation of 42 countries but the scarcity of visiting stars (only Errol Flynn and Trevor Howard so far) made things a bit lacklustre. But don't misunderstand. Never was there such a dizzy pace of screenings in and out of competition, meetings, receptions, cocktail parties and special luncheon. Even a professional free-loader would complain of so crowded a calendar. It is perhaps symbolic that the festival's own publicity manager, Helmut Ludwig, literally broke down on the third day and had to be rushed to the hospital.

Critics, and not just the blase types, complain that the overall quality of the features thus far unspooled lacks quality. Disney's "Secrets of Life" fared best to this writing in respect of audience reaction. The French "Arsene Lupin" was given the polite brush as "fairly amusing." Norway's "Rendezvous With Forgotten Years" was a letdown. So, too, "The Mexican Revolution." A second film from Mexico," "Tizoc" had its partisans although by others evaluated as dull. Principal actor, Pedro Infante, and film's camerawork, however, found general appreciation.

Italy's "Window to the Lunapark" was a very well made film but nothing unusual. Great Britain's "Spanish Gardener," drew okay reviews.

America is again substantially represented. Lineup includes Metro's "Teahouse of August Moon," "12 Angry Men" (UA), "Wayward Bus" (20th) in addition to Columbia's short, "Mr. Magoo's Puddle Jumper" and Disney's "Secrets of Life" and "Man in

Kingsville, Tex., July 2.

A one-man campaign of crusade proportions for the all-out use of color in all pictures produced for theatrical release is being waged by Juke Trussell, columnist and film reviewer of the local Kingsville Record. According to Trussell, in Kingsville (population, 17,000) prospective patrons will turn away from the boxoffice if they discover a picture is in black and white. Others, he says, will call the theatre in advance to ask if a picture is in color and "hang up in disgust when informed it isn't."

In reviewing pictures, Trussell chides the producers of b&w films. In commenting on Jack Webb's "The D. I.," he listed as one of its weaknesses the fact that it's in b&w.

Writing about Universal's "Joe Butterfly," Trussell noted that the color photography "is one of its better points." He called attention to the fact that producer Aaron Rosenberg's previous picture was "The Great Man" and he (Trussell) had "stirred up some correspond-

Harry Cohn Seeks Refund

Hollywood, July 2.

Harry Cohn has filed suit for refund of $5,508.68 on 1946 income taxes. Federal Court action alleges he paid $243,209.54 when he actually owed only 237,700.86. Saiid overpayment resulted from Treasury's disallowance of expenses, and depreciation on his yacht "Jobella" which he loaned to U. S. during war, and from Internal Revenue increasing his total long term gain from ssale of shares in Columbia.

Sam Briskin who was originally hired to negotiate purchase of 25,129 shares was stock.

Col. Pfd. Pay $1.06¼

Board of directors of Columbia at its regular meeting last week declared a regular quarterly dividend of $1.06¼ on the $4.25 cumulative preferred stock.

Melon is payable Aug. 15 to stockholders of record Aug. 1.

'Heroes Are Tired' New Film About 'Miscegenation'

Success of "Island in the Sun," even in some of the Southern cities, has paved the way for another picture with a miscegenation theme—the French "The Heroes Are Tired."

Picture has been picked up for U. S. release by Janus Films. It stars Curd Juergens and deals with German and French fliers who, escaping from the war, meet up in Africa.

Janus prexy, Cy Harvey, said in Gotham last week that he had been worried about U. S. reaction to the theme in the French film, but that "Island" had established its acceptability.

Republic Folding In Europe Next

Republic Pictures appears to be shutting down all its branch offices outside the United States in still another move reflecting the company's departure from the picture business. Production is to be resumed, according to knowledgeable sources, but limitedly.

Domestic distribution facilities expectedly will be trimmed, for the present national organization will not be required to handle Rep's sharply reduced releasing schedule.

There have been no announcements about the lopping off of offices abroad. But it's known that division managers in several territories have been instructed to cease their operations by varying deadlines.

It's understood distribution of the Rep product in future will be via other companies and local distributors who, as part of the deals, will absorb some of the Rep personnel. This has already been done in Italy and Britain.

Policy of the company is to place greater accent on laboratory and television work, the latter including rental of studio space to tv film producers.

U.S. Venice Fund: $9,500

Motion Picture Export Assn. has voted a 5,600,000 lire (around $9,500) budget to support its promotional and other activities at the Venice film festival.

Amount is less, but not by very much, than what MPEA allocated for the Cannes fest in May. Budget then was under $15,000.

O'Shea Estimate: 'Oklahoma' Will Hit $13,500,000

Release of "Oklahoma" has etched out a new pattern of successful releases for big pictures, Ted O'Shea, sales chief for Magna Theatre Corp., opined in Gotham last week. He estimated that, in both roadshow and regular CinemaScope release, the Rodgers & Hammerstein musical should gross some $13,500,000 in the domestic (U.S. and Canadian) market alone.

"Oklahoma" was the first Todd-AO picture. It's been roadshown in 43 cities and so far has played

BRITONS' TWO TRADE SELVES

By HAROLD MYERS

Berlin, July 2.

This year's Berlin Film Festival has been dullish as to news or significance. Not the least notable fact perhaps is the divided camp, for the first time, of the British industry. In addition to the established British Film. Producers Assn. whose president, Sir Henry L. French was on hand, there was the new rump organization the Federation of British Film-Makers and its general secretary, Andrew Filson.

The Federation issued a special brochure to all newsmen explaining why it had formed. Ivan Foxwell, a founder-member, attended for the screening of his latest production, "Manuela," and broke the news that Paramount had acquired U. S. rights, for a sum reportedly in the region of $280,000.

In conjunction with the fest, but not as part of it, there has been quite a rash of prize giving. Ealing Films received a golden trophy for "The Ladykillers," voted the best comedy of the year by the West German film critics in a poll conducted by "Star Revue" of Hamburg. In the same poll, Fonda got the nod as the best male performer ("War & Peace") and Anna Magnani was named best actress for "Rose Tattoo." In addition Fonda also collected a seal of merit from "Picturegoer, a British film mag, for his performance in "12 Angry Men" and Foxwell was accoladed by the same sheet for his production of "Manuela."

Irwin Allen Doing a Todd With 62 Speaking Stars For 'The Big Circus'

Hollywood, July 2.

Fourth production in the Todd-AO process will be "The Big Circus," which Irwin Allen will produce as a multi-million-dollar Technicolor extravaganza in which a total of 62 stars will appear. Each speaking part, the producer said, will be handled by a star name.

Allen, who recently completed "The Story of Mankind" for Warners, said no release arrangement has been set but "Circus" will be offered to Warners first.

Production starts early in September at Jungleland with the biggest circus ever assembled under canvas.

AUSTRIANS AGREE TO PROTEST IN VIENNA

Berlin, July 2.

A notable victory was scored by the General Assembly of the International Federation of Film Producers, holding its annual meet in closed session here, when it persuaded the Austrian delegation to press for the withdrawal of a discriminatory tax proposed by the Austrian authorities on imported dubbed pix.

Austria recently drafted a law slapping on a special toll on pictures dubbed outside the country, which would have been 12 times as much as the tax normally paid on imports.

Bowing to the unanimous view of the Federation, the Austrian delegation agreed to make strong representations to their government to secure the withdrawal.

Staats Cotsworth signed by 20th-Fox to play the part of Seth, the editor, in the Jerry Wald production of "Peyton Place." Cotsworth expects to go to the Coast around mid-July. He was last seen on Broadway in "Inherit the Wind."

HOMEOFFICES FULLY BACK OWN REPS AGREEMENT ON EUROPEAN TERMS

Recommendations of the Continental managers re the draft agreement on film rental terms were accepted in toto last week by the Motion Picture Export Assn. board in New York. Decision was cabled to Paris and Rome in time for the meeting of the ANICA distributors' section in the Italian capital Monday (1).

The draft agreement, covering the 1957-58 and 1958-59 seasons, has been approved by AGIS, the Italo exhibitors unit. ANICA is the Italian industry organization in which the producers and distribs are represented.

ANICA and AGIS, as well as the U.S. and Italian distributor factions among themselves, have been at odds for some time over the new agreement. The meeting Monday was to establish a common distributor approach towards the new agreement.

Point of contention are the number and type of "special" films that are to be freely negotiable. This has become an issue elsewhere, too, since more and more of the American product is in widescreen systems and therefore has become general rather than special.

The draft agreement provides that each company should have one film per season which would be freely negotiable. However, a committee would be set up to decide what that film should be. Committee would include reps of Italian distribution and exhibition. The Americans think they should be in a position to designate their own specials.

As for actual rental terms, the pact proposes virtually a status quo, i.e. 25% of any company's product can be sold at a top 50% and the rest at top 40%.

The Italian exhibitors have called for a special conference to discuss publicity costs and holdover provisions. The Continental managers, while not opposing such a confab, nevertheless are on record as favoring the present system, which they call fair and workable.

'12 Angry Men' Best Film; British and Mexican Win Berlin's Personal Awards

Berlin, July 2.

United Artists' "12 Angry Men" won the top prize at the Berlin film festival today. The other American entries included Metro's "Teahouse of the August Moon" and 20th-Fox's "The Wayward Bus."

Britain's Yvonne Mitchell won the prize as best actress for "Woman in a Dressing Gown" and Mexico's Pedro Infante was named best actor for his performance in "Tizoc." Mario Monicelli rated the best director prize for the Italian "Fathers and Sons."

Walt Disney's "Secrets of Life" copped top honors in the documentary class. "Twelve Angry Men" also won the International Catholic Film prize.

Biz Perking Pre-Holiday; '80 Days' No. 1, 'Sun' 2d, 'Prince' 3d, 'Wonders' 4th, 'Commandments' 5th

For many key cities covered by VARIETY this session, this is regarded as a pre-holiday week since numerous theatres have stanzas which do not carry over into July 4 or the long holiday week-end. Despite this and a tendency to look forward to new, strong product in the coming round, trade is holding up well currently.

"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) is back in first place by a narrow margin as visitors in many keys helped to swell totals for this pic. "Island In Sun" (20th), No. 1 pic for two weeks running, is finishing second, only a step behind "80 Days."

"Prince and Showgirl" (WB), although playing in only five keys currently, is showing such strength it will cop third position. And the Olivier-Monroe starrer undoubtedly will be heard from additionally in the future. "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) is winding up fourth.

"Ten Commandments" (Par) is taking fifth spot while "Something of Value" (M-G) will wind up sixth.

"Bernardine" (20th) is copping seventh place, this first week out in release to any extent. Pic scored heavily on batch of dates in New England, not included in listings. "D.I." (WB), fifth a week ago, is landing eight position. "Johnny Tremain" (BV) rounds out the Top Nine.

"20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col), "St. Joan" (UA) and "Lonely Man" (Par) are the runner-up pix.

Batch of strong pix looms for forthcoming stanzas, judging from showings made in current round. Standout blockbuster is "Pride and Passion" which is terrific on preem sessions at N.Y. Capitol and in Chicago. Stanley Kramer opus also is rated wow in L.A. Another big one, "Sweet Smell of Success" (UA), looms smash in N.Y., socko in 'Frisco and fine in Denver.

"Beau James" (Par) shapes wow on initial round at N.Y. Astor. "Happy Road" (M-G), also new, looks big in N.Y. and Toronto. "Monster That Challenged World" (UA) is mild in L,A,

"Public Pigeon No. 1" (U) is rated hotsy in Omaha. "Great American Pastime" (M-G) is okay in Chi. "Little Hut," from same company, shapes trim in Chi and okay in Philly.

"Gunfight at O.K. Corral" (Par), long high on list, looks good in Chi, okay in Philly and big in L.A. "Face in Crowd" (WB), sock in Toronto, is fine in N.Y.

"Rock All Night" (Indie) looms swell in Detroit. "Monkey on Back" is modest in Louisville.

Todd Facing 300 Editors

Minneapolis, July 2.

Mike Todd will be in Minneapolis to greet 300 Minnesota editors, members of the state's Editorial association, who'll be attending the opening of his "Around the World in 80 Days" at the Academy July 12.

It may be the biggest mass interview of Todd's colorful career. But whether he'll interview the press, or vice versa, remains to be seen.

Todd was born in a Minneapolis suburb.

TRADE FURTHER NOTES 'TOUGHENING' OF HEARST'S MANHATTAN REVIEWERS

Hearst papers in New York—the Mirror and the Journal-American—are taking a deliberately tougher stance in their film reviews. It's believed that the reviewers have been told to call 'em as they see 'em.

Gloves-off policy, which has been apparent for some time in the reviews of the Mirror's Justin Gilbert, now has begun to express itself also via the Journal's Rose Pelswick, wno for years has been doing little more than synopsizing pix.

In fact, the Hearst review slant in the past has been to do little more than give a thumbnail sketch of the film content and let the reader decide from it whether or not he wants to see the picture. Trade woke up to the new approach in months past, when Gilbert began writing meaty reviews in an intelligent and forthright style. A recent VARIETY survey pegged him as one of the toughest scribes in town.

Fact that the Hearst reviewers now appear on their own was underscored again last week via the Journal's evaluation of "Sweet Smell of Success," which was headed: "Off-Beat Film A Total Loss For Lancaster." Miss Pelswick's review called the picture "tasteless" and wondered out aloud why it was made. It said the characters "resemble nothing so much as a set of unsavory caricatures." This kind of plain talk is practically unheard of in the Journal and may well set a new note.

Gilbert in the Mirror was less harsh (in itself quite a switch) than the Journal, but he too didn't like the film. One possible explanation offered is that both reviewers saw in the picture's columnist character a takeoff on Walter Winchell and therefore took an unusually defensive attitude.

Hearst press, and some of the other papers too, in the past have, to an extent, been sympathetic to squawks from film company advertisers. Whether the new attitude reflects an unhappiness on the part of the papers with the volume of film advertising isn't known. It is a fact that, recently, a film company asked one of the Hearst papers to shift an unfavorable review to another page since it directly fronted a fullpage ad for the picture. Request was turned down.

Johnston Picking Single U.S. Film At Karlovy-Vary

The American Film Companies will send out picture to the Czech Karlovy-Vary film festival. Picture will be selected by Motion Picture Export Assn. prexy Eric Johnston from a number of entries submitted by the companies.

The original deadline for submitting films for Karlovy-Vary was May 10.

The normal selection procedure, currently being followed by MPEA to pick the Venice entries, is being abandoned for the Czech event. Instead, the companies voted to leave the choice of the single-film representation up to the MPEA, i.e., Eric Johnston.

It's understood that RKO's "The Brave One" was picked for the fest at one point, but was later dropped. There's now a possibility that another RKO picture—"The Young Stranger"—may go in, but it's not definite by any means. Also, "Young Stranger" is the RKO nomination for Venice.

There's been some hesitation to go into the Karlovy-Vary fest, partly because the Czechs now seem in no mood to buy American films as once they had indicated they might. However, the U. S. State Department very definitely favors American participation and has made its feelings known to the companies.

Cy Harvey's Janus Films has established N. Y. offices. Ava Leighton, formerly of Times Film, will be in charge. Janus distributes imports.

Are Ya With Us?

More than 1,000 teenagers turned up last week for the rock 'n' roll block party staged outside the Gold Medal Studios in the east Bronx where the feature film, "Mr. Rock 'n' Roll," is being filmed.

Rocky Graziano, making his screen and signing debut in the film, came out and said he would like to make a short speech about juvenile delinquency. From the rear of the crowd, a voice spoke up. "Hey, Rocky! For or against?"

Legion 'A' Rates Over 'B' 3-to-1

"A" ratings outnumbered the "B"s three-to-one for the first time in a long time in the Catholic National Legion of Decency ratings for the week of July 4. There were six films in the "A" classification and two in "B" (Morally Objectionable in Part for All).

The two "B" tags were hung on "Love in the Afternoon" (it "tends to ridicule the virtue of purity by reason of an undue emphasis on illicit love") and "Sweet Smell of Success," which was found to have low moral tone and suggestive situations.

Drive-In Refused, Ask Okay for Dickinson Motel

Kansas City, July 2.

Dickinson theatre circuit owners are seeking a permit to build a motel on property owned by Glen W. Dickinson Sr., in Johnson County, Kansas, on the southwestern edge of the Kansas City methopolitan area. Last week the circuit asked the Mission Township Zoning Board for a permit to build a motel of 18 units to cost $800,000

Previously Dickinson had sought a permit to build a drive-in theatre on the property but was refused. Dickinsin already operates two drive-in and two conventional theatres in a four-way first-run hook-up in the metropolitan area, as well as a first run art-house, and theatres throughout this section of the midwest.

Los Angeles Stage Farce 'Pajama Tops' Due For Film Via Stan Seiden

Los Angles, July 2.

"Pajama Tops," farce by Mawby Green and Ed Fellbert, which has been running in local legit houses for the past 36 weeks, will be filmed this Fall under a deal being finalized by Stan Seiden. He's aiming for a Christmas release.

Seiden was a member of the producing group which originally opened the show at the Forum Theatre last year. It ran eight months, returning a profit of three and one-half to one to its backers and then shuttered. Seiden took it over, joining forces with Theodore Ticktin, owner of the Civic Playhouse, and moved it to the latter house where it is now in its fifth week.

Jerry Lewis As Own Producer Ballyhoo-Crazy

Jerry Lewis has taken on a backbreaking promotional schedule to bally his first Dean Martin-less picture, "The Delicate Delinquent." Made under the banner of York Productions, Lewis' own company, and with the comedian listed as producer, Lewis, has a hefty stake in the picture being released by Paramount. Hence his effort to make sure that the public knows about the picture.

From July 2 to July 20, Lewis will visit 17 cities to plug the film personally. He'll not only be available for the usual round of press interviews, department store appearances, radio-tv outings, but

Taplinger Will Test Hunch on Ad Placement "After" the Opening

Film companies are scattering their shots and undermining the effectiveness of their campaigns by concentrating newspaper ad campaigns prior to the opening of pictures and letting films "coast" once they're launched.

That's the opinion of Robert S. Taplinger, the Warner Bros. public relations v.p., who said in Gotham this week that he intended to test his theory with the upcoming "Band of Angels."

When the picture opens at the Paramount July 10, it'll be announced in the papers in advance. There'll be an ad barrage just prior to the opening, and it'll be continued during the run of the film to help sustain it. "After all, said Taplinger, "what's the use of advertising something people can't go and see. I think we should leave the interest-rousing part of it to the national magazines. The newspaper campaign should sell the product that is on the screen."

He stressed that he didn't have in mind cutting down on the newspaper ad budget, but rather favored shifting the weight of the campaign, and the timing of it, to make it more applicable to the merchandising of a film to the public. "When people want to go to the movies, and consult their papers, that's when an ad is going to count," he held.

Asked what would happen if a picture received bad notices, Taplinger opined that a heavier ad concentration after release could well help to offset the impact of negative critical reaction.

New York Sound Track

Charles Allen, the Wall Street broker, believed continuing purchases of Metro stock. His total holdings are now probably 70,000 shares. Allen is also a heavy investor in Warner Bros., owning some 50,000 shares in that company. He was originally associated with Boston's Serge Semenenko in the buyout of the three Warner brothers . . . Gina Lollobrigida will star in "Solomon and Sheba," which her own indie company will produce with Arthur Hornblow Jr. and Edward Small for United Artists release . . . Wall Street firm of Oppenheimer & Co. foresees Columbia's profits restored to the 1954-55 level at the end of its June 30, 1958 fiscal period. In the 1954-55 stanza, Col reported earnings of better than $4 per share. Brokerage company's optimism is based on the potential of Col's upcoming releases, strong take expected from international market, and activities of Screen Gems, Col's telepix subsid.

Brigitte Bardot, sexsational French star, to burst upon Americans in three films: "God Created Woman," Mademoiselle Striptease" and "House Across the Street" . . . William K. Zinsser, film critic of the N.Y. Herald Tribune, Sunday (30) wrote a feature piece plugging movie-going and airconditioned theatres (regular and drive-ins). Echo of Ogden Reid Jr. on the Metro board? Maybe more publishers should join film company boards.

Negotiations for a new French film agreement were temporarily suspended in Paris when Jacques Flaud of the Centre National came down with a sore throat . . . Henry Newman has set up a new firm to distribute indie U.S. films in Germany and Austria . . . Clark Gable has dropped plans for coming to Gotham for the "Band of Angels" preem . . . Annemarie Duringer, signed by 20th-Fox, has withdrawn from the "Fraeulein" lead and is now in Europe to make a German film . . . The N.Y. censor passed "Liane of the Jungle" despite a nude scene . . . Otto Preminger to Europe for "Bonjour Tristesse."

Herbert Kline and Cyril Means Jr., who plan to do a film biography of Clarence Darrow, have purchased the screen rights to a new novel about the famous lawyer—"Clarence Darrow—Defender of the Lost," which will be published by Julian Messner in the fall. Author Ernest Shenkin will also write the screenplay. Film rights were acquired for $75,000 plus a participation in the film's profits . . . Metro homeoffice and studio pub-ad execs wound up three days of discussion on the world premiere plans for "Raintree County," set for late September in Louisville . . . Lee Bergman, Columbia homeoffice exploiteer, has sold his first novel to Thomas Y. Crowell for publication next year. Titled "None So Blind," it has a race relations theme against a southern background. Bergman has retained the film rights.

Otto Preminger, producer of "Saint Joan," answered a question by Al Collins, via "Tonight" over NBC-TV, Thursday (27), about "unfavorable" New York reviews, with the comment, "This picture is one on which you expect good reviews and not too much business. So far, it has been the other way around. Maybe this is better."

And after reading the reviews of "St. Joan," Toronto Globe & Mail's legit critic Herbert Whittaker remarked last week, "The whole venture was a piece of sheer effrontery on Preminger's part, to suggest that he could hypnotize an untrained child into encompassing one of the longest and most difficult roles in the modern theatre. The reviewers are generally agreed that the only moment in which little Jean Seberg succeeds is at the end when she is being burned at the stake. And the whole world knows how Preminger managed to get the right reaction then—by using real flames. Where he made his big mistake, presumably, was in not showing her real saints."

Lester Dinoff has left the Motion Picture Daily to become special writer and tradepress contact for Rank Film Distributors of America . . . Mike Todd and menage returning from Europe next month, which is earlier than planned . . . Warner Bros. mulling a roadshow policy for "Sayonara." Picture now runs 3½ hours.

Floods and tornadoes are causing misery for theatres in various parts of Minnesota exchange area. Bad storms lately have been an almost daily occurrence. The spring and summer weather has been the worst in history. Plenty of torrential rain. In Marshal, Minn., for example, water higher than the auditorium seats did heavy damage.

Theo Richmond, publicity topper for Britain's Charter Films, the Boulting Brothers producing company, is in N.Y. to confer with Continental Films on release plans for the Boultings' "Brothers In Law." He's headquartering with Alfred Katz, personal representative for the Boultings in the U.S. . . . Ray Milland is in London to star in and direct "The Tale of Willie Gordon" for Metro . . . New American Library issuing a special film edition of Claude Anet's "Ariane," on which Allied Artists' "Love in the Afternoon" is based . . . Dimitri Tiomkin interrupting his scoring chores on Cinerama's "Search for Paradise" to fly to the Coast to confer with Hal Wallis and George Cukor on next assignment, "Woman Obsessed" . . . "Man of a Thousand Faces," Universal's film biography of Lon Chaney, gets invitational press and exhibitor preview at the RKO 86th St. Theatre Tuesday (9) . . . Loew's prexy Joseph R. Vogel to the Coast (again) for studio conferences . . . V.p. and general counsel Ben Melniker and secretary Irving Greenfield will meet Vogel on the Coast next week for the company's board meeting to be held at the studio July 11-12.

French Film Office reports Jules Dassin ("Rififi") plans a screen version of Dostoievski's "The Brothers Karamazov" as his next production. Metro plans to do the same story with Maria Schell in the lead. Maybe Dassin can get Marilyn Monroe, who "acquainted" Hollywood with the classic in the first place . . . All the film companies are closing for the four-day July 4 period. Even Paramount capitulated . . . Robert Anderson to the Coast to write the screenplay for "The Nun's Story," based on the Kathryn Hulme book. Audrey Hepburn will star, Fred Zinnemann direct.

Aurora Productions Inc. has been authorized to conduct a motion picture production business in New York, with capital stock of 200 shares, no par value. Jacob W. Abraham and Sidney Koenig, are directors and filing attorneys.

Time mag's July 26 cover story is on Kim Novak.

Richard Edelstein, Paramount topper in Spain, has been re-assigned to Paris as assistant to Continental manager, John Nathan. Edelstein was active in the Motion Picture Export Assn. distrib conflict with Spain as head of the MPEA group of agency directors set up to defend U.S. interests. New chief of the MPEA's is Enrique Aguilar, Spain manager for Universal.

Boris Kaplan, former Broadway producer and eastern talent exec for Paramount, signed as a term producer at Columbia and will launch "Shadow in the Wild" as his first assignment . . . Metro assigned "The Trail West" to Aaron Rosenberg as one of the big outdoor films of the year . . . Jesse Hibbs will direct "The Way Back" at Universal . . . Producer Joseph Kaufman set Lewis Allen to direct and Glynis Johns to co-star with Lana Turner in "Another Time-Another Place" which will be filmed in England this Fall . . . Joseph Pasternak and Sam Katz have rights to the French novel "Three Blondes" by Pierre Dassete for lensing under their Euterpe Production banner at Columbia . . . Dana Lyon's suspense yarn, "The Tentacles," purchased by MGM and assigned to Milo Frank for production . . . Clarement Productions' "Yuan" will start July 29 in Hong Kong.

After the depressed mood engendered in U.S. film showmen by May's miseries the joys of June have encouraged a resumption of interest in going on. May may have been a little worse than May often is. June was certainly helped by three or four blockbusters plus a generally improved quality of new product. Universal Earnings From Carefully-Budgeted Films Hailed in Bache Paper

The shares of Universal "appear to be one of the overlooked equities in the motion picture industry," according to a staff memorandum issued by a Wall Street brokerage house. The report, made by Bache & Co., points out that in recent years U has earned more money from film production than most of the larger companies in the industry. It notes, too, that U has not as yet consummated a deal for the sale or lease of its backlog films to television.

According to Bache, the value of these films on a per share basis is equal to a major portion of the market price of the shares. This factor, the Wall St. firm stresses, coupled with U's high asset value and its excellent past operating record, "reduces the speculative risks inherent in the shares of motion picture companies." As a result, Bache terms U's shares as "speculatively attractive for capital appreciation."

No analysis of U can be complete without including Decca Records, according to Bache. Decca, it points out, controls over 80% of U's stock and this factor "implies that an eventual merger of the two companies is probable."

Bache favors U's policy of making medium budget pictures with wide appeal. It feels that perhaps this policy is the reason for U's success. "High budget films may fail whereas a low budget film may meet with very favorable public acceptance," says the Wall St. firm. "Thus, when a film produced at moderate cost attracts a large audience, substantial profit accrues to the producing company.

Ustinov Ducks 'Egyptian'

Ottawa, July 2.

Peter Ustinov says he never saw 20th-Fox's "The Egyptian," one of three Hollywood films he appeared in, "because I disliked making the picture so much."

Bearded English actor is visiting here with his Ottawa-born wife, ex-actress Suzanne Cloutier, and their two children, one born in Hollywood. Her father is Queen's Printer Edmond Cloutier.

Ustinov opens in the lead of his West End success "Romanoff and Juliet," which he authored, in Boston about Sept. 9. George S. Kaufman directs. He expects to hit Broadway in mid-October.

We Always Make Film Copy 'Must' Says Look Mag

Look magazine last week cited "evidence" that films are still America's top entertainment. Testimonial came in a letter from J. C. Herrick, Look executive, reprinted in one of the series of COMPO ads in Editor & Publisher.

Herrick wrote that, in 20 years of publishing, Look had never had an issue without a "movie" or motion picture personality story. "More editorial space in Look has been devoted to amusements (15% to 20%) than to any other category," the Herrick letter ran. "With this policy, Look has grown to be one of the largest general magazines.

"This I believe is evidence that the American public still regards the motion picture as an essential form of entertainment. We are happy to note that more and more newspapers are showing that they, too, recognize the movies' readership value. They are increasing the space they give motion pictures and are improving the appearance of their entertainment sections."

Latter observations is somewhat at variance with the frequent and loud complaints of the film companies to the effect that the papers if anything are cutting down on "free" space devoted to films, often in favor of tv copy.

Look, along with the other top general circulation mags, is heavily in competition for the Hollywood ad dollar.

Butler's Drive-In Post

Austin, July 2.

Clyde Butler has been appointed executive secretary of the Texas Drive-In Theatre Assn. by Eddie Joseph, prez of the group.

Buttler's a local ad-press rep. He has spent years in radio and video in Houston and New Orleans.

MPEA FIGHTS TOO LOW ADMISSIONS

Increase in admission prices and possibly complete liberation of admish scales are expected in Argentina following the elections on July 28.

Disclosure came last week as the Motion Picture Export Assn. took issue with Bernard Gates, Allied Artists' Latin American topper, over his charge (VARIETY, June 19) that the U.S. distributors in latin republics were refusing to do anything about the Government-dictated low admission prices for low-wages economies.

The N.Y. foreign managers expressed surprise at Gates' assertion in the light of known MPEA attempts to get local governments to raise admission scales as much as possible.

Due to strong and continuous pressure from the companies, the local film boards and MPEA's Robert Corkery, who's in charge of Latin America, admission prices have gone up in at least five countries. The companies have held off for the moment in Mexico when they were assured by the powerful local exhibitor group that the government couldn't be budged on the issue uned present political circumstances.

Brazil Situation

In Brazil, where prices were raised as much as 80% for various 'scope pictures, the American companies have actually gone to court to challenge the government's right to fix prices. In other countries, too, there is continuous behind-the-scene activity and pressure to get prices upped.

It's conceded, however, that Latin American governments tend to keep prices artificially low so as not to add further discontent among the working people who have very limited cash incomes. It's conceded also that in one or two instances, after prices were raised, they had to be reduced again as the result of a popular outcry.

In dollar area (Venezuela) and the Caribbean boxoffice scales already are quite high, and it's the prevailing opinion in New York that it would be a mistake to push them up still further and thereby out of reach of the average person.

In Chile, a price liberation decree was signed on June 17. Admissions there were upped three times during the past 18 months, mostly due to the efforts of the MPEA working with the local film board. In Argentina, admission scales were upped last year, but then again reduced, though not to the original level. In Peru, there was a 100% increase a year ago. Here, again, public outcry forced a cutback of 50%. According to Corkery, it'd be foolish for the moment to press for more since the market couldn't stand it.

In Colombia, the American industry was in part responsible for the recent shift of admission controls from the central government to the local mayors.

Squeeze-Unsqueeze Speed Essential, Technical Problems in Lab Delay Movietone Newsreel Going C'Scope

Switch of the 20th-Fox Movietone newsreel to CinemaScope may be delayed pending expansion of the company's optical department in New York where footage can be squeezed and unsqueezed rapidly.

Certain problems have arisen since the original decision to put out a C'Scope black-and-white reel. One of them is the commitment 20th has via its United Press television tieup. Also, certain foreign accounts must be served in regular 2-D.

The only immediate way of getting around all this would be to have the reel shot in double version, i.e. in CinemaScope and standrad. This, however, is considered much too expensive.

Also, Movietone uses footage from freelancers all over the world, and they send in their material in 2-D. Such film has to be "squeezed" for a CinemaScope reel.

According to 20th technicians, the unsqueezing of CinemaScope is no problem, though it takes time. Procedure is to virtually "scan" the CinemaScope negative frame-by-frame, concentrating on the action in the picture and eliminating the sides. Squeezing a normal picture into C'Scope proportions doesn't represent much of a difficulty.

Same unsqueezing procedure would have to be followed by 20th should the company decide to go along with any of the projected home pay-tv systems. CinemaScope as such can't be shown on the air. For promotion purposes, 20th has unsqueezed chunks of footage that were to be shown on various tv shows.

Fireworks at Drive-In

Prudential Theatres will mark Independence Day eve tonight (Wed.) at its three Long Island drive-ins with a "gigantic" fireworks display. These will be held at the All-Weather Drive-In at Copiague as well as at the Commack and Massapequa ozoners.

Fireworks will precede the regular showing of the sites' usual twin-bill film programs. Prudential points out there'll be no increase in the admish scale for the aerial bombs, roman candles, etc.

Warners Endorse Freelance Sources For Socko Films

Warner Brothers not only welcomes but "aggressively seeks" independent producers with ideas and talent, Benjamin Kalmenson, WB exec v. p., told the company's sales convention in New York last week.

Kalmenson, stressing continuance of the Warner open-door policy, said the company would "continue to present fine pictures made by independent companies utilizing our production and distribution facilities."

In a message to the meeting, prexy Jack L. Warner saw a bright future for the company. "There will be no letup in our drive to maintain and further establish the position of entertainment leadership Warner Bros. has enjoyed since the company's founding," Warner said. "With many of the current bestselling novels and top Broadway hits on our completed or in-preparation schedule, we are constantly adding to our pre-eminent story properties. We also are negotiating important deals which will continue to bring to Warner Bros. the finest, most imaginative creative talent."

Earlier, Roy Haines, WB general sales manager, told his crew that they could expect "the most important and diversified product ever released by your company during the next six months." He stressed that the product covered a wide variety of topics, appealing to all ages.

In his talk, Kalmenson stated that "The day of mediocrity in motion picture entertainment is long past. Our studios are interested in the purchasing of pre-sold properties and by pre-sold I mean best-

Fail to Restore Censors; Pennsylvania Free Of Bluenoses for 2 Years

Film censorship is a dead issue in Pennsylvania for at least another two years. State Legislature adjourned late last week before a bill designed to reestablish censorship could reach the floor of the House and it therefore expired.

Agitation for renewal of a blue-pencil stature had been strong and indeed it was feared that the censors would be legislated back into action. Similar situation obtained in Ohio where a bill reestablishing a film censorship authority was allowed to die.

Pennsylvania Legislature will not reconvene until 1959.

PRESSAGENTS DECLINE SELF-PUNISHMENT

Members of the N. Y. Screen Publicists Guild at a meeting last week overwhelmingly defeated a proposal for an increase in fines and subsequent expulsion from the union for non-attendance at unit meetings.

Plagued by absences during the long period between contract negotiations, a group within the Guild sought to raise the current fine of $1 for each meeting missed to $5 for the first absence, $10 for the second, and expulsion from the union for the third. Voting on the proposal brought out the largest turnout of SPGites in months.

The SPG represents pub-ad staffers at Warner Bros., Columbia, Universal, United Artists, 20th-Fox and Metro.

Promote Paul Kamey

Paul Kamey, Universal publicist, has been hoisted by eastern pub-ad chief Charles Simonelli to the newly-created post of assistant eastern publicity manager. He'll aide Philip Gerard, the company's eastern publicity manager.

Kamey has been with U for eight years. Prior to that he was in the publicity departments of Metro and 20th-Fox.

LUKEWARM N.Y. SLANT ON ITALIANS' NEW BID TO BORROW UNREMITTABLE $$

The Motion Picture Export Assn. is currently investigating the planned uses of monies tied up in the socalled 40% account in Italy. Move followed the Italian request for a $4,000,000 loan out of that account to Italian production which is squeezed for adequate financing.

The 40% account takes in coin which the Americans are supposed to be using for production in Italy. According to the Italians, who complain there isn't enough U.S. activity production-wise in Italy, there are now some $8,000,000 in the account. They want 50% of it as a loan.

MPEA survey so far has shown that some of the companies don't have any money in that particular account. (They are allowed to use or remit the remaining 60% in one way or another). Other companies have large amounts tied up, though it's said that the $8,000,000 figure of the Italians is exaggerated.

The companies that do have coin blocked say that these sums are either allocated for specific production projects planned for the future or else held in reserve for stories which the studios have on the planning boards and may do in Italy. In any case, it's contended, it isn't true that, just because there may have been a temporary lull in U.S. filming in Italy, the money is just lying there useless.

While the basic sentiment among the companies is still against another loan to the Italians, it is also true that the matter has not been put formally to the MPEA board, and—according to one good source—it may never be presented as a formal resolution on which a vote would be required.

The loan idea was first advanced to MPEA prexy Eric Johnston by Eitel Monaco of Italy's ANICA in Rome in April. Feeling now seems to be that, if the American companies can prove that they have specific plans for utilization of the money, there then would be no very good reason for the Italians to tap the fund.

Loving You
(V'VISION-COLOR-SONGS)

Elvis Presley returns in a picture tailor-made to his talents. It's a rock 'n' roller with a good story-line that shapes as a juve trade natural.

Paramount release of Hal B. Wallis production. Stars Elvis Presley, Lizabeth Scott, Wendell Corey; features Dolores Hart, James Gleason, Ralph Dumke, Paul Smith, Ken Becker; Jana Lund. Directed by Hal Kanter; script, Herbert Baker and Kanter, from a story by Mary Agnes Thompson; camera (Technicolor), Charles Lang; numbers staged by Charles O'Curran; music arranged and conducted by Walter Scharf; vocal accompaniment, The Jordanaires; editor, Howard Smith. Previewed at the Capitol Theatre, N. Y., June 20, '57. Running time, 101 MINS.

Deke Rivers	Elvis Presley
Glenda	Lizabeth Scott
Tex Warner	Wendell Corey
Susan Jessup	Dolores Hart
Carl	James Gleason
Tallman	Ralph Dumke
Skeeter	Paul Smith
Wayne	Ken Becker
Daisy	Jana Lund

Though the rock 'n' roll craze perhaps passed its peak, there's little question that a sizeable part of the citizenry will welcome Elvis Presley back for his second screen appearance. An easy guess that customers will be young in years appearance. An easy guess is that have to be if they're to match the rock 'n' roller's own lungpower in the picture itself.

Producer Hal B. Wallis has chosen wisely in picking "Loving You" as a vehicle for Presley. It's a simple story, in which he can be believed, which has romantic overtones and exposes the singer to the kind of thing he does best, i.e. shout out his rythms, bang away at his guitar and perform the strange, knee-bending, hip-swinging contortions that are his trademark and that, for unfathomable reasons, induce squealing noises from his young fans.

Apart from this, Presley shows improvement as an actor. It's not a demanding part and, being surrounded by a capable crew of performers, he comes across as a simple but pleasant sort. Herbert Baker and Hal Kanter have fashioned an okay script spiked with folksy humor interwoven with some sentimental strains. The corny aspects probably don't matter. As a matter of fact, they'll probably help.

Wallis has given the film a plush mounting, in VistaVision and Technicolor, which adds to the values. Working with Presley are Lizabeth Scott and Wendell Corey, both delineating definite characters and doing well in the laughs department. Film introes a newcomer, Dolores Hart, in an undemanding role as Presley's girl. Even so, the young actress conveys a very pleasing personality and handles her chores with charm. She ought to be seen again.

Story has Presley picked up by Miss Scott, a publicity girl touring with a hillbilly band on a whistle-stop tour. She gets Corey, the leader of the outfit, to take on Presley, and they stunt him into a rock 'n' roll personality. Of course, there are complications and Presley takes himself off just as he's supposed to go on a national video show. Miss Scott brings him back for the happy finish that sees Presley and Miss Hart and Corey and Miss Scott united.

Director Kanter exploits the various facets that have contributed to Presley's success. He sings a lot of songs, some of 'em western ballads and the rest of the rock 'n' roll, boggie-woogie variety. Among the numbers heard are "Hot Dog," "Lonesome Cowboy," "Got a Lot of Livin' To do," "Let's Have a Party," "Detour," "Dancing on the Dare" and the theme song—"Loving You." It's all highly exploitable stuff. Film shapes as a bangup attraction for the hinterlands and should be a crowd-pleaser in the keys where Presley is still a draw with the youngsters.

Miss Scott as the ambitious publicity gal can't be taken seriously, but she does okay. Corey displays a comic talent and is very good as Tex Warner. James Gleason contributes the pro touch, as do Ralph Dumke, Paul Smith and Jana Lund. Latter scores in the role of a smitten teenager. Kanter's direction consciously pitches the proceedings to the teenage mentality. There'll always be those who'll find the whole Presley phenomenon either laughable or even disgusting, yet these probably won't be those who'll go to see the film anyhow. It's surely not a critics' picture, but, from the looks of it, it's boxoffice. And who's to quarrel with that in 1957?

Charles Lang's photography is pleasing in Technicolor. Howard Smith's editing is competent. Charles O'Curran staged the various numbers with imagination and the Jordanaires offer good backing for Presley. Col. Tom Parker, Presley's manager, gets credit as Technical Advisor, and take that literally and seriously. He's an expert property developer. Hift.

God Is My Partner
(REGALSCOPE)

Contrived plot with "faith" angles. Pretty slow. Only Walter Brennan name possibly to attract. Small returns indicated.

Hollywood, June 28.

Twentieth-Fox release of a Sam Hersh production. Stars Walter Brennan; costars Marion Ross, Jesse White; features Nelson Leigh, Charles Lane, Ellen Corby, Paul Cavanagh. Directed by William F. Claxton. Screenplay, Charles Francis Royal; camera, Walter Strenge; editor, Robert Fritch; music, Paul Dunlap. Previewed June 26, '57. Running time, 79 MINS.

Dr. Charles Grayson	Walter Brennan
Gordon Palmer	John Hoyt
Francis Denning	Marion Ross
Louis	Jesse White
Rev. Goodwin	Nelson Leigh
Judge Warner	Charles Lane
Mrs. Dalton	Ellen Corby
Dr. Brady	Paul Cavanagh
Maxine Spelvana	Nancy Kulp
Ben Renson	John Harmon

"God Is My Partner," produced by religioso filmmaker Sam Hersh, is more apt for the church market than theatrical release. Film is short on the punch necessary for the commercial screen and goes somewhat overboard in final sequences on the faith theme for regular audiences. Against that generality, church or evangelical patronage may be pleased.

The Charles Francis Royal screenplay is premised on a successful, elderly surgeon being brought to trial on a charge by two nephews that he is incompetent to handle money after certain so-called eccentric activities. The basic plot never quite holds water, since the "proof" offered isn't enough for any audience to credit, even though the jury seems so inclined. Narrative unfolds via a series of flashbacks from courtroom action, where Walter Brennan is being defended by Marion Ross, as the prosecuting attorney first presents his case, then the defense by tearing down the "half-truths" offered by the prosecution's witnesses. Pic takes its title from Brennan, testifying why he donated $50,000 to his church, explaining that without the Diety he could never have become the great surgeon that he had become.

William F. Claxton's over-leisurely direction keeps film at a sometimes tedious tempo and script doesn't allow much realism in portrayals. Brennan fares best, managing to make his work count.

Technical credits are competently handled, Walter Strenge, camera; Ernst Fegte, art direction; Robert Fritch, editing; Paul Dunlap, music. Whit.

X the Unknown

Poor and complicated science-fictioner not for discriminating audiences.

Hollywood, June 21.

Warner Bros. release of an Anthony Hinds production. Stars Dean Jagger, Edward Chapman, Leo McKern; features William Lucas, Peter Hammond, Michael Ripper, Anthony Newley. Directed by Leslie Norman. Story-screenplay, Jimmy Sangster; camera Gerald Gibbs; editor, James Needs; music, James Bernard. Previewed June 19, '57. Running time, 79 MINS.

This picture carries a complicated structure difficult to follow. The "unknown" that serves as the menace in science-fiction yarn is so vague that audiences may be overmystified, with result film will have hard going even in least discriminating situations. Dean Jagger is only name. Anthony Hinds production deals with a compressed force from the center of the earth which escapes via fissure on earth's crust to feed on energy found above, but subject is so nebulous as scientists admit they are meeting with an unknown phenomenon.

Jagger plays an atomic scientist in Scotland, called upon to solve the mystery of persons suffering from severe radiation burns after it's figured some unkno element has escaped through fissure. His scenes are very t , a general fault in script of Jimmy Sangster with Jagger are Edward Chapman, as director of atomic research lab, who doesn't hold to any of Jagger's theories, and Leo McKern, investigator for the British Atomic Energy Commission. Roles are strictly static and Leslie Norman's direction isn't able to rise above what was handed him. Whit.

Beginning of the End

Disappointing first effort by AB-PT Pictures Corp. Low-budget, exploitation entry. Grasshoppers run mad; so does mediocrity.

Republic release of AB-PT Pictures Corp. production. Stars Peggy Castle, Peter Graves and Morris Ankrum. Produced and directed by Bert I. Gordon. Screenplay, Fred Freiberger and Lester Corn. Previewed in N. Y. June 28, '57. Running time, 73 MINS.

Audrey	Peggy Castle
Ed	Peter Graves
General Hanson	Morris Ankrum
Corporal Mathias	Richard Benedict
Captain Barton	James Seay
Colonel Sturgeon	Thomas B. Henry
Frank	Than Wyenn
Major Everett	John Close
1st Patrolman	Don C. Harvey
2nd Patrolman	Larry J. Blake
No. 1 Soldier	Steve Warren
No. 2 Soldier	Frank Cornell
No. 3 Soldier	Don Eitner
No. 4 Soldier	Frank Chase
Taggert	Pierre Watkin
General Short	Frank Wilcox

As the first release of the brand-new AB-PT Pictures Corp. (a subsidiary of the American Broadcasting-Paramount Theatres family) this release rates as a disapointment. It's not just old hat, but old scream, an echo of all the horror "monsters" sired by King Kong. Laden with mumbo-jumbo about atomic energy and radiation, this picture, on which Bert I. Gordon takes the credit-blame as producer and director is a sorry offering for openers.

Even taken on its own terms—as a low-budget exploitation picture—"Beginning of the End" hardly reflects the best showmanship of a major theatre circuit. Based on its low cost, its protected haven in the AB-PT houses, and its susceptibility to exploitation, the film can conceivably wind up a modest money-maker. Too, the backing the picture will receive from AB-PT may work to the advantage of other exhibitors. But it's still a letdown of expectations.

Summarizing the plot of "Beginning of the End" is like rehashing the story of several dozen similar films. Mysterious deaths suddenly occur in an area where there is a government scientific station. This time it is an agricultural laboratory in the midwest where, by the use of radioactive material, strawberries and similar fruits are grown to the size of footballs. Somehow grasshoppers come in contact with the radioactive material and grow into 1-feet tall monsters. These monsters immediately menace the nation. The Illinois National Guard is called up. Town and cities are destroyed as mere humans and their modern weapons cannot halt the invasion. A national emergency is declared and the Dept. of Defense takes over the defense of Chicago.

The hopped-up grasshoppers invade the Windy City and are seen ploughing through armies, lumbering down streets, frightening a panic-stricken population, and crawling up tall buildings. All this is accomplished by obviously artificial superimpositions of drawings and the employment of stock footage. A way naturally is found to halt the monsters. They are lured into Lake Michigan where they are killed by the (surprise!) cold water.

The Fred Freiberger and Lester Corn screenplay is ludicrous, bringing out every cliche in plot and dialog. Peggie Castle is unconvincing as a national magazine newshen-photographer; Peter Graves makes a gallant try as the young scientist and Morris Ankrum is artificially harassed as the commanding general. The camerawork (uncredited) and the editing (ditto) match the scenario. Holl.

The Unearthly

Cheap horror programmer built around the mad doctor theme. Fodder for the very unsophisticated.

Hollywood, June 29.

Republic release of an AB-PT production. Stars John Carradine; features Allison Hayes, Myron Healy, with Sally Todd, Marilyn Buford, Arthur Batanides, Tor Johnson, Harry Fleer, Roy Gordon, Guy Prescott, Paul McWilliams. Producer-director, Brooke L. Peters. Screenplay, Geoffrey Dennis-Jane Mann, from Miss Mann's original. Camera, Merle Connell; editor, Richard Currier; art director, Daniel Hall; music direction, Henry Varse. Michael Terr. Previewed, June 28, '57. Running time, 70 MINS.

Prof. Charles Conway	John Carradine
Grace Thomas	Allison Hayes
Mark Houston	Myron Healy
Natalie	Sally Todd
Dr. Gilchrist	Marilyn Buford
Danny Green	Arthur Batanides
Lobo	Tor Johnson
Jedrow	Harry Fleer
Dr. Loren Wright	Roy Gordon
Capt. Rogers	Guy Prescott
Police Officer	Paul MacWilliams

The mad doctor bit again. There's nothing to recommend this one beyond its cheapness. Fodder for a very unsophisticated market.

Doc John Carradine and assistant Marilyn Buford are conducting experiments on human guinea pigs in an isolated sanatorium—something to do with transplanting glands and extending the life span "forever." Among the intended victims of Allison Hayes and Myron Healy. To no one's particular surprise, Healy turns out to be a cop, who blows the whistle on the proceedings with the proper amount of derring-do. Finale has cops discover a band of Hollywood's bulkier bit players, made up as a cellarful of doc Carradine's "mistakes."

Geoffrey Dennis and Jane Mann adapted Miss Mann's original with a maximum of cliches and a minimum of originality. Brooke L. Peters produced-directed with a heavy hand and no particular distinction.

Carradine plays the doc broadly, as good a way as any. Healy is only other competant thesp in cast. Miss Hayes, Miss Buford and Sally Todd, another of doc's victims, lend some visual pleasure to the proceedings, but otherwise aren't up to unrewarding assignments. Tor Johnson, as the doc's muscle man, and Arthur Batanides and Harry Fleer, other victims, are acceptable.

Technical credits are competant, but show the effect of a short budget. Kove.

The Buckskin Lady

Fairish outdoor tale though scripting attempts to add "character" dimension fliv.

Hollywood, June 25.

United Artists release of a Bishop-Hittleman Pictures production. Stars Patricia Medina, Richard Denning, Gerald Mohr, Henry Hull; features Hank Warden, Robin Short, Richard Reeves, Dorothy Adams. Producer-director, Carl K. Hittleman; screenplay, David Lang, Hittleman, from Francis S. Chase Jr. story; camera, Ellsworth Fredericks; editor, Harry Coswick; music, Albert Glasser. Title song, Glasser, Maurice Keller. Previewed, June 24, '57. Running time, 66 MINS.

Angela Medley	Patricia Medina
Dr. Bruce Merritt	Richard Denning
Slinger	Gerald Mohr
Doc	Henry Hull
Lon	Hank Warden
Nevada	Robin Short
Porter	Richard Reeves
Mrs. Adams	Dorothy Adams
Jed	Frank Sully
Cranston	George Cisar
Ralphie	Louis Lettieri
Latham	Byron Foulger
Swanson	John Dierkes

Strictly for the program trade is this low-budget western. There's enough action to compensate for half-hearted attempts of scripters David Lang and Carl K. Hittleman (who also produced-directed) to add character dimension to F. S. Chase's story. These attempts get bogged down and serve no purpose but to slow pace.

Patricia Medina portrays femme gambler in small western town, who's supporting her drunken doctor father, Henry Hull, with her shady earnings. Also, she's lady love of local top gunman, Gerald Mohr.

Into town rides new doc, stalwart Richard Denning, and in short order she's fallen for him and tries to go straight. Naturally, complications set in and to save him, she rides off with Mohr. But when Mohr turns outlaw, she yearns for home and Denning, especially after she catches a bullet picturesquely in her attractive shoulder. When Denning catches up to rescue her, she has to plug Mohr with his own gun to save her true love. Then she and Denning can amble off toward the sunset together.

Director Hittleman manages several fairly exciting fights and one bitterly amusing chase sequence, but otherwise his helming is routine for the course. Emoting rarely rises above the elementary. Miss Medina, attractively clad in revealing gowns and tightfitting jeans, does a good job of registering sex, but otherwise rarely has a chance to change expression. Same applies to stereotyped roles of Denning and Mohr, who look perturbed and sneer throughout, respectively. Hull is appropriately weak and befuddled.

Hank Warden is good as loyal friend of Miss Medina and Denning, who gets killed for his pains. Robert Short, in as a combo barkeeper - ballad - strummin' troubador, hasn't a chance to develop his role into anything meaningful. Dorothy Adams, Bryon Fougler and Richard Reeves also turn in capable support chores.

Technical credits are competently standard, except for choppy cutting. Kove.

Bernardine
(C'SCOPE-COLOR)

In the groove for youngsters and teen-aged in-the-wood oldsters but Pat Boone entry is mild item for general market.

20th-Fox release of Samuel G. Engel production. Stars Pat Boone, Terry Moore, Janet Gaynor and Dean Jagger. Features Richard Sargent, James Drury, Ronnie Burns, Walter Abel, Natalie Schaefer, Isabel Jewell. Directed by Henry Levin; Screenplay, Theodore Reeves; based on the play by Mary Chase; camera (C'Scope and De Luxe Color), Paul Vogel; editor, David Bretherton; music, Lionel Newman; songs, "Bernardine" and "Technique" by Johnny Mercer, and "Love Letters in the Sand" by Nick and Charles Kenny and J. Fred Coots. Previewed in New York June 20, '57. Running time, 94 MINS.

Beau	Pat Boone
Jean	Terry Moore
Mrs. Wilson	Janet Gaynor
J. Fullerton Weldy	Dean Jagger
Sanford Wilson	Richard Sargent
Lt. Langley Beaumont	James Drury
Griner	Ronnie Burns
Mr. Beaumont	Walter Abel
Mrs. Beaumont	Natalie Schafer
Ruby	Isabel Jewell
Jack Costanzo and Orchestra	Themselves
Hilda	Edit Angold
Friedelhauser	Val Benedict
Cleo	Ernestine Wade
Mr. Mason	Russ Conway
Olson	Tom Pittman
Kinswood	Hooper Dunbar

Pat Boone being an important figure among the younger set, it figures that his cinematic outing in "Bernardine" will receive their attention. Further, the Samuel G. Engel offering concerns itself with teenagers, and this means those at student age ought to feel the picture was made especially for them. To boot, there are several vocals by the star.

Title song is a bright paean to a young man's ideal girl and in circulation on the Dot label. The retailer action hasn't been strong yet but very well could pick up. It's backed with the oldie, "Love Letters in the Sand" (Nick and Charles Kenny and J. Fred Coots), and this has been getting top-of-the-list spins. Third number is "Technique," by Johnny Mercer (who also composed the title song) and its chances are fair enough considering the familiar Calypso beat and clever lyrics. Boone does them all in winning style, a selling factor for the picture.

Engle's production, based on the mildly-received Mary Chase play, is not in the true sense a run-of-the-audience entertainment. Those removed from teenagers and, in this case, their fancies and frolics and glib chatter likely will find only mild diversion in the entry. Indeed, it seems that the script goes overboard in depicting all the adult characters as near-morons in contrast with the very hip juveniles on view.

Boone is a member of the local high school graduating class and a numerically limited clique whose main interests are motor boat racing, cars and, mostly conversationally, girls. Terry Moore is a new-in-town telephone operator who answers to the description of their mentally-sketched ideal. Richard Sargent lays claim to her, having "discovered" her, but Boone's brother, James Drury, as an officer on leave from the Army, wins the gal and Sargent impulsively enlists in the military.

That's about it, in the broad sense. In between there's lots of big words that make but small talk as mouthed by Boone and his classmates. As directed by Henry Levin, the treatment is light-hearted except for Sargent's romantic setback.

Performances are so-so. Boone is strong with a pop vocal but he acts with a strained-for nonchalance that is not becoming. And the camera work, in De Luxe color and CinemaScope, makes him out too much of a pretty-boy. Miss Moore is attractive and fits her part well. Sargent comes off tops as the clumsy would-be Casanova, who lacks "technique." Janet Gaynor smiles and behaves pleasantly a Sargent's widowed mother (a stronger part would have been welcome on her return to the screen) and Dean Jagger, as her admirer, meets the requirement of the Theodore Reeves script.

Ronnie Burns (son of George Burns and Gracie Allen), Walter Abel, Natalie Schaefer, Isabel Jewell and others in the cast all work fair enough. Jack Costanzo and orchestra do a bongo number which provides a fair amount of color.

Set decorations by Walter M. Scott and Stuart A. Reiss appear to be from out of a House Beautiful type of women's mag. Technical credits all okay. Gene.

KID FILMS GONE FISHING (IN TV)

Metro Wants Out of 'No Blade of Grass'

Second-Guess on Satevepost Buy Believed Fear Of Production Costs

Question before the house: Why is Metro trying to unload "No Blade of Grass," which it bought only a couple of months ago for around $80,000?

Scott Meredith agency last week contacted all the story departments of the film companies, making it plain that M-G would be quite willing to part with the yarn for the same amount it originally paid for it.

Explanation (considered a lame one) given was that Metro wouldn't sign the release form of the Saturday Evening Post, where the story originally appeared. It's about what happens if all the food should disappear from the earth.

Educated guess as to why Metro wants to part with the property is that, on closer examination, it found it difficult to shape it into a motion picture drama. Production cost would be tremendous. Columbia, originally unhappy when M-G snapped up the story, now is coldshouldering a deal.

"No Blade of Grass" was one of the major story purchases under the new regime at Metro. Latter apparently isn't willing to just let a difficult second-guessed property sit on the shelf, as might have been done in the old Louis B. Mayer days.

NEWSMEN 'WINCE' WHILE SEEING 'SWEET SMELL'

Washington, July 2.

Private screening of "Sweet Smell of Success," with an appearance of Burt Lancaster, drew an unusually large number of Washington newsmen and columnists to MPAA's plush Academia. Many of scribes present said they winced at film's portrayal of an unscrupulous, ruthless Broadway columnist.

Appearing with Lancaster on tub-thumping tour was Barbara Nichols, who plays supporting role in film. Along for the ride were Mrs. Lancaster and their two young sons.

Stagehands in East Echo West Coast: Damn Home-Toll

Theatrical unions in New York State, as represented by the Council of International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees, have again registered their opposition to any form of home-toll television. Action of the eastern unionites follows similar declaration by the California State Theatrical Federation.

In a statement signed by Thomas Murtha, chairman of the 10th District, N. Y. Council of IATSE, the labor group went on record with the Federal Communications Commission "that it now feels more strongly than ever that any form of toll tv would injure the present status of all its members, and that the unions are united in their determination to see that this 'grab' of the air waves should not be condoned."

Murtha indicated that he was in full agreement with the California State Theatrical Federation that to permit toll tv would be "an infringement on the property right now enjoyed by the general public on a no-fee basis." He also took issue with the AFL Film Council, which has taken the position that home-toll would aid employment. "It would have the opposite effect," said Murtha, "if this vicious system was ever permitted."

There is an undisclosed connection between the N. Y. Council of IATSE and Theatre Owners of America in the fight against home-pay tv. Murtha's statement was distributed to the press by TOA's N. Y. office.

SUES ON 'TRAPEZE'

Daniel Fuchs Claims Lift from His Collier's Tale

Los Angeles, July 2.

Screenwriter Daniel Fuchs has sued Hecht-Lancaster et al in Federal court asking $250,000 punitive damages plus one-sixth of profits on "Trapeze," claiming infringement of copyright, breach of implied contract, and violation of confidential relationship.

Fuchs charges "Trapeze" was copied "in substantial part" from story originally titled "Daring Young Man" which appeared in Colliers during 1940. Rights, except magazine rights, reverted to him in 1956.

Hollywood, July 2.

George Bagnell was re-elected president of the Motion Picture Relief Fund at the annual meeting of the organization.

Albert B. Hilton, formerly second veepee, was upped to first vice president, succeeding the late Mitchell Lewis. Otto Kruger, Sol Lesser and Valentine Davies were named 2d, 3d and 4th veepees respectively.

THEATRES STARVE FOR BOOKINGS

Circuits trying to run kiddie shows are finding it increasingly difficult to get cooperation from the film companies. Problem has again come into focus with the oncoming of the summer months and the end of school.

Motion Picture Assn. of America still maintains its Children's Film Library, but, say exhibitors, most of the time there are no prints available of the "recommended" films.

Television is partly to blame for total situation. Very few pictures of direct appeal to children are made nowadays (Walt Disney being a notable exception). Oldies that would fit perfectly into children's shows, have been sold to syndicators. Either that, or the companies would have to make new acetate prints from the old negatives, and aren't eager to undertake the expense.

One of the circuits again running its traditional Saturday afternoon kiddie matinee is the Walter Reade chain in New Jersey. Reade has made up his own list of suitable children's films and has submitted them to the local PTAs for approval. Circuit runs these shows in eight or nine of its towns, selling a series of 10 tickets in advance for $1.

While the juve matinees are hardly money-making propositions for the theatres, some exhibs are strongly conscious of the need to attract the rapidly growing children population and draw it away from the tv sets. They feel that, of the consciousness of the movie theatre isn't instilled at that stage, the youngsters will never regain the film-going habit as adults.

Whitney's Pair To Buena Vista Co.

Hollywood, July 2.

C. V. Whitney's "Missouri Traveler," recently completed, and "Young Land," which rolls Aug. 1, will be released by Disney's Buena Vista distributing outfit.

"Traveler" previously was set for Warner release but deal never finalized. Two films represent an investment of $4,000,000.

'Joan' Into 92 Playdates

Otto Preminger's "Saint Joan," a United Artists release, has been set for 92 key dates over the next three weeks, according to distribution v.p. William J. Heineman.

Film version of the G. B. Shaw play, starring newcomer Jean Seberg, has opened in New York and at Marshalltown, Ia., hometown of Miss Seberg.

'Public Trial' of Home-Toll TV Forseen as Inevitable Though Practicality Still Questioned

Optimistic Note

Manchester, N. H., July 2.

Clean entertainment still pays off, and the short work week for most laboring folk holds great promise for the future of moving pictures in the opinion of Edward J. Fahey, who has spent 34 years in the amusement business.

Fahey, general manager of the Shea chain theatres here, together with Pine Island Park and the Pine Island Drive-In, finds hardtops attracting increasing crowds of teenagers, while the drive-ins are doing a thriving family business.

Subscription television, which has held the spotlight in recent months due to the controversy over the proposed Dodgers and Giants move to the west coast, appears to be heading for a practical, working test.

Pro and con discussion still continues re the legal aspects of pay-tv and a "public trial," but the opinion is growing that the new video wrinkle can't be smoothed out before it's had some practical operational testing. It's figured that, one way or another, i.e., by cable or over-the-air, pay-as-you-see will be offered to the setowners to test their reaction.

What works, in part, against the "let-us-lose-our-shirts-if-we-want-to" proponents who've been pressing for a test are the economics of a trial run. The key to toll-tv is volume. It's volume, i.e., a large number of subscribers, that is a condition to any real test.

But volume means a very large investment via decoders, cables, etc., etc. And investors willing to put millions into a venture that stands a good risk of being scrapped in a year or two later are rare. Furthermore, it's argued, it'll be difficult to obtain the kind of programming that makes pay-video worth while until and unless there is sufficient "circulation."

Where The Supply?

Already, there are reports that the organizers of the Bartlesville, Okla., closed-circuit experiment are having some trouble lining up a supply of film product. At the same time, there is now no question at all that most of the distributors, given a sufficient number of installations in homes, would go along.

Roy Disney just recently went on record with the statement that, if and when pay-tv arrives, it would constitute a "logical method of expanding distribution channels for theatrical motion pictures." Many other film exhibs take the same attitude.

The Federal Communications Commission has been manifestly stalling, possibly impressed by the not inconsiderable opposition to home-toll in the Congress and also by the well-publicized efforts on behalf of local "cable" (which would be outside the jurisdiction of the FCC).

One of the factors that has consistently weakened the argument of the home-video-for-pay opponents has been their rather transparent selfish motives. This is particularly obvious in the instance of the film theatres, many of whom would oppose a subscription service going out over the air (i.e., not under their control) while backing it via cables, under which they can be enfranchised. This inconsistency has hurt the anti-toll case and has stripped it of much of its purported logic.

Love Those 'Consumers'

The pay-in-the-parlor promoters —Skiatron, Telemeter and Zenith —have ardently pushed the point that they would gladly put themselves at the mercy of consumers, though the latter now have advertising-supported programming.

Press spotlighting of the Dodgers and Giants, tied so closely to the New York clubs' open enthusiasm for home revenues (both have contracts with Skiatron), has served to support the thesis of those who hold that, in a free economy, a new system based on fees must not be suppressed without even a day-in-court for the profit of status quo telecasters.

While many are now willing to back a home-toll "trial," there's also some skepticism over its ultimate practicability in the face of repeated polls putting segments of the public on record as to their relative willingness to pay. Complicating the outlook is the release of so many old but good features, exhibited originally in theatres and now on home screens for free, wth plugs.

Why More Delay? Telemeter Prods Stalling FCC

Washington, July 2.

International Telemeter Corp., a Paramount Pictures subsidiary, told the Federal Communications Commission today (Tues.) that it considered further toll-tv tests unnecessary. It urged the Commission to go ahead immediately and authorize pay-as-you-see without further trial runs. Telemeter was the first company to respond to the FCC's call for comments on how tests might be conducted. The deadline for filing is July 28.

Telemeter stressed the problem of getting investors to put up large coin for a limited test. It also made it plain that it favored large-scale use of pay-as-you-see by cable, but said it would cooperate fully should tests be authorized. The company said that, during a test period, the networks could be expected to put on the type of shows that would discourage viewers re fee-tv.

The Telemeter brief said it could provide cable service at $100 per home, that figure including all costs for decoders, lines, installation, studio, etc.

Chaplin Records 'King'

Paris, July 2.

Charles Chaplin came in from Switzerland this week t oconduct the recordings of music from his new film "A King in New York."

Chaplin's "King" opens in London next September and in Paris the following month. He told VARIETY he would have no press showings beforehand.

The Moving Finger Writes 100 Dates In Outlying N.Y. for 'Khayyam'

Continuing the developing trend of bypassing a Broadway engagement, Paramount is arranging a saturation neighborhood run in some 100 theatres in the N.Y. metropolitan area for "Omar Khayyam" in mid-August. This follows on the heels of Par's decision to release "Loving You," the Elvis Presley starrer, in the same manner during July.

Par's move marks the third time over a relatively short period that a film company has decided to do without a Broadway run for a medium budget picture. Columbia successfully revived this technique with "Garment Jungle" several months ago and appears to have started a new trend. In a similar vein, Universal has been skipping first-run engagements in Chicago's loop and has been shipping the pictures directly to the neighborhood houses.

The distributors, on the basis of the recent experiences, have found this method more satisfactory, particularly for so-called medium budget films. Many pictures in this category have failed to recoup their advertising costs in single downtown engagements in N.Y. or Chi. Frequently it takes about $25,000 to open one of the entries on Broadway. By spending the same amount of money and having the pictures in spots where it can be seen immediately, it has been discovered, results in better returns in relation to the advertising and bally coin spent. Indications are that as a result of these tests more and more pictures will be sent out to the outlying areas on a first-run basis.

Los Angeles, July 2.

First-run grosses are looking up this session, being even ahead of last week, with one sock opener and several fat holdovers and extended-runs bolstered by July 4 holiday. "Pride and Passion" shapes wham $38,000 in teeoff week at Fox Wilshire.

Hard-ticket pic, "Seven Wonders of World" is going for a big $42,000 in fourth session at Warner Hollywood. Another in this category, "Around World in 80 Days" is rated hefty $30,000 or better in 28th stanza at the Carthay while the hard-ticket opus, "10 Commandments," still is steady with $17,000 in 33d round at Warner Beverly.

Science-fiction bill, "Monster That Challenged World" and "Vampire," looks moderate $15,500 in three spots. "Island in Sun" is rated strong $24,000 in third frame at Chinese. "Love in Afternoon" is mild $22,500, second week, two houses.

"Gunfight at O.K. Corral" looms fine $10,000 in fifth round. "Something of Value" is closing third Pantages week at okay $9,000.

Estimates for This Week

Fox Wilshire (FWC) (2,296; $1.50-$2.40)—"Pride and Passion" (UA). Wow $38,000. Last week, house closed.

Downtown, Iris (SW-FWC) (1,757; 756; 90-$1.50) — "Trooper Hook" (UA) and "Buckskin Lady" (UA). Fair $10,300. Last week, Downtown and Iris, with Uptown, "20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col) and "The 27th Day" (Col), $25,000.

State, New Fox (UATC-FWC) (2,404; 965; 90-$1.50)—"The Weapon" (Rep) and "Spoilers of Forest" (Rep). Light $6,900. Last week, State, "This Could Be Night" (M-G) and "Bailout at 43,000 Feet" (UA) (2d wk), $2,700; New Fox, with Globe, "Love Lottery" (Indie) and "Lost Continent" (Lopert), $3,000.

Philly Biz Spotty; 'D.I.' Rousing 19G

Philadelphia, July 2.

Biz is spotty currently but the 15,000 attending the National Educational Assn. confabs are proving a big help. They are improving trade especially for "Seven Wonders of World." "Island in Sun" continues terrific in second stanza at the Fox. "Prince and Showgirl" is rated good at Randolph. "The D.I." looks great at Goldman. "20 Million Miles To Earth" shapes great at Stanton.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (526; 99-$1.80)—"Designing Woman" (M-G) (6th wk). Thin $5,500. Last week, $7,000.

Boyd (SW-Cinerama) (1,430; $1.25-$2.60)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) (62d wk). Okay $7,500. Last week, $7,200.

Mastbaum (SW) (4,370; 90-$1.49)—"Battle Hell" (DCA) (2d wk). Thin $12,000. Last week, $10,000.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; $2-$2.75)—"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) (27th wk). Smart $13,000. Last week, $14,000.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,250; 99-$1.80)—"Prince and Showgirl" WB). Good $11,000. Last week, "10 Commandments" (Par) (31st wk), $15,000.

Stanley (SW) (2,900; 99-$1.49)—"Beyond Mombassa" (Col). Dim $9,000. Last week, "Johnny Tremain" (BV), $14,000.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 99-$1.49)—"20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col) and "27th Day" (Col). Great $16,000. Last week, "River's Edge" (20th) and "Storm Rider" (20th), $8,500.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (99-$1.80)—"Little Hut" (M-G) (5th wk). Oke $3,500. Last week, $5,000.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 75-$1.40)—"Gunfight at O.K. Corral" (Par) (5th wk). Okay $7,500. Last week, $11,000.

'Tremain' Modest $6,500, Port.; 'Sun' Torrid 10G

Portland, Ore., July 2.

New pix are being taken over the bumps here this round, with only the foreign "La Strada," in original form, doing okay for the review. One of the major disappointments is "Johnny Tremain," moderate at Liberty. "Island in Sun" is torrid in third session at Fox. "Around World in 80 Days" still is big in 11th stanza at the Broadway.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (980; $2-$2.50) — "Around World" (UA) (11th wk), weekends. Sturdy $12,500. Last week, $12,200.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,536; $1-$1.50)—"Island In Sun" (20th) and "Two Grooms for Bride" (20th) (3d wk). Hefty $10,000. Last week, $12,100.

Guild (Indie) (400;; $1.25)—"La Strada" (T-L). Tall $3,000. Last week, "Wee Gordie" (Indie) (7th wk), $1,600.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,890; 90-$1.25) — "Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Duel At Apache Wells" (Rep). Moderate $6,500. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) and "Canyon River" (AA) (8 days), $6,400.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,600; $1-$1.25) — "Beyond Mombasa" (Col) and "The Strange One" (Col). Slim $4,500. Last week, "D.I." (WB) and "Paris Does Strange Things" (WB), $7,500.

Paramount (Port-Par) (3,400; 90-$1.25)—"Lonely Man" (Par) and "Buster Keaton Story" (Par). Dull $5,500. Last week, "Tammy and Bachelor" (U) and "Man Afraid" (U), $6,700.

'Tammy' Tall 12G, Toronto; 'War' 9G

Toronto, July 2.

Newcomer "Something of Value" is topping the city at upped prices, with a smash take. "Tammy and the Bachelor" shapes hefty, but "D. I." looks fair. "Saint Joan" looms light. "War and Peace" is back for big trade at pop prices. Of the holdovers, "Face in Crowd" remains strong in second stanza. Showing increased grosses over previous week are such long-runs as "Oklahoma" in 63d and "10 Commandments" in 32d stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Carlton, Colony, Fairlawn (Rank) (2,518; 859; 1,165; 60-$1)— "St. Joan" (UA). Light $10,000. Last week, "20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col), $16,000.

Christie, Danforth, Humber, Hyland (Rank) (877; 1,350; 1,205; 1,357; $1) — "Doctor at Large" (Rank) (3d wk). Holding big at $16,000. Last week, $18,000.

Downtown, Glendale, Scarboro, State (Taylor) (1,054; 955; 694; 698; 50-75)—"Voodoo Island" (UA) and "Pharaoh's Curse" (U) (reissues). Okay $13,500. Last week, "Bailout 43,000" (UA) and "Fort Laramie" (UA), $13,000.

Eglinton, Towne, Westwood (Taylor) (1,080; 693; 994; $1) — "Happy Road" (M-G). Big $15,000.

Boston, July 2.

The Hub boxoffice is jumping with a rash of coin-getting new product despite the continued heat wave here. Youngsters out of school is helping. "Prince and Showgirl" leads the field with a smash take at the Met. "I Was Teenage Werewolf" and "Invasion of Saucer-Men" combo is rated sockeroo at Paramount and Fenway. "Saint Joan" is only fair at the Beacon Hill. "20 Million Miles to Earth" shapes bright at the Pilgrim.

"Johnny Tremain" kicked off solidly at the Mayflower day-date with 17 nabe houses in greater Hub. Holdovers are great with "Something of Value" looking hep in second round at State and Orpheum. "Bernardine is nifty at the Memorial in first h.o. week. Hard ticket shows are holding stout with "Seven Wonders of World" sturdy in 45th; "10 Commandments" oke in 33d; and "Around World in 80 Days," the leader with near capacity in 12th frame.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,372; $1.90-$2.75)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (33d wk). Fair $5,000. Last week, $5,500.

Beacon Hill (Beacon Hill) (678; 90-$1.25)—"St. Joan" (UA). Fair $8,000 or near. Last week, "Fantasia" (BV) (reissue) (2d wk), $4,000.

Boston (SW-Cinerama) (1,354; $1.25-$2.65) —"Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (45th wk). Good $13,500. Last week, $14,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,200; 60-$1.25)—"John and Julie" (Indie) (2d wk). Second week opened Sunday (30). Last week, mild $4,500.

Fenway (NET) (1,373; 60-$1.10)—"I Was Teenage Werewolf" (AI) and "Invasion of Saucer-Men" (AI). Torrid $7,000 or over. Last week, "D.I." (WB) and "Naked Gun" (Indie) (2d wk), $5,000.

'Prince' Wow 15G, Buff; 'Earth' 14G

Buffalo, July 2.

Canadian holidays, with thousands of residents coming to this city, are upping biz at nearly all locations this stanza. Standout newcomer is "Prince and Showgirl," smash at the 2,000-seat Center. "Johnny Tremain" also looks socko at Paramount in nine days. "20 Million Miles To Earth" shapes neat at Lafayette. "Island in Sun" still is potent in third session at the Buffalo. Both "Around World" and "Seven Wonders" are doing better than last stanza.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,000; 60-85)—"Island in Sun" (20th) and "Gun Duel in Durango" (20th) (3d wk). Potent $12,000. Last week, $14,500.

Paramount (ABPT) (3,000; 60-85)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Men of Sherwood Forest" (Indie). Nifty $16,000 in 9 days. Last week, "Lonely Man" (Par) and "Buster Keaton Story" (Par), $11,000.

Center (ABPT) (2,000; 60-85)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Sock $15,000. Last week, "I Was Teen-Age Werewolf" (AI) and "Invasion of Saucer Men" (AI) (9 days), $10,200.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 60-85)—"20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col) and "27th Day" (Col). Big $14,000. Last week, "Tammy and Bachelor" (U) and "Mister Cory" (U), $6,500.

Century (Buhawk) (1,400; $1.50-$3)—"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) (13th wk). Big $12,000 or over. Last week, $9,500.

Teck (SW-Cinerama) (1,200; $1.20-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) (44th wk). Good $7,500. Last week, $7,000.

Cincy Big; 'Bernardine' Smooth $13,000, 'Value' Great 11G, 'Sun' 12G

Cincinnati, July 2.

Another bumper session is in prospect for major stands this week. New bills "Bernardine" in the Palace and "Something of Value" in the Grand are neck and neck for smash takings. "Island in Sun" is a sturdy holdover at the big Albee in third. "Johnny Tremain" retains big second round strength at Keith's. Both hard ticket offerings are in high clever. "Around World in 80 Days" shapes to improve for third straight week to great total and "Seven Wonders of World" keeps rolling solidly in 56th frame.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.25)—"Island in Sun" (20th) (3d wk). Solid $12,000. Last week, $15,000.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) —"Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (56th wk). Increasing juve trade helpful in getting sock $18,000. Last week, ditto.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 90-$1.25)—"Something of Value" (M-G). Sock $11,000. Best grosser here in some weeks. Holds for second. Last week, "Tarzan and Lost Safari" (M-G) and "Vintage" (M-G), at 75c-$1.10 scale, $6,000.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 75-$1.25)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV) (2d wk). Hefty $7,000 in 6 days after $8,700 bow.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 90-$1.25)—"Bernardine" (20th). Swell $13,000 or near. Holds for second round. Last week, "D.I." (WB), at 75-$1.10 scale, $10,000.

Valley (Wiethe) (1,300; $1.50-$2.50)—"Around World" (UA) (3d wk). Continuing upward trend reaching $19,000 after great $18,000 second frame. Advance sale perking up and buses unloading groups from Columbia, O., and Parkersburg, W. Va.

Det. Okay; 'Tammy' Tasty $16,000, 'Rock Night' Hep 15G, 'Sun' Big 20G, 3d

Detroit, July 2.

Biz is generally fine, but a few weak spots are showing up this stanza among the downtowners. "Rock All Night" is heading for a great session at Broadway-Capitol. "Tammy and Bachelor" shapes fine at the Michigan. "Loney Man" is below par at Palms. "Island in Sun" is holding terrific in third week at the Fox. "Around World 80 Days" steps up its pace in 27th stanza at the United Artists. Also improving over last week's figures are long-termers "Seven Wonders of World" in 47th week at Music Hall and "10 Commandments" in 32d round at Madison.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,000; 90-$1.25)—"Island in Sun" (20th) and "Two Grooms for Bride" (20th) (3d wk). Great $20,000. Last week, $27,500.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; 90-$1.25)—"Tammy and Bachelor" (U) and "Weapon" (Col). Fine $16,000. Last week, "Joe Butterfly" (U) and "Phantom Stage Coach" (Indie), $12,000.

Palms (UD) (2,961; 90-$1.25)—"Lonely Man" (Par) and "Kettles on Old MacDonald's Farm" (U). Fair $10,000. Last week, "Garment Jungle" (Col) and "Burglar" (Col), $15,000.

Madison (UD) (1,900; $1.25-$2.75) — "10 Commandments" (Par) (32d wk). Terrific $16,000. Last week, $14,000.

Broadway-Capitol (UD) (3,500; 90-$1.25)—"Rock All Night", (Indie) and "Drag Strip Girl" (Indie) Swell $15,000. Last week, "20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col) and "27th Day" (Col) (2d wk-3 days), $8,000.

United Artists (UA) 1,668; $1.25-$3)—"Around World" UA) (27th wk). Socko $18,500. Last week, $16,500.

Adams (Balaban). (1,700; 90-$1.25) — "Something of Value" (M-G) (3d wk). Down to $11,500, but still good. Last week, $14,000.

Music Hall (SW-Cinerama) (1,205; $1.50-$2.65)—"Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (47th wk). Terrific $17,800. Last week, $17,300.

Krim (Krim) (1,000; $1.25)—"Barefoot Contessa" (UA) and "Moulin Rouge" (UA) (reissues). Slow $4,500. Last week, "Invitation to Dance" (M-G) and "Vintage" (M-G), $5,200.

'Value' High $11,000 In Balto; 'Joe' Fancy 6G, 'Sun' Torrid 11G, 3d

Baltimore, July 2.

Although biz is bright in a few spots here currently, the general biz picture is only fair. The strongest entry is "Something of Value," smash at the Town. Only other new product is "Joe Butterfly" at the Mayfair, which is doing nicely. Holdovers and double bills are not helping the situation. "Island in Sun" is still strong in its third week at the Century while "Bachelor Party" at the Playhouse is holding nicely. "Around World in 80 Days" shapes staunch in the 28th frame at the Film Centre.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Fruchtman) (3,100; 50-$1.25)—"Island in Sun" (20th) (3d wk). Hot $11,000 after $14,000 last frame.

Cinema (Schwaber) (460; 50-$1.25) — "For Whom Bell Tolls" (Par) (reissue) (2d wk). Okay $2,500 after $4,000 opener.

Film Centre (Rappaport) (890; $1.50-$2.50)—"Around World" (UA) (28th wk). Staunch $1,500 after $10,000 last week.

Five West (Schwaber) (560; 50-$1.25)—"Green Man" (DCA) (4th wk. Nice $3,100. Third $4,000.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,300; 50-$1.25)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV) (2d wk). Tepid $6,000 after $8,000 in first.

Mayfair (Hicks) (980; 50-$1.25)—"Joe Butterfly" (U). Nice $6,000. Theater was closed for 10 days before this opening.

New (Fruchtman) (1,500; 50-$1.25)—"Kronos" (20th) and "She-Devil" (20th). Good $6,000. Last week, "Monkey on Back" (UA) and "Buster Keaton Story" (Par), $4,000.

Playhouse (Schwaber) (410; 50-$1.25 —"Bachelor Party" (UA) (3d wk). Good $4,300 after $4,500 in second.

Stanley (SW) (3,200; 50-$1.25) — "D.I." (WB). Okay with $12,000. Last week, "Face in Crowd" (WB), same.

Town (Rappaport) (1,400; 50-$1.25) — "Something of Value" (M-G). Solid $11,000. Last week, "Giant Claw" (Col) and "Day World Exploded" (Col), $8,000.

Minneapolis, July 2.

"Tammy and the Bachelor" and "Johnny Tremain" are off to the best boxoffice start among the newcomers. "Tammy" looks sturdy at State. Only other important new entry, "Saint Joan," doesn't seem able to get up much steam. Two twin bills of lesser fare may land in the profit column. One is "Untamed Youth" and "Hooked," okay at Lyric. The other, "The Seventh Sin" and "Showdown at Abilene," shapes learn. Holdovers are "Island in Sun," okay in its third week at Radio City, and "Something of Value," fair in its second at the Gopher. Still virile is "Seven Wonders of World," in 47th stanza at Century.

Estimates for This Week

Century (SW-Cinerama) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65) — "Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (47th wk). Convention and other visitors helping this one to remain plenty healthy at stout $12,500. Last week, $13,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-90)—"Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk). Considering adverse conditions, this one doing all right. Fine $7,000. Last week, $6,500.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-90)—"Untamed Youth" (WB) and "Hooked" (Indie). Getting some play from younger element. Okay $4,500. Last week, "Kronos" (20th) and "She-Devil" (20th), $4,200.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 85-90)—"Island in Sun" (20th) (3d wk). First picture in months to hold for third stanza at this house. Okay $6,000. Last week, $11,000.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 75-90)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV). Kids in particular going for this one. Children's admissions tilted from 25c. to 35c. Mild $7,000 or over. Last week, "Giant Claw" (Col) and "Night World Exploded" (Col), $7,500.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,800; 75-90)—"Seventh Sin" (M-G) and "Showdown in Abilene" (U). Lean $3,500. Last week, "Shoot-Out Medicine Bend" (WB) and "Counterfeit Plan" (WB), $3,800.

State (Par) (2,300; 85-90)—"Tammy and Bachelor" (U). Not winning any crix plaudits, but the public here is going for it. Fancy $8,000. Last week, "Oklahoma" (AA), $6,000.

World (Mann) (400; 85-$1.25)—"Saint Joan" (UA). Given good campaign and may build. However, only moderate $2,000 looms. Last week, "Constant Husband" (Indie), $3,200.

Chi Still Strong; 'Pride' Mighty $70,000, 'Silk' Wham 19G, 'St. Joan' Big 10G, 'Bernardine' Tidy 17G, 2d

Chicago, July 2.

More potent product blows into the Windy City this frame and the upsurge in b.o. action continues. Chicagoland fair, drawing 50,000 to city daily, is helping trade, too.

Biggest starter is "Pride and Passion," at State-Lake with a mighty $70,000 likely. The Loop Theatre is doing great with "Silk Stockings," at $19,000 or over. "St. Joan" starts off at the Garrick with a warm $10,000. "Sierra Stranger" and "Spin Dark Web" shape active $7,600.

Second framers are running better than par for most part with "Green Man" doing fanciest box-office "Beginning of End" with "Unearthly" slips to an okay second frame. "Bernardine" winds up with a tidy second round at the Chicago.

"Island in Sun" remains healthy for third frame at Oriental. "Little Hut" shapes durable in fourth at the Woods. "Gunfight at O.K. Corral" looks fair for fifth frame at United Artists.

Todd's Cinestage carries "Around World in 80 Days" into 13th week without any softening in its capacity business. "Seven Wonders of World" is still mighty at Palace for its 28th week while "10 Commandments" keeps steady for its 32d set at McVickers.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (H&E Balaban) (480; 90)—"It Happened in Park" (Indie) (2d wk). Nice $2,800. Last week, $3,500.

'D.I.' Stout $10,000, Best K.C. Newcomer; 'Party' Same, 'Desk' Oke 12G

Kansas City, July 2.

Some improvement is being shown in theatre traffic currently. "D. I." at Paramount and "Bachelor Party" at the Midland both loom good. "Around World in 80 Days" in fifth week at the Tower continues to be a leader while "Cinerama Holiday" at the Missouri holds steady. "Desk Set" in four Fox Midwest theatres is barely okay. "Bailout at 43,000" in four Dickinson theatres looks moderate. Heavy rains continue to hold back biz, especially at the drive-ins.

Estimates for This Week

Dickinson, Glen, Shawnee Drive-in, Leawood Drive-in (Dickinson) (750; 700; 1,100 cars; 900 cars; 75c person)—"Bailout at 43,000" (UA) and "Gun Duel at Durango" (UA). Fairish $10,000; hurt by rains. Last week, "Tall T" (Col) and "Storm Over Nile" (Col), $12,000.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 75-90)—"Moulin Rouge" (UA) and "African Queen" (UA) (reissues) (2d wk). Okay $1,000. Last week, $1,500.

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'D.I' Sturdy 23G, D.C.; 'Sun' 16G, 3d

Washington, July 2.

Mainstem biz is off because of heat and a considerable batch of holdovers. Attractive among newcomers are "Man on Fire" and "The D.I.", latter in 2 spots. "Island in Sun" continues big in third Capitol week, and stays a fourth. "Around the World" also is keeping up its strong pace. "Seven Wonders of World" is up to a fancy figure in 27th week.

Warner (SW-Cinerama) (1,300; $1.20-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) (27th wk). Bouncing back to $15,000 after $13,800 last round.

'VALUE' SMART $11,000, L'VILLE; 'TREMAIN' 10G

Louisville, July 2.

General wicket pace in this Bluegrass metropolis is lively this week, but a couple of spots are mildish. Loew's "Something Of Value" is strong. Directly across Fourth Street, "Johnny Tremain" looks healthy at Rialto. "Man Afraid" and "Kettles On Old MacDonald's Farm" looks good at the Kentucky. "Around World in 80 Days" is rated wow in fifth stanza at the Brown.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.-U.A.) (900; $1.25-$2.40)—"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) (5th wk). Looks to land wow $12,000 or near. Last week $13,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (1,000; 50-85)—"Man Afraid" (U) and "Kettles on Old MacDonald's Farm" (U). Good $6,000. Last week, "Public Pigeon No. 1" (U) and "Young Stranger" (U), $7,000.

Loew's (United Artists) (3,000; 50-85) — "Something Of Value" (M-G). Strong $11,000. Last week, "Bachelor Party" (UA) and "Man From Del Rio" (UA), $7,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 50-85)—"Monkey On Back" (UA). Likely modest $4,500. Last week, "War Drums" (UA) and "Spring Reunion" (UA), $6,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 50-85)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Spoilers Of Forest" (20th). Healthy $10,000 or a bit over. Last week, "Island In Sun" (20th) (2d wk), $9,000.

'Hellcats' Nifty $8,000, Indpls; 'Sun' 9½G, 2d

Indianapolis, July 2.

Biz is fairly good at first-runs here this stanza despite torrential rains on fringe of Hurricane Audrey that made going rough for outdoor amusements. "Island in Sun," in second week at the Indiana, still is top money film, with "10 Commandments," in 23d week at Lyric, being close. "Hellcats of Navy" at Loew's shapes nice. "Kronos" at Circle looks oke. Completely remodelled Keith's will open July 2 with "Prince and Showgirl," to present full lineup of first-run houses here for first time since January.

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 60-90)—"Kronos" (20th) and "She-Devil" (20th). Okay $8,000. Last week, "D. I." (WB) and "Crime of Passion" (UA), $11,000.

Indiana (C-D) (3,200; 60-90) — "Island in Sun" (20th) (2d wk). Good $9,500 after $17,000 opener.

Loew's (Loew) (2,427; 60-85) — "Hellcats of Navy" (Col) and "Guns of Fort Petticoat" (Col). Nifty $8,000. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) and "War Drums" (UA), $7,000.

Lyric (C-D) (900; $1.25-$2.20)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (23d wk). Okay $9,000. Last week, $9,500.

'Bernardine' Boff $17,000, Pitt Ace

Pittsburgh, July 2.

Pat Boone's hot boxoffice and his first picture, "Bernardine," is grabbing the brass ring downtown this week. Should stick around for a stretch. "Island in Sun" holding up great at Harris and may go another stanza. Both nabe art houses, Squirrel Hill and Guild, have winners in "Strange One" and "Gold of Naples," respectively. "Johnny Tremain" is a great disappointment at the Stanley, and is mighty sad in 6 days. "Something of Value" shapes okay in second Penn session.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 80-$1.25)—"Bernardine" (20th). The Boone boy's proving a blockbuster with at least $17,000, huge counted on for first stanza. Naturally sticks. Last week, "Tammy and Bachelor" (U), $8,500 in 9 days.

Guild (Green) (500; 85-99)—"Gold of Naples" (DCA). Strong $3,750, or better. Last week, "Nana" (Times) (4th wk), $1,700.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 80-$1.25)—"Island in Sun" (20th) (3d wk). Still strong, with top weekends, and ought to go through the holiday, with "Fire Down Below" (Col) opening July 12. Looks like torrid $11,000. Last week, $13,500.

Nixon (Rubin) (1,400; $1.25-$3)—"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) (12th wk). Pace is steady and the profit still big. Just short of $15,000, big. Last week, same.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 80-$1.25)—"Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk-6 days). Not quite up to hopes but okay $9,000. Last week, $13,000. "Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) due in July 3.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 85-99)—"Strange One" (Col). Fine press reception. Big $4,500, (5th wk), may be around for awhile. Last week, "Bachelor Party" (UA) $2,400, and could have stayed on.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 80-$1.25)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV). Took out extra space over weekend in hope of getting vacationing small fry but they're not coming. Will be lucky to do sad $6,000 in 6 days. Last week, "I Was a Teenage Werewolf" (Indie) and "Invasion Saucer Men" (Indie), $4,000.

Warner (SW) (1,500; $1.25-$2.40)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (16th wk). Inching up a bit again to socko $11,500. Last week, $11,000.

'Monster' Big $10,000, Seattle; 'Sun' 9G, 3d

Seattle, July 2.

Boxoffice for the two long-run pix "Around World" and "Cinerama Holiday," look to build here this summer. However, currently there are few pix doing much outside of these upped-scale films. But "Island in Sun" still is smash in third round at Fifth Avenue. "Monster That Challenged World" is loud at Coliseum.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (800; $1.50-$2.50)—"Around World in 80 Days" (UA) (11th wk). Swell $13,000. Last week, $13,400.

Coliseum (Evergreen) (1,870; 90-$1.25)—"Monster That Challenged

New Pix Boom B'way; 'Pride' Terrif $128,000, 'Beau' Boff 35G, 'Success' Sock 40G, 'Joan' 12G, 'Prince' 142G

Launching of four new pictures, three of them blockbusters geared for the Fourth of July week trade, is proving a vast help to Broadway trade this week. In addition, the end of school term for thousands of youngsters plus some cooler weather contributed to the upbeat. Heavy rainstorms Saturday night and late Sunday afternoon cooled the atmosphere, but failed to halt the usual trek to the beaches over the weekend.

New champ from the standpoint of total coin is "Pride and the Passion" at the Capitol. Helped by expected big trade on July 4 with its holiday scale and a $2.50 general admission top last Saturday and Sunday nights, this Stanley Kramer opus looks to hit a mighty $128,000 in its initial session ending tomorrow (Thurs.).

"Beau James" is next in line with a wow $35,000 or near opening round at the Astor. "Sweet Smell of Success" looms as third best with a smash $40,000 expected in first stanza at the State. "St. Joan" is only fair $12,000 or near opening week at the Victoria.

"Prince and Showgirl" with stageshow is heading for great $142,000 in current (3d) session at the Music Hall, still the standout showing for Broadway deluxers. "Island in Sun" with iceshow looks to hit a smash $88,000 in third stanza at the Roxy. Both pix, of course, continue.

"The D.I." wound up its fourth week last night (Tues.) with fair $23,000, same figure as third round, at the Paramount. Par flagship brings in a Rock-'n'-Roll stageshow with "Beginning of End," initial AB-PT picture, today (Wed.). "Face in Crowd" rounded out its fifth frame last night with fine $9,500 at the Globe. Mayfair is bringing in "Delicate Delinquent" today (Wed.) after three slow weeks with "Scandal in Sorrento."

"Fernandel the Dressmaker" opened very good at the Paris last Saturday (29). "Happy Road" continues socko at the Plaza with $14,700 for first full week.

"Around World" held at capacity $37,100 in 37th session at the Rivoli. "10 Commandments," with boost from two extra shows, is heading for great $45,000 in current (34th) week at the Criterion. "Seven Wonders," now in 65th stanza, hit a big $34,900 in 64th round at the Warner.

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$2)—"Beau James" (Par). First week ending today (Wed.) looks to hit wow $35,000. Holds, natch! In ahead, "Something of Value" (M-G) (7th wk-5 days), $11,500.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) ($1.25-$1.80) — "Nana" (Times) (12th wk). The 11th frame ended Thursday (27) was big $6,200 as against $5,700 in 10th week. Stays on indef.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.80)—"French, They Are Funny Race" (Cont) (7th wk). Sixth round ended Monday (1) was good $4,700. Fifth was $6,100. "Maid In Paris" (Cont) due in July 12.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.75)—"Pride and Passion" (UA). Initial session winding tomorrow (Thurs.) is heading for mighty $128,000, which takes in July 4. Last week, "Gunfight at O.K. Corral" (Par) (4th wk), $20,000, for one of heftiest engagements here in months. "Pride" was getting $2.50 as general admission at night on Saturday and Sunday. It will be among three or four biggest pix to play the Cap.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; $1.80-$3.30)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (34th wk). This round winding tomorrow (Thurs.) is headed for great $45,000 in 17 shows. The 33d week was $38,000 for 15 shows. Continues indef.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—"Torero" (Col) (7th wk). Sixth frame concluded Monday (1) was solid $9,500. Fifth was $8,300.

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50)—"Face in Crowd" (WB) (6th wk). Fifth round ended last night (Tues.) was fine $9,500 or near. Fourth was $11,400.

Guild (Guild) (450: $1-$1.75) — "Green Man" (DCA) (7th wk). Sixth stanza finished yesterday (Tues.) was socko $10,000 after $9,500 in fifth round.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 79-$1.80) — "Delicate Delinquent" (Par). Opens today (Wed.). In ahead. "Scandal in Sorrento" (DCA) (3d wk), landed mild $7,500 despite previews.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; 95-$1.80)—"Miller's Beautiful Daughter" (DCA) (4th wk). Third session finished Monday (1) was trim $5,000. Second week, $7,500. "Bambi" (BV) (reissue) due in next.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 50-$1.60)—"Seventh Sin" (M-G) and vaude. Week ending today (Wed.) looks to hit nice $14,000 in 6 days. Last week, "Dino" (AA) and vaudeville $16,000.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Beginning of End" (Rep) with Rock 'n' Roll stageshow. Opens today (Wed.), the film being the first AB-PT screen production. Last week, "The D. I." (WB) (4th wk), was fair $23,000 same in third stanza.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80)—"Fernandel the Dressmaker" (Indie). Opened Saturday (29), with very good biz. In ahead, "Julietta" (Kings) (2d wk-5 days), lean $2,800 after $6,000 in first week.

Radio City Music Hall (Rockefellers) (6,200; 95-$2.85)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB) and stageshow (3d wk). This session winding today (Wed.) is heading for great $142,000. Second week was $145,000. Stays on for some time, especially in view of its stamina. Hall had biggest weekday of engagement last Wednesday (26).

Rivoli (UAT) (1,545; $1.25-$3.50)—"Around World" (UA) (38th wk). The 37th week concluded last night (Tues.) was capacity $37,100 in 10 shows. Previous week was the same for like number of performances.

Plaza (Brecher) (525; $1.50-$2)—"Happy Road" (M-G) (2d wk).

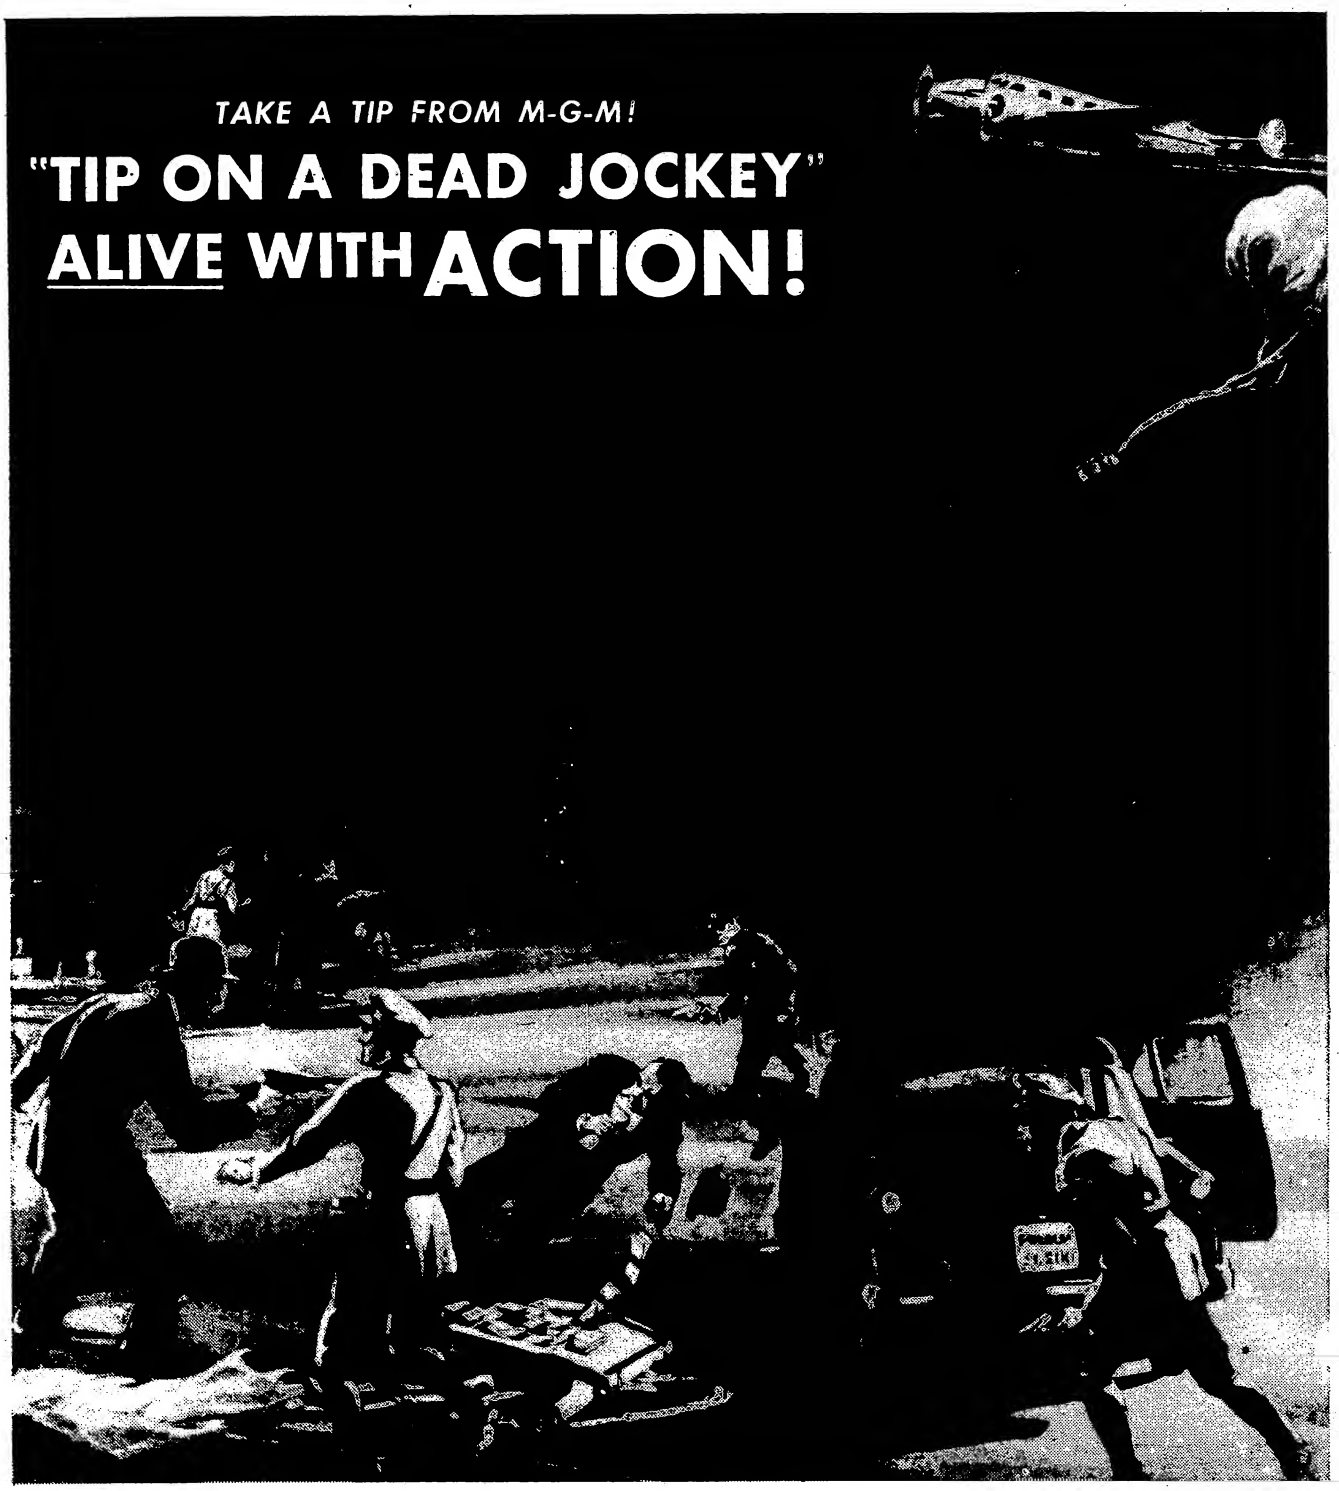
Larkin (Rosener) (400; $1.25)—"Green Man" (DCA). Excellent $5,200. Last week, "Gate of Hell" (Indie) (reissue) (2d wk), $1,500.

Clay (Rosener) (400; $1.25)—"Fernandel Dressmaker" (Indie) (3d wk). Big $3,000. Last week, ditto.



Vogue (S.F. Theatres) (364; $1.25)—"Gold of Naples" (DCA) (5th wk). Hep $3,000. Last week, same.

Bridge (Schwarz) (396; $1.25)—"Nana" (Times) (5th wk). Oke $2,200. Last week, $1,500.

Coronet (United California) (1,250; $1.50-$3.75) — "Around World In 80 Days" (UA) (27th wk). Terrific $27,000. Last week, $25,000.

Hint Italians May Blame U. S. Major Cos. If Exhib-Distrib Confabs Fail

Rome, June 25.

Indication that Italians plan to place the blame for a potential breakdown of current distributor-exhibitor negotiations for a new pact squarely on the American companies is contained in the latest issue of the official AGIS organ, Giornale dello Spettacolo.

While the head on the story regarding the talks indicates that a solution is imminent, the text speaks of "not improbable" changes of mind or even turnabouts of position which would prejudice approval of the pact. It claims this would be especially due to the work of Yank major company reps who, the text ironically goes on, "must, it seems, draw their inspiration in the matter from directives issued in New York or Paris."

The AGIS bulletin admits to considerable controversy in the sector of "exceptional film" rentals (naming three pix for consideration in this category: "Around World in 80 Days" (UA), "10 Commandments" (Par) and Chaplin's "A King in New York").

Still according to the AGIS source, there is general agreement to rental term (one-fourth of company quotas at 50%, plus three Italian pix; three-quarters of company quotas at 40%), publicity expenses regulation, aid to small exhibs, as well as to the formation of a committee of vigilance (ANICA-AGIS) governing joint disputes.

Story also hints that if agreement on the above is not reached before June 30 (after almost six months of confabs), AGIS would be forced by law to ask for government takeover of the dispute.

Additional Italo Cities May Close Certain Days Like Naples' Shutdown

Rome, June 25.

While the Italian press continues to talk up the argument that the closing of all Naples film houses every Wednesday is an exhibitor protest move, it appears likely that other regions of the boot of Italy will follow the Neapolitan example. The exhib group governing houses in the Lazio region (Rome and surrounding provinces) has just voted an order of the day calling for the "gradual" shutdown of minor showcases in the area, leading to a wider closing of these houses even for several days a week. Unaffected are the first-runs, especially in Rome proper.

Meanwhile, reports from Liguria (Genoa and provinces along the Riviera) indicate that exhibs there are seriously considering a closure order for one or more days a week, affecting all 500 pic houses in that crowded region.

Vincenzo Barattolo, head of Naples AGIS (exhib), has just backed his edict closing Naples' 115 cinemas with the following statistics and comment. According to Barattolo, while since January 1956, the decline in attendance in other Italo centers has been around 15-20%, the Neapolitan drop at one point reached 42%. He cited five points as the major reasons for the current Naples exhib plight. Film houses begin to empty at 8 p.m., when tv starts. Naples is the city which, compared to its economic level, has the most tele sets. The cost of tickets has increased because of high taxes.

Italo to Moscow Fest

Rome, June 25.

A number of Italian directors and producers have agreed to attend the upcoming sixth World Youth Festival, to be held in Moscow July 29-Aug. 11.

Event has a subsection devoted to features, documentaries, and amateur films by directors under 35 years of age.

Mex Spieler Goes 80 Hours

Mexico City, June 25.

Current marathon announcer champ of Mexico is Carlos Cardona, a sturdy youngster of Mexicali, on the California border. He spieled for 80 hours, his goal, and raised $36,000 for Mexicali's Red Cross.

Finished, he had coffee and resumed his regular mike chore.

Sir Alex King Honored By Glasgow University

Glasgow, July 2.

Sir Alexander King, Scot cinema magnate has received a top honor, the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws at Glasgow University. King teed off in show biz as a 12-year-old theatre program seller in the old Princess's Theatre here.

Citation said his university had been a theatre by night and a desk in local shipping offices by day. He had gained fame "by imagination, enterprise, hard work, and the kindness and hospitality with which he maintains the finest traditions of the city of Glasgow."

Mex Tourist Biz Ahead of 1956

Mexico City, June 25.

April was far ahead in number of tourist visitors and their spending as compared with the same month last year, reported the Mexican Tourist Assn. (AMT). There were 42,076 trippers in April this year who spent $39,000,000. The 36,101 tourists in April of 1956 left behind $24,000,000, said AMT.

However, local hotelmen complain of the current biz doldrums which they attribute to an alarming paucity of visiting foreigners. Reports are that there is such a guest scarcity that the big, swank new modernesque inns and business are not even making expenses.

Hotel operators explain the seeming paradox of their complaints about under par trade and announcements by tourism brass that things are as good as they ever were, with agreement that the actual number tourists now is about the same as it was at this time during in recent years. However, they say spending of the current trippers is much less, and this is so apparent when many spurn the higher priced hotels, cafes, stores, etc. According to the hostelers, thousands of Americans have come to visit Mexico on far less than they normally spend at home.

3 COUNTRIES PLAN TO FILM TOLSTOI YARN

Frankfurt, June 25.

Following in the wake of Paramount's success in filming the Tolstoi novel, "War and Peace," three European countries are climbing on the Tolstoi bandwagon to do a huge co-production on another book by the Russian, "The Resurrection."

The Tolstoi novel is to be adapted for a film to be shot this year by companies in Germany, Italy and France. Bavaria Films, representing German interests, are underwriting 50% of the production costs, and the remainder is split between Rizzoli of Italy and Loureau of France. Horst Buchholz, top young star in Germany, has the lead.

Wanamaker Plans To Revive Theatre Club

Liverpool, July 2.

Sam Wanamaker, U. S. actor-manager, plans to revive the Pigalle Theatre Club here. Operation, with liabilities of $180,000, recently went into voluntary liquidation. Formerly the Shakespeare vaudery, it was formed as a theatre club a year ago, with membership of more than 6,000.

Wanamaker plans to revive interest with a presentation of Arthur Miller's "A View from the Bridge" starting Sept. 16. Original cast as seen in London will be pacted where possible. Plan is similar to one for hypoing interest in the Citizens' Theatre, Glasgow, where the Arthur Miller play will also be produced Sept. 1.

Plays not unlike those produced at the Watergate Theatre Club, Comedy Theatre, London, are planned.

New Plan for Japanese Nat'l Theatre in Tokyo

Tokyo, June 25.

Demands for a Japanese national theatre are again being heard, and a plan is now being promoted by members of the Diet, as well as performers and intellectuals for such a building in Tokyo. The proposed setup would involve a theatre with 32,000 square yards of floor space, including facilities for opera, kabuki, Bunraku puppets and a school for actors.

A council of promoters will be set up to obtain government aid for the project.

Yank Pix Made In Brit. Still Get Levy Help

London, July 2.

Pictures made in Britain with American finance will still be elgible for levy benefits. The regulations covering the statutory Production Levy, which are due to go into operation Oct. 20, have just been released, and do not make any changes about the type of product which will be entitled to support from the British Film Production Fund. In the main, the regulations governing the statutory levy, follow closely the pattern set by its voluntary predecessor.

The main impact of the regulations will be felt by the large picture houses, who will have to bear the major brunt of levy collection from their admissions. The smaller houses will have less to shell out. There will be no levy on seats below 12c. Above that, they will rise in stages from a quarter of a cent on gross prices up to 18c to 1¾c on gross prices of 40c and above.

Theatres which will be eligible for exemption from levy dues will be those exempted from admissions tax and those with net takings less than $420 a week.

There is strong disappointment here among producers of second features, who through the British Film Producers Assn. pressed their claim for special treatment in the form of a double allowance for their product. There are no provisions for this in the regulations.

The British Film Fund Agency is empowered to determine the amount which, in its opinion, should be payable for each picture in a program rented from the same distributor. This applies whether the pictures are under the same contract or not. Provision is made that where payment is made in respect of a picture that is subsequently found to be a telefilm, the payment may be recovered as a contract debt in court.

INT'L EXHIBS SELECT DUTCHMAN AS PREXY

Rome, July 2.

The UIEC (International Exhibitors Assn.) assembly concluded its work at The Hague this week by voting the Dutch delegate, Miedema, its new president. Italo Gemini, Italo exhib topper, declined renewal of his presidential post after two years in office, feeling that regular change in the top charge would benefit the association. Vincenzo Barattolo, another Italian exhib official, was voted veepee by the delegates present (from France, Italy, Spain, West Germany, Holland, Belgium, Austria and Great Britain).

Next UIEC meet will be held in Madrid, Oct. 16-18. A special committee has been named meanwhile to study the problem of exhib-producer relations, to be a main topic at the Madrid conclave.

Principal business discussed at The Hague meeting were: (1) rental terms, higher ones were opposed, especially "exceptional pictures"; (2) relationship with tv; (3) lowering of government taxes on admissions; (4) special films for children; (5) appeal to producers to better technical, artistic and moral standards. Reference to moral standards was made in several speeches during the meeting.

Arg. Exhibs Catch Up on Backlog Of Old Pix; Govt. Stalling Annoys

Buenos Aires, June 25.

By dint of quick turnover of release, some 10 to 12 weekly, exhibitors here and throughout Argentina have caught up with the big backlog of foreign films kept out of circulation by Peron's strict regulations. And Buenos Aires is now well abreast of latest films from over the world. "Friendly Persuasion" (AA) was launched recently at the Gran Rex soon after its Cannes Film Fest award. Film ran three weeks.

Biz is uniformly good this winter both in first-runs and nabe theatres. In fact, there doesn't seem enough houses to handle the patrons. Scalping still prevails and likely will continue until there are more cinemas or admission scales are tilted. The price boost may not come until sometime in July. And exhibs are annoyed over the slow-motions of the government in authorizing these promised price boosts.

They also are infuriated by the National Screen Institute's bland assumption of jurisdiction over their biz under the new Film Law, which they describe as nearly as bad as under Peron. Antonio Aita, now prexy of the new Screen Institute, has dictated what exhibs "must" show and how they must split their playing time. Exhibs, of course, hope that the Supreme Court will halt this dictatorship and that the 27 clauses of the Film Law will be revoked.

It's pointed out that the Film Law forces exhibs to help producers although the exhibitors pay far more taxes to the state. And not all provinces have agreed to accept the 10% Screen Institute boxoffice tax.

Once the sliding admish scales are set, and the higher ducat prices for deluxe first-runs and central nabes, biz in lesser houses should improve and relieve congestion in the uptown district houses.

Besides "Persuasion," "Solid Gold Cadillac" (Col), "Prince of Players" (20th), "Opposite Sex" (M-G) and "Blood Alley" (WB) are either playing or about to open. Oddly enough the biggest American film impact was made by "Rock Around Clock" (Col) because Bill Haley and the Platters won disk attention here before the pix opened. That does not mean that other U.S. pix did not score. Among the hits were "Written on Wind" (U), "Guys and Dolls" (M-G), "I'll Cry Tomorrow" (M-G), "Mister Roberts" (WB), "Eddy Duchin" (Col), "Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par), "Man in Gray Flannel Suit" (20th), "Golden Arm" (UA) and "Bus Stop" (20th).

Sadler's Wells Ballet In 3-Week London Run

London, July 2.

The Old Sadler's Wells Theatre Ballet Company, now part of the Royal Ballet, open a three-week season at Sadler's Wells Theatre tonight (Tuesday), after completing a tour of the Continent. This will mark the final season to be presented under the administration of Sadler's Wells Theatre. It will also be the Company's first appearance here for over a year. Starting in September, the Company will be under the wing of Covent Garden.

Ballets to be presented during this season will be Andree Howard's "La Fete Etrange," Frederick Ashton's "Apparitions" and a new production of "Gisselle."

Naples Ends Wed. Cinema Closings

Naples, June 25.

After three weeks of strictly enforced Wednesday pic theatre shutdown here, the edict was suddenly and unexpectedly lifted here today by the local AGIS (exhib) toppers. Move was made following a plea by the provincial governor of the Naples area, and is termed "temporary."

In his petition, the governor noted that the shutterings had caused an adverse effect both on the Naples populace, deprived of its film fare for three Wednesdays in a row, and on employees of the theatres since it meant a drop in salaries for them.

Naples' AGIS, in "temporarily" suspending the shutdown edict, reserved itself all future decisions on the matter following due consideration. It's felt here that pressure from the labor unions involved, rather than spectator complaints, are behind the Naples governor's plea for reconsideration of the drastic measure.

'LOOK OUT GIRLS' HELD UP BY PARIS CENSORS

Paris, July 2.

Filmgoers on the lookout for the Gallic pic, "Look Out Girls" (Mefiez Vous Fillettes), were puzzled this week because it never appeared in any of the three big houses where advertised to play. Film had been a "forbidden to those under 16" category pic, but the Censorship Control Committee, under the Centre Du Cinema reversed itself, declared the pic immoral and held up release until many cuts were made.

Producer Robert Dorfmann is now meeting with reps of the Ministry of Information in a last chance to overrule the CCC and get his pic out after his big pub expense. Meanwhile a U.S. western was substituted in the three cinemas.

Pic is a detective-gangster actioner. It stars Antonella Lualdi, Robert Hossein, Andre Luguet and a batch of top Gallic starlet lookers. It concerns an innocent young girl who gets mixed up with the underworld, and it delves into the seedy side of criminal practices.

Com'l Tele for BFA Annual Film Awards

London, July 2.

Presentation of the British Film Academy annual awards, which will take place at the Odeon, Leicester Square, July 11, will be covered by Associate-Rediffusion, the London weekday commercial tv programmers, for airing the following night. This will be the first time that commercial tv will have filmed the event.

Leslie Mitchell will be on stage to emcee the show. Script for the A-R 45-minute transmission will be written by Peter Hunt. Program will be produced and directed by Ray Dicks.

MPEA Embargo on U. S. Pix Showing in Spain Going Into 22d Month

Madrid, June 25.

As the Motion Picture Export Assn. embargo of the Spanish market enters its 22d month, there is evidence that Spain has reached the bottom of the Italian barrel in a search for screen fare substitutes. Five openings in Madrid last night (June 17) failed to turn up either a Yank or Italo film, and the swing now seems to be heading in the direction of England.

With preeming last night of Herbert Wilcox' "King's Rhapsody" starring Errol Flynn and J. Arthur Rank's "Mad About Men," there will be a record total of four British pix in first-runs at the same time. Robert Sparks' production, "Scotland Yard," opened last week and a Michael Redgrave starrer, "The Green Scarf," is now in its third week.

Germany is represented in the current batch of openers via "The Princess and the Captain." Another Rhinelander coming in this week is "Empress Sissi." France lends moderate product support this week with "The Vagabond Prince." Gallic "Diaboliques" is now in its eighth socko week at the Capitol.

Only one Spanish pic has shown any stamina since the year dawned but that one pic, "El Ultimo Cuple" (The Last Song) is now in its seventh smash week at the Rialto.

Madrid Neutrals See Yanks Fluffing Dale Carnegie Act at San Sebastian

(Editor's note on the story which follows: In Manhattan, the Motion Picture Export Assn. is now "reconsidering" participation at the San Sebastian Film Festival on a plea to do so from the Spaniards. This new willingness reflects partial acceptance of the argument that American presence will demonstrate good will an important consideration in the continuing disagreement between the two lands).

Madrid, July 2.

The breakdown of distrib negotiations between Spain and the Motion Picture Export Assn. had given rise to a belief among film observers here that MPEA should launch a "public relations" campaign in Spain during the continuing deadlock months for added strength when talks are ultimately resumed late this year.

Upcoming Int'l Film Festival at San Sebastian, it is felt, could provide the jump-off for such a campaign and regret is voiced that a festival invitation to the Motion Picture Ass'n of America was turned down by Griffith Johnson on the grounds ". . . this association and its member companies do not now have facilities for the importation and distribution of films in Spain."

Observers here, admitting the Eric Johnston organization try for agreement in recent parleys was all give and no get, say MPEA can now achieve far more via astute public relations than could ever be achieved by another indefinite petulant withdrawal.

San Sebastian is the summer home of the Franco Government and film fest will draw government cream, including those ministers whose final consent is needed in an eventual Spain-MPEA entente. San Sebastian will also host the big majority of the nation's film critics, fan mag editors, assorted film scribes, radio babblers and telefilmers. All branches of the Spanish film industry will be prominently represented, including sectors close to the U. S. distribs.

As evaluated here, the July 21-28 film event offers MPEA a plum for making friends, consolidating the pro - Hollywood predilection of Spain moviegoers and counteracting the bad press MPEA has had here throughout the impasse.

Those smart to Spanish ways say a U. S. VIP delegation sprinkled with Hollywood stars and handled with U. S. public relations knowhow could do more to restore U. S. distrib positions in Spain than a bundle of parleys with the self-serving Madrid distributors.

Absence of MPEA at San Sebastian, on the contrary, may bring renewed charges of "vengeance treatment" and give further credence to press tales here of film overlords in New York who only play ball after writing their own game rules.

N.J. Fire Destroys Priceless Films

Middlesex, N. J., July 2.

Priceless films stored by major motion picture companies in a vault at the United Storage Corp., Lincoln Blvd., were lost in a fire attributed to heat and spontaneous combustion today. The vault is located on property formerly occupied by the Pathe Film Laboratories Inc., but now used by the storage firm.

Joseph Hoey, vault manager, said both positive and negative prints had been stored in the vault and that damage would run to "thousands of dollars." He declined to estimate the actual loss, saying that the worth of the films would depend on the value put on them by the owners. But he described them as "priceless."

The Fire Dept. reported that one of the films lost was "The Last of the Mohicans."

Four volunteer fire companies were on the scene for an hour after the temperature rise had triggered a sprinkler system and sounded an alarm at police headquarters.

Critic Turned Publicist

Burlington, Vt., July 2.

A gal who used to see 350 features a year says movie producers have risen to the challenge of television and that motion pictures are here to stay.

Helen Popkavich, film critic that was of the now defunct Boston Post and current press-agenting for a producing company, voiced her opinions on a visit here during a swing around New England.

"A woman doesn't buy a new hat to sit in front of the television," Miss Popkovich declared. "She's been home all day, and she wants to get out of the house at night.

"And now to a drive-in. May I say drive-ins aren't air-conditioned?"

SET UP STUDY GROUP ON 'RECREATION' WAGES

Albany, July 2.

Appointment of a nine-member Minimum Wage Board, to review standards in the amusement and recreation industry, was made Monday (1) by State Industrial Commissioner Isador Lubin.

Labor representatives are: Michael J. Mungovan, of Albion, for IATSE; Alfred Harding, of New York, for Actors' Equity; Thomas Shortman, New York, vice-president, Local 328, Building Service Employees Union.

Chairman of the Board and one of the three public members is Paul R. Hayes, professor of Law, Columbia U.

Emanuel Frisch, of Neponsit, chairman of the Board of the Metropolitan Motion Picture Theatres Assn., Joseph Geist, of Belle Harbor, president-owner of Rockaway's Playland, and Reuben A. Dankoff, Rochester bowling alley owner, represent management.

The current minimum wage standards for the industry, established in April, 1951, fixed an hourly minimum of 75c for workers—with some variations based on size of community or specific occupations. Ushers, at 50c and 55c, are the lowest paid.

Held Off in Illinois

Springfield, Ill., July 2.

Opposition of exhibitor groups helped to defeat two bills voted down by committees of the Illinois State legislature last week.

A measure providing for a minimum wage of 75c for all employees in the state was defeated in the Senate Committee on Industrial Affairs by a vote of seven to four. Appearing before the committee on behalf of the Illinois theatres were Ralph Lawler, president of the United Theatres of Illinois; George Kerasotas, chairman of the board, the Duncan Kennedy, head of Publix-Great States Theatres.

A bill calling for county censorship of films and other entertainment was defeated by the close vote of seven to six by the License and Miscellany Committee. Appearing before this group were Kerasotes, J. B. Giachetto, Frisina Amusement Co., and Jack Kirsch, Allied Theatres of Illinois.

3 PHILLY HOUSES SOLD

Ellis Acquires Roosevelt, Nixon and Tower (3,119-Seater)

Philadelphia, July 2.

All capital stock of the TNFR Realty Co., including three of the area's largest nabes were sold in a $1,500,000 stock deal to the Amel Theatres Co., of which A. M. Ellis is president. Transaction was negotiated by Lionel Friedman, Strouse, Greenberg & Co.

Included in the settlement were the 1,800 seater Roosevelt; the Nixon with 1,870 seats and the 3,119 seat Tower, second only to the midtown Mastbaum (4,370). All three houses are under long-term leases negotiated by the Friedman firm to Paramount Pictures Corp., which will continue to operate them.

TNFR Realty has owned the properties since 1935, when they were purchased from the Freihofer and Nirdlinger estates.

Newman-Leckebush-Runge To Handle American Indie Releases for Germany

New distributing outfit has been formed in Germany by a group headed by Henry Newman who previously was with United Artists' foreign department at its homeoffice. Company, to be known as Film Import, G.M.B.H., will specialize in release of independently produced American pictures.

Associated with Newman in the venture are Dr. Walter Leckebush, a German film pioneer, and Guenther Runge, formerly a sales exec with several of the American majors, Leckebush has distribution facilities throughout Germany and Austria as well as a dubbing studio with headquarters in Munich.

Six films are currently set for release. Deals are underway for 12 more pix for 1958 distribution. Already pacted is an exclusive arrangement with Alexander Beck Films under which the latter's product will be handled in Germany by Film Import. Beck will also rep the German distrib in respect to acquisition of fresh pix

Film Import has already established offices in Frankfurt, Berlin, Munich and Hamburg. Newman, whose in charge of all purchasing, recently arrived in New York on a product-buying mission and returns to Germany shortly. Runge has been named sales chief for the company. He'll headquarter in Hamburg.

KRAMER FILM'S MANUAL

160 Pages of Matter Supporting 'Pride & Passion'

A feature manual for Stanley Kramer's "The Pride and the Passion," containing 160 pages of editorial matter plus a set of 11x14 stills, is being distributed by United Artists this week to 2,000 editors and exhibitors.

Promotional piece is packaged with a color cover illustrated with head drawings of the stars—Cary Grant, Frank Sinatra and Sophia Loren. Manual contains a tab index listing 31 categories of stories—by-liners, features, column items, biographies and fillers.

Pre-Releasing, Then Withdrawing From Market, Called Evasion Of Decree in Philly Suit

Federal Court suit instituted by a group of Philadelphia exhibitors against Paramount places under judicial scrutiny a distributor practice that has drawn exhibitor beefs since the antitrust decrees were first entered almost 10 years ago.

There is to be "reasonable" clearance between runs, and the distributor is enjoined from setting admission prices, according to the judgments. Yet, by the method of inviting bids on the big pictures the distrib, where epic-sized product is involved, actually obtains upped admission scales.

And the pre-release system—limited runs and then withdrawing a picture from release—means the second-run theatre owner has what many consider an "unreasonable" wait for the choice pictures.

The case in Philadelphia revolves around "Ten Commandments." It played first run, as per usual, and Par thereupon set up bidding among the second runs, five of which were to be awarded the picture. This was carrying the pre-release idea too far, complained competitor exhibs. They sued.

Intriguing to the trade is the extent to which a film company may call the turns on sale of its own pictures. The first round went to Par, for the apparent reason that a vast amount of production money (about $13,000,000) was at stake and special sales treatment was in order. Move for an injunction against the company was denied.

However, there are some basic principles involved and many in the trade are watching the Philly courtroom contest for some precedents. The ultimate decisions, it's expected, ought to make clear the amount of freedom a film company actually has. If that freedom is too limited, it could discourage elaborately budgeted pictures in the future.

Homefolksy Borgias

Minneapolis, July 2.

The local neighborhood "fine arts" Avalon's newspaper ad for "Lucrezia Borgia," containing the line "coffee and cookies served" under the film's title, caused Minneapolis Morning Tribune columnist George Grim to reminisce.

"Now, as I remember the Borgia family," commented Grim, "they also had a habit of serving refreshments."

FLAUD HITS HANDLING OF CANNES FILM FEST

Paris, June 25.

Jacques Flaud, head of the governmental Centre Du Cinema, is giving the recent Cannes Film Festival (May 2-17) a black mark in his report to the Ministry of Commerce and Industry. He feels that Cannes, although still the top international competitive fest, lost much of its prestige this year because of sloppy organization and lacklustre choice of films.

Flaud maintains that prexy Robert Favre Le Bret's assertions about the need for more money are false. He feels that the fault is in the poor preparation, and lack of more careful screening of newspapermen so as not to overlook the important ones.

Flaud also says that even if the fest is a diplomatic affair the festival has a right to turn down unsuitable entries. This was not exercised this year with too many mediocre films shown. He also feels that personalities should be decided upon well in advance so as to avoid any confusion as happened this year. The commercial side is also an important part of the fest to Flaud, and he feels that on this score it again made a good showing this year.

40,000-Feet Shot to Ad-Pub Order

$250,000 Budget to Make Maximum Use of Ceylon Background of Columbia's 'River Kwai'

Forty thousand feet of special background footage, to be employed for a unique promotion campaign, was shot by producer Sam Spiegel during the production of "The Bridge on the River Kwai," which was completely filmed on location in Ceylon. Columbia, which is releasing the film, has allocated a budget of $250,000 for the preparation and distribution of the special films.

Aim is to convert the raw footage into promotional tools for use in theatres, on video, in schools and colleges, and in clubs and organizations. None of the extra film has been extracted from the actual production.

Columbia and Spiegel called the press to Col's homeoffice projection room Friday (26) to show the special films and to outline the plans for their use. According to Spiegel, who returned to London over the weekend, "this was not just random shooting." The producer said that long before the picture went into production, the shooting script was analyzed by the pub-ad staffers who developed film stories for television and theatrical use. A special unit consisting of a cameraman and a writer covered every phase of the production during "Kwai's" ten months of shooting.

When the editing is completed, Spiegel stated, Col will have special stories on film angled for news, women's, children's and interview shows as well as footage for club and school usage. "In the past, the industry has seldom used motion picture film to full advantage in merchandising important pictures," Spiegel said.

Portion of the special footage shown the press included the building of a bridge, the effect of a Hollywood film unit on the native population, the arrival on location of the stars (William Holden, Alec Guinness, Jack Hawkins, Sessue Hayakawa, Geoffrey Horne, Ann Sears and several Siamese actresses), the stars and unit members at work and play, fashion shows using Sinhalese models and fashions, the preparations for the blowing up of the bridge, and the logistic problems of making a picture in a remote area.

Some of the footage shown to the press has already been edited into three and a half minute newsreel clips which have been spotted on tv and in theatres. Several special stories were produced by the unit for tieups with specific tv shows. For example, a clip, featuring Alec Guinness and showing scenes in Ceylon, was employed as a basis for a question on tv's "Break the Bank."

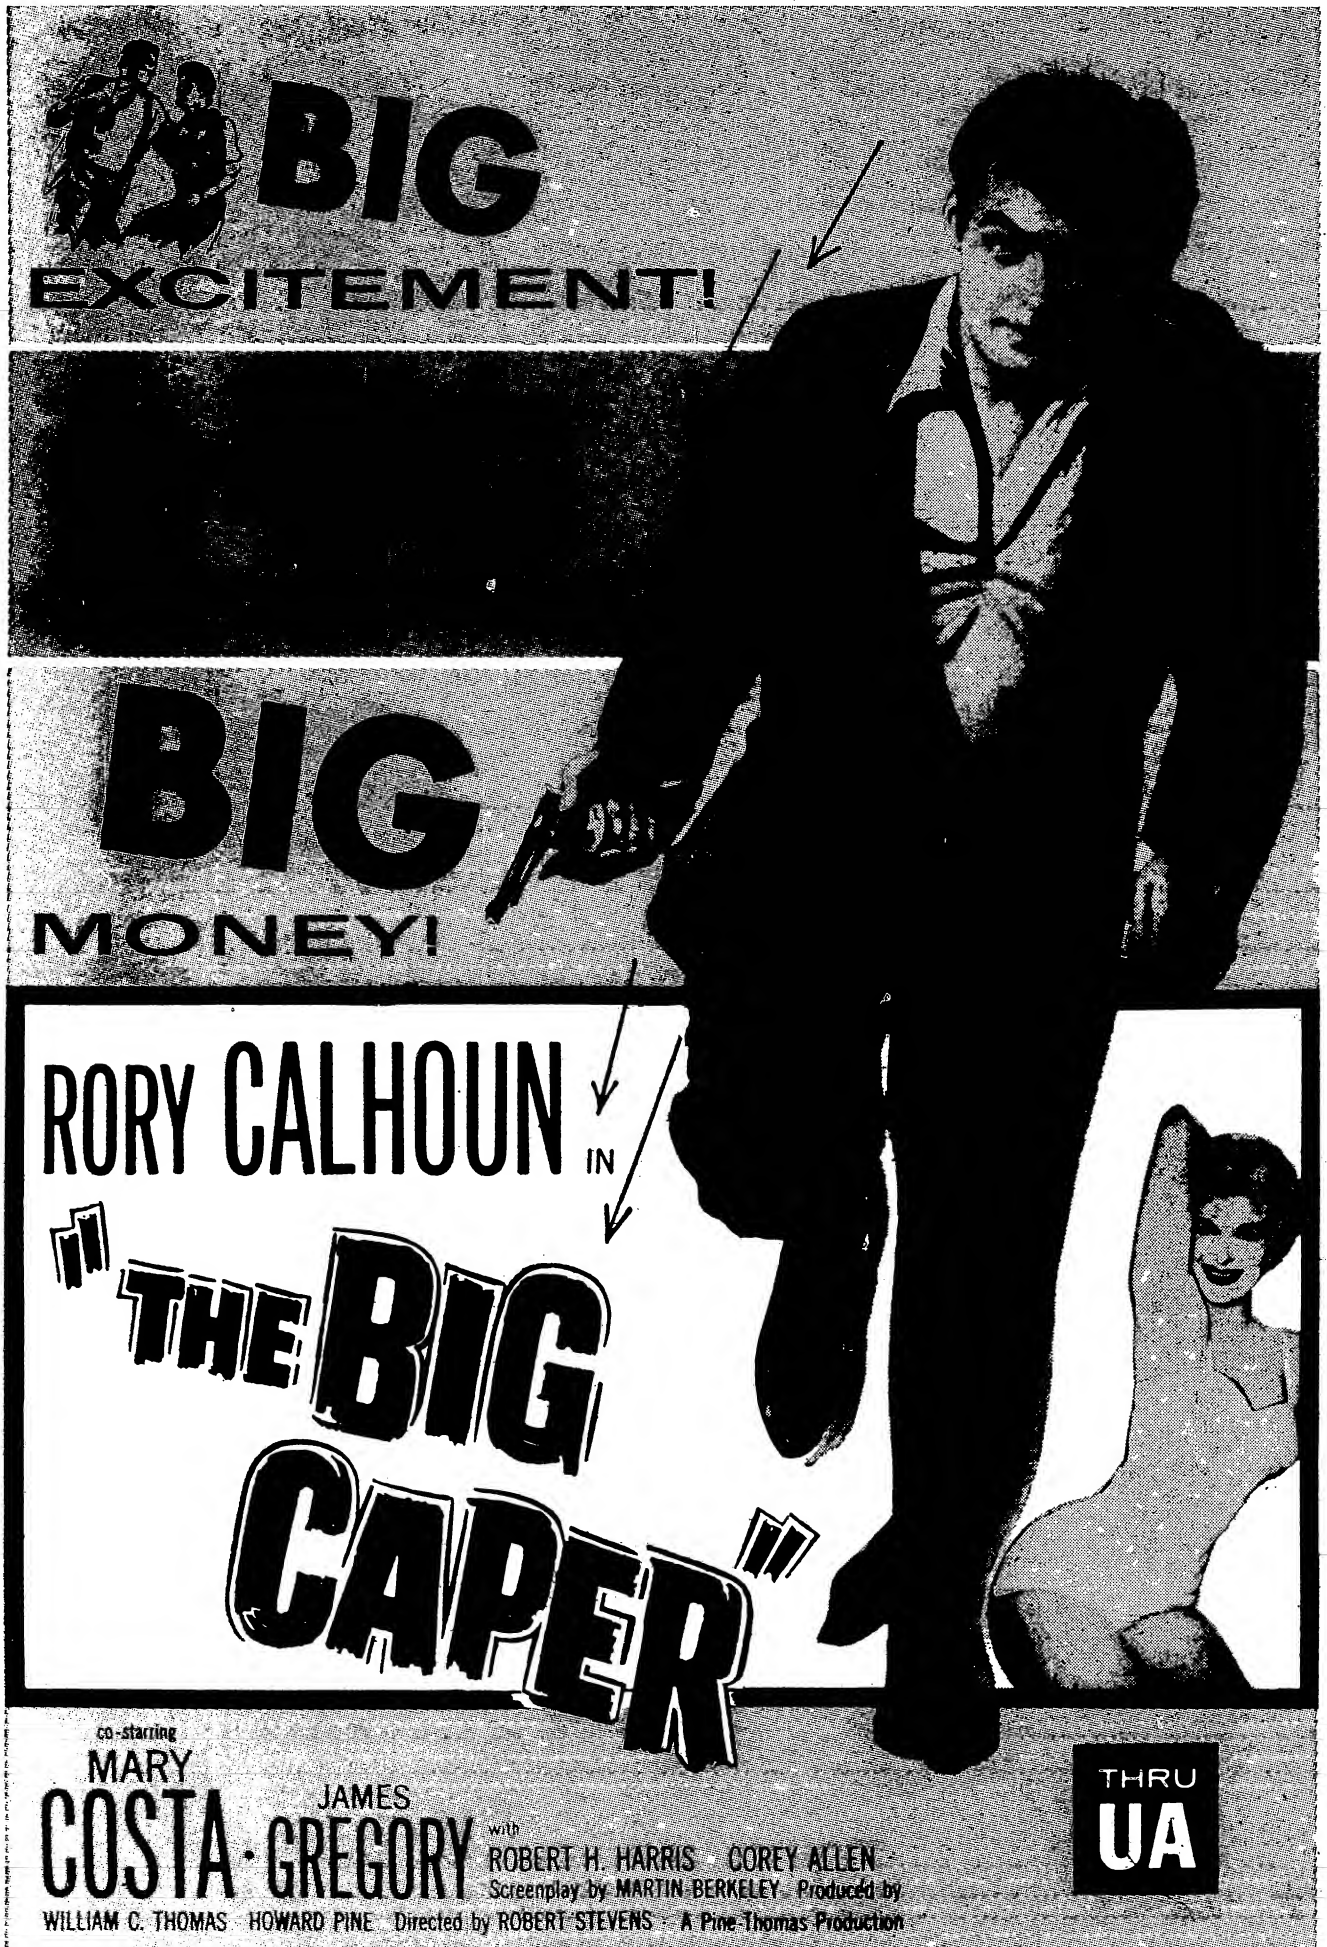
The raw footage is being edited in London by director David Lean who will convert it into two separate featurettes, a half-hour and 15-minute subject for use in theatres and television. Spiegel, with the assistance of William Holden, who was in New York to confer to Col officials, served as narrators for the raw footage.

As another promotional stunt, a print of the raw footage will be turned over to a university that has a motion picture course. Students will be asked, as a classroom exercise, to edit the material for a documentary film.

TOA Memo Under Federal Study

Theatre Owners of America has been notified by Rep. Abraham Multer, chairman of the subcommittee of the Small Business Administration Committee, that the exhibitor organization's memorandum relating to government loans for theatres has been turned over to the subcommittee's counsel, Irving Mannis, "for proper analysis."

According to TOA, Rep. Multer expressed interest in the memorandum on behalf of the motion picture industry. In all probability, TOA will appear before the committee again to voice its view to obtain strong legislation for easing the loan requirements of the SBA.



Meanwhile, high praise for the accomplishment of Philip Harling, who prepared the memorandum, in obtaining promises of greater aid for film interests from the Senate Small Business Committee was voiced by Sam Pinanski in a statement issued through the Council of Motion Picture Organizations office.

Connell-Giordino Await Referee's Decision In Fight Against Turndown

Albany, July 2.

Official Referee Christopher J. Heffernan reserved decision in an action by James H. Connell and James Giordino, operators of a Troy gasoline service station, to force the Town of Brunswick to issue them a permit for construction of a $62,000 drive-in theatre in Haynersville, five miles outside Troy.

Through Attorney John F. Lucey, of Albany, the pair told Heffernan Thursday (27) that they purchased a 16 - acre tract on Troy - Hoosick Falls Road, for $16,000. After spending considerable amounts for architectural and engineering fees, the Trojans applied to the Town Board for a permit and were refused.

Stanton Speaks Up

safely trusted to hear everything true and false and to form a correct judgment between them.' If we do not believe this, there is no hope for a free press. Indeed there will be no use for it, because there will be no free society for it to serve.

Exposing People to Ideas

"It seems to me that you either accept Jefferson's proposition or you reject it. It cannot be watered down. You can't say that it's all right for some people to be exposed to ideas or personalities but it's dangerous for others to be so exposed. You can't say the people can be trusted once in a while or almost all the time. Once you start doing that, who is going to make the exceptions and on what grounds?"

Specifically citing the Khrushchev interview, Stanton said that in pushing for it, "we were as much aware of our responsibility as we were of our freedom. We were doing our job as journalists. Khrushchev and his views are of great importance to our world and to the world of our children. The less this man—or any man of his importance—remains a myth or a dark legend or a mystery to the American people, the more certain they are to size him up correctly."

Turning to the right to editorialize, Stanton admitted CBS has moved slowly in on-the-air editorializing but declared that "we know very well that we will have not achieved full stature in journalism until, having found the proper solution, we exercise fully and wisely as possible our right to editorialize." He said the web has moved slowly on the matter because it involves "a whole cluster of problems that call for much wiser solutions than we now have, and not until they are found do we at CBS feel that we can exercise this significant right fully and in the public interest."

He cited as the problems the fact that editorializing is a new function for broadcast media, as compared with newspapers which "historically were organs of opinion primarily and organs of news secondarily"; that newspapers are under control of a single ownership whereas a network comprises independently owned affiliates, and "without resorting to cumbersome procedures of pre-screening, it would be most difficult to take editorial positions acceptable to all our affiliated stations—positions for which they as licensee would be willing to accept responsibility."

Stanton rejected the two other methods of maintaining editorial balance—the socalled "spectrum" method employed by ABC of using commentators of varying political positions, and the use by regular newsmen of editorial comment. He said the spectrum method "provides no assurance of fairness and balance on particular issues." As to the use of newsmen as editorialists, he declared that "reporting and editorializing are separate and quite distinct functions" and that "intermingling the two enervates them both."

Yank Films Still Top Aussie B.O.; 'Anastasia,' 'Peace,' 'Giant' Leaders

Sydney, June 25.

Winter span coast-to-coast sees film biz maintaining a very even tempo as solid fare is preemed from the U.S. and Britain. Major chain executives are reported as highly satisfied with financial results as the year's first half ends.

"You Can't Run Away From It" (Col) is smash on initial week at the State for Greater Union Theatres here. "Anastasia" (20th) is in its fourth month for Hoyts. "Giant" (WB) looks a cinch for longrun, with "War and Peace", (Par) okay on three-a-day. Others marqueed include "Calypso Heatwave" (Col), "Wrong Man" (WB), "Friendly Persuasion" (AA), "Designing Woman" (M-G), "Burning Hills" (WB) and "Three Brave Men" (20th). Foreign pix include "The Fiends" (Kapferer) and "Toto, the Toreador" (Kapferer).

Alabama & Ga. Get A Fill-In on Pay-See; Sindlinger Very Cheerful

Atlanta, July 2.

Alabama and Georgia theatre owners and operators, assembled in convention here, got the pitch on pay-see telvision from Z. H. Garfield, president of Jarrold Electronics Corp., of New York. Not too many of them were too happy over what they heard.

Jarrold pointed out that there is a place in the industry for "cable theatres" in the home as well as television and motion pictures theatres. He said, however, that the new system is not necessarily a threat to any other branch of the industry.

He described the process in a talk to the joint annual convention of the Alabama Theatres Assn. and the Motion Picture Owners and Operators of Georgia held at the Dinkler Plaza Hotel last week.

Garfield said an experiment now being conducted by his company in Bartlesville, Okla., has proved motion pictures can be transmitted via coaxial cable into home and into individual tv theatre screens. The system now is technically feasible, he declared. He told the theatre men that economic conditions and other variable factors would govern the time when the system can be put into widespread use. He indicated that there should be several more experiments similar to the one at Bartlesville before the operation could be perfected.

E. G. Stellings, president of the Theatre Owners of America, gave the keynote address of the convention. He said the association has made it easier for theatre owners to obtain loans through the Small Business Administration. He also revealed plans for a $3,000,000 (sic) advertising and promotion campaign designed primarily to give a lift to theatre owners and/or operators.

Al Sindlinger, the business analyst, hung no crepe in his talk. He predicted a bright future for the motion picture industry. He based his rosy view on the fact that theatres permit audiences to participate in an activity—a feeling which television and other entertainment media in the home do not provide. This means, he elaborated, participating in going to the theatre as well as what is happening there.

"You don't get the same feeling viewing something in your living room that you do in a theatre with other people," he theorized.

Sindlinger pointed out that because more and more people are watching old movies on television proves they are interested in the product. Sindlinger said his company interviewed more than 100,000 people who have had opportunities to have subscription tv, cable theatre and other systems proposed or projected.

"There will be some form of pay-television within the next five or 10 years," he predicted. But, he added that he did not know what form it would take and would not attempt to predict how soon it would be in widespread use.

Then he tossed the salving bit of prophecy when he assured the film showmen that the new medium would not supplant motion picture theatres.

R. B. Wilby, of Atlanta, retired veteran theatre builder and operator and founder of the Wilby-Kincey theatre chain, was honored with a resolution which lauded his "legacy of integrity and accomplishment."

J. H. (Tommy) Thompson, of Hawkinsville, was re-elected to the presidency of the Georgia group for his 12th straight term. He founded the MPTOOG. Others re-elected were executive vice president O. C. Lam, of Rome; E. D. Martin, of Columbus, treasurer; and John Thompson, of Gainesville, secretary. Harold T. Spears, of Atlanta, was elected to a vice presidency.

Alabama association re-elected R. M. Kennedy, president; Mrs. Lester M. Neely Jr., Dan W. Davis, James W. Gaylord Jr., and Rufus Davis Jr. vice presidents; T. E. Watson, secretary-treasurer; and Mack Jackson, TOA representative

Rival Operators File Objections

Fight National's California Bid and Loew's Florida Site—Both Need Judge's Consent

Opposition developed last week in New York Federal Court against two theatre circuits seeking Government permission to acquire additional hardtop theatres. Both circuits—National Theatres and Loew's Theatres—are operating under Government consent decress.

The Broadway Theatre Corp. of Santa Ana, Cal., and the Southern California Amusement Co. opposed the petition of National Theatres to build a conventional house in Garden Grove, Cal., on the ground that National's entry would represent undue competition. Southern California Amusement, for example, reported that its expects to open a theatre, to be called the Grove, in Garden Grove on July 31.

The antitrust division of the Dept. of Justice did not take a pro or con position on National's petition. As a consequence, Judge Edmund L. Palmieri, who has been hearing all cases stemming from the Government's antitrust actions against the motion picture industry, requested the Dept. of Justice to submit a statement relative to the situation. The court, however, stressed that the Justice Dept. should not reach a conclusion. The Government agency promised to deliver the statement in a week.

In another hearing, also before Judge Palmieri, involving Loew's Theatres petition to acquire a 1,200-seat house currently being built in the Sea Isle section of Florida, 10 miles north of Miami Beach, opposition was registered by the Wometco Circuit, headed by Mitchell Wolfson. The same chain also opposed Loew's recent acquisition of the Riviera Theatre in Coral Gables, Fla., but the court gave Loew's the green light after hearing the arguments of both companies. The court reserved decision on the new Loew's petition. Unlike neutral position taken on National's petition, Justice Dept. did not oppose Loew's application, saying it saw no evidence that competition would be unduly restrained.

Asks $55,166 on Breached Whitney Employment

Los Angeles, July 2.

Producer-director-writer Robert L. Bendick filed a $55,166 breach of contract suit against C. V. Whitney Pictures, charging the indie "wrongfully" violated a pact under which he was to work exclusively for the firm for $1,000 per week. Action alleged his services were terminated at the end of the first year of a two year contract.

Damages sought represent the balance due under the contract terms.

U's Eastern Sales Div Crowing

The eastern sales division is again emerging triumphant in Universal's annual sales drives now that television has completely saturated the rest of the country. In previous years—before television had fully inundated the south and west—the east usually wound up last or next to last in the ratings.

The eastern division finished first in the 1957 sales drive just completed and it also took top spot in 1956. In contrast, the southern division was No. 1 in 1955 and in 1953 while the western division finished first in 1954.

According to the results of U's sales campaign, when all things are equal, that is, when all areas face the competition of television equally, it appears that a film company can really do big business when business in the heavily-populated east is big. Sales drive statistics also reveal that a company can do better in the east with class product as opposed to action product.

Top branch in the U.S. in most recent drive was New York. Boston, New Haven, Jacksonville and Philadelphia finished in that order. Winning district was Boston which comprises in addition to the Hub City—Albany, Buffalo, New Haven and Washington. District made up of Cleveland, Detroit, Philadelphia and Pittsburgh finished second, with third place honors going to the Atlanta, Charlotte, Cincinnati, Jacksonville and Memphis district. The winning division, as noted previously, was the east.

U will distribute $50,000 in prize money to the winning division, district, branch and office managers, salesmen and bookers.

Jerry Lewis

he'll put on special shows three times a day in each city at theatres where "The Delicate Delinquent" is booked.

Unique aspect, of course, of Lewis' p.a. tour is the three-time-a-day shows he'll put on gratis at each theatre. He's carrying with him a four-piece combo as well as terper Dick Humphreys. He'll have an entourage of 10 people traveling with him, including his personal secretary, valet, pressagent, and road manager. Herb Steinberg, Par's exploitation chief, is also going along to look after Par's interest. Also tied in with the trip are Decca Records, for whom the comedian records; Oldsmobile, his tv sponsor which will provide all local transportation, and NBC-TV, over which Lewis is seen. NBC will film and tape aspects of the trip for showing on the network.

To meet the demands of the heavy schedule, which will find Lewis in a different city almost every day (ranging from Toronto to Dallas), a United Airlines plane has been chartered for the entire trip. Before starting out on his key city tour, Lewis made a whirlwind visit in and out seven northern New Jersey cities. This represented a homecoming celebration for the Newark-born comedian. The visit was recorded on film for showing on the NBC "Today" and "Home" shows.

off around 8,000 C'Scope dates. O'Shea estimated that the picture eventually will rack up 14,000 U.S. and 1,650 Canadian bookings in the C'Scope version. Abroad, it's handled by RKO. Domestically, the C'Scope version is released by 20th-Fox.

O'Shea said Magna's next, "South Pacific," currently in production with Mitzi Gaynor and Rossano Brazzi starring, will be ready for opening Christmas or New Year's 1957, or for Washington's Birthday, 1958. It'll again be roadshown, with 20th releasing the C'Scope version.

O'Shea believes the future of roadshows is a great one. "Give people a good, big show, and they don't mind paying higher admissions," he holds. But only 50 towns in the U.S. are of a size sufficient to sustain a long roadshow run.

Magna is peddling all-purpose projection machines that can be adjusted to any size film. At the moment, 43 theatres are equipped with such machines, he disclosed. Units are made by Phillips in Holland. Installation and equipment once cost $74,000. It's now down to where an exhibitor can pay off at $13,500, amortizing his cost on a per-picture basis.

'Bernardine' Brisk 13G, Prov.; 'Earth' Solid 8G

Providence, July 2.

"Bernardine" at Majestic seems slated for most of coin this week, as a month-long drought broken only by a brief shower Sunday, has most of Rhode Island crowding the beaches. Strand is also on the happy side with "20 Million Miles To Earth." State's with "12 Angry Men" and RKO Albee with "China Gate" are mild and slow respectively.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-80)—"China Gate" (20th) and "Shadow of Fear" (UA). Slow $4,000. Last week, "I Was A Teenage Werewolf" (Indie) and "Invasion of Saucer Men" (Indie), $4,500.

Majestic (S-W) (2,200; 65-80)—"Bernardine" (20th) and "3 Outlaws" (20th). Packing them in for solid $13,000. Last week, "Wayward Bus" (20th) and "Smiley" (E), $4,500.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-80)—"12 Angry Men" (UA) and "Seventh Sin" (M-G). Mild $7,500. Last week, "Bachelor Party" (UA) and "5 Steps to Danger" (UA), $9,000.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 65-80)—"20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col) and "27th Day" (Col). Neat $8,000. Last week, "Buster Keaton Story" (Par) and "Lonely Man" (Par), $5,000.

Re: Chicago Booking Situation

Chicago, July 2

Latest upshot on nabe breaks for first runs here indicates likelihood of increased action. Universal's next package is not being booked by the Stanley Warner houses, Highland and Rhodes on the southside, but will be booked by the Coston chain's Hamilton Theatre in that neighborhood.

Paramount will pair "Buster Keaton Story" with the earlier announced nabe release of Elvis Presley's "Loving You," making what it considers a family-style package. Meanwhile the success of the Universal package was confirmed chiefly in the drive-ins.

Several distribs indicate that the chief objection to releasing their backlog product to outlying theatres for first run is the already tight situation for play dates during the summer. Most feel their grosses could be seriously compromised by subsequent runs from the potent product now in the Loop. Therefore, further moves into nabe breaks are not expected until fall.

Madrid: 'We Were Fair'

By HANK WERBA

Madrid, July 20.

To dispel intimations in VARIETY that Spanish distributors were the heavies in film parley breakdown between the Motion Picture Export Assn. and Spain, official minutes of the recent distrib exec council assembly were made available to this correspondent. As reported in VARIETY (June 12), this meeting voted down a film peace formula elaborated by MPEA Mediterranean rep Charles Baldwin (seconded by Continental toppers from Metro and Universal) and Spain negotiator Joaquin Agusti.

Augsti, distrib chief appointed by the Government to represent Spain in parleys, chaired the session. He situated the proposed agreement textually among the contiguous limitations previously announced by government film authorities. Major limitation was the reduced annual import quota of 80 U. S. films (100 in '54). Hope was voiced that industry-to-industry agreement to end the 22-month conflict would wring a good will concession from the Government, increasing the annual U. S. quota from 80 to 90. Within this framework, the specific peace proposals were:

(1) MPEA agencies in Spain to be granted a basic minimum of 70 U. S. pix (78 in '54) to cover Spain overhead and come up with a modest profit balance.

(2) Local distribs to get 42 import licenses, with MPEA furnishing 21 films on a percentage distribution basis. Of the 42, MPEA assumed the obligation to provide Spain distribs with 10 or 20 U. S. films (depending on annual Spain import quota of 80 or 90) and underwrite the remainder with films produced by the U. S. in co-ventures with other countries. Eight additional coproductions would go to MPEA to bolster smaller member allotments and restore overall 78 films imported by MPEA in '54.

(3) MPEA would distribute only 18 U. S. pix in Spain during first three months of the agreement (effective Sept. 15) in order to reduce Hollywood competition and give local distribs a headstart in unloading fall flickers (mostly European) already programmed for '57-'58.

Local distribs first pointed out that the coproduction gimmick, main support of the peace plan, involved tampering with film agreement signed by the Spanish Government with the governments of Italy, Germany, and others. Importing Italo-American coproduct as Italian entries would undermine the Italian quota and hurt friendly nation producers. Agusti assured that MPEA would work out the adjustments with other countries and make the necessary compensations. However, distrib execs, in the majority, remained skeptical that U. S. coproduction would feasibly compensate Spanish distribs for taking the short of the annual allotment.

Main distrib argument against acceptance was that MPEA agencies were disproportionately well provided for, clinching 70 of the 80 (maybe 90) U. S. films allowed into Spain annually. This breakdown of the basic quota proved that MPEA was primarily interested in feeding its own and continued to ignore the fact that infant Spanish distribs in Aug. '55 (MPEA embargo date) were now healthy, hungry distrib adults—some of whom were doing more business now than some MPEA members had done in '54.

Insistence on equal treatment was followed by the observation that local distribs would be happy to see the Government raise the annual quota to 120 U. S. films—thus permitting an MPEA allotment of 78 and an indie distrib allotment of 42 (5:2 ratio). But if dwindled hard currency reserves make this impossible, MPEA should in all fairness apply the 5:2 measuring stick all along the line. Present formula, according to majority voice, penalized local distribs for the inadequate import quota set by the Government and this they could not accept.

As the meeting uncovered no new formula, the one proposed to the assembly was put to a vote and defeated by five to four with two abstentions, 20th-Fox, Universal and United Artists' Iberian outlet, C. B. Films, voted to accept as did Mercurio, a major independent distrib. Two abstentions came from CEA and As Films, important film industry corporations. Agusti, head of CEA Distribution, abstained on the grounds he negotiated and proposed the peace formula.

MPEA's Enrique Aguilar (U) proposed a unanimous vote of thanks and confidence to negotiator and meeting chairman Agusti which the council accorded. Agusti, during the course of the meeting, paid tribute to the MPEA negotiating team for having made giant strides toward a settlement. Minutes of the three-hour meeting did not reflect any of the acrimony usually present whenever the prolonged film impasse is debated.

Chamber of Commerce's 'Or Else' To Alderman on Costly Fast Time

Minot, N. D., July 2.

After the city council for a second time rejected a move to rescind daylight saving time in this city of 30,000, the Chamber of Commerce comprising the leading business men, took the matter in hand at an indignation meeting and decided to "lay down the law" to the aldermen.

Following its vote of 25 to 2 in favor of return to standard time the Chamber called upon the mayor to summon the aldermen for a special meeting to act upon the matter immediately. If this is not done the membership will attend the next regular meeting in a body and make its wishes felt, it was announced.

It develops that at the last council meeting, when the aldermen reaffirmed continuance of fast time until Labor Day, the mayor had misinformed the body that petitions presented asking for a return to normal time contained only about 500 names. As a matter of fact there were over 2,500 signers.

During the week the local daily newspaper's columnist reported that the town is in danger of losing its baseball club because DST has hurt attendance so greatly.

The council originally adopted DST by only a one vote margin. Since then all surrounding towns as well as about 20 more throughout the state either have rescinded or rejected it.

Among those appearing at the last council meeting asking for a return to standard time was the owner of one of the town's two movie theatres. The local outdoor theatre and Earl Beck, its manager, have a court suit pending to knock it out on the grounds the council's action in establishing it was in violation of the state constitution.

Church Goycott

to local merchants not to exhibit LST posters, although it isn't clear whether he meant to apply the order to "objectionable" plays or for all the barn's productions. Merchant members of the St. Anthony's parish are expected to comply, but non-Catholic storekeepers have indicated that they won't go along. As it happens, a showdown on that phase of the situation hasn't occurred, as posters for last week's "Tattoo" were not delivered here, having been delayed in New York by the American Railway Express strike.

Attendance at the strawhat decreased last week, but how much that was due to the church boycott, the basic draw of the play or the fact that it has already been seen here in a film version, wasn't apparent. It's figured that loss of Catholic patronage may be partly offset by increased attendance by non-Catholics. However, the large Catholic population in nearby Waterbury and Torrington may be a factor.

Two critics who regularly cover the Litchfield theatre are caught in the controversy. They are George Dillon, of the Waterbury Republican and Marie Casseidie, Litchfield stringer for the Torrington Register. Both praised "Tattoo" when it previously played the strawhat four years ago, but after Skelly's denunciation of the Tennessee Williams drama last Sunday, they found it "horrid" and "objectionable."

Leonard Altobell, who has operated the barn for the last 12 years, defends his record with the spot and the quality of his shows. "I feel that people should have the right to attend a play if they so desire," he says. "This is a free and democratic country, and people should be able to decide for themselves whether they wish to attend.

"The people who come to this theatre are of normal intelligence and are able to form their own opinions and judgments without dogmatic laws. Any group that sets itself up to order what people are to see and where they are to go is against democratic principles."

The producer says he has received mail from both patrons and non-patrons, all criticizing the action of Skelly.

'Gunfight' Tops

smaller cities, has astonished even the boosters.

"Island in Sun" (20th) landed third place on advance word-of-mouth plus exploitation, advertising and publicity job of the 20th-Fox staff. Film still was in first place in weekly ratings as the month ended, indicating it may continue its high standing in July.

"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) rested fourth, same position it held in May, also an indication of staying powers. "10 Commandments" (Par), June's fifth spotter, had been number two in May, and previously No. 1 for three months in succession. "The D. I." (WB), a newcomer, finished sixth, good considering that some exhibitors see lack of femme appeal.

"Little Hut" (M-G), a slow starter in some locations, grabbed off seventh money. "Desk Set" (20th) wound up eighth, never managing to rise higher than fifth in weekly tabulations by VARIETY. It was ninth in May.

"Wayward Bus," also 20th-Fox, finished ninth. "Face in Crowd" (WB) was 10th-place winner, the fact that the film lacked stars known to film patrons apparently hurting its chances.

"Bachelor Party" (UA), which was seventh in May; "20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col) and "Joe Butterfly" (U) were the three runner-up pix for the month.

Several new pix were just being launched as the month wound up. "Bernardine" (20th) shapes as a potentially strong grosser, judging from what it did in some five or six keys the final week in June. "Johnny Tremain" (BV) was in much the same category.

"Something of Value" (M-G), another newie, displayed enough to finish sixth the final June stanza, and likely will be heard from in the future. "Love in Afternoon" (AA) did nice on its initial playdate. "Prince and Showgirl" (WB) opened big at N.Y. Music Hall.

"Tommy and Bachelor" (U), a runner-up the final week last month, also was given a chance of catching on. "Garment Jungle" (Col) wound up ninth one week last month.

"Monkey on Back" (UA) finished 10th in another stanza in June but obviously was not up to hopes in many key cities. "Could Be the Night" (M-G), which was 10th in May, managed to finish as a runner-up pic another week.

"Beginning of End" (Rep), initial AB-PT production, opened smash in Chi. "Public Pigeon No. 1" (U) landed several fine playdates. "Lonely Man" (Par), although a bit spotty, cashed in on a couple of strong engagements.

"Dino" (AA), which did okay for type of pic it is in Chi, was rated nice in N.Y. "I Was Teen-Age Werewolf" (AIP) scored a couple of smart playdates the first week out.

EXHIBS AWARD PRIZES FOR FILM REPORTING

Atlanta, July 2.

C. M. McIntosh of the daily Augusta Chronicle-Herald and Shirley Barker of the weekly Clayton Tribune were named winners in a contest for the best film-reporting published by Georgia newspapers between Jan. 1 and May 1. The contset, sponsored by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners and Operators of Georgia, resulted in 27 entries from both daily and weekly newspapers throughout the state.

The two first prize winners will receive all-expense paid trips to Hollywood for two. As a result of a tie for second place in the daily category, duplicate awards of $250 savings bonds were presented to George Doss of the Macon Evening News and Dorothy Smith of the Waycross Journal Herald. Second place winner in the weekly newspaper category was Alva L. Hayward of the Warrenton Clipper.

The awards were presented at the joint annual convention of the Georgia exhibitors' group and Alabama Theatres Assn. A special booth at the convention displayed the scrapbooks submitted in the contest and samples of the thousands of inches of publicity received by the motion picture industry.

According to J. H. Thompson, president of the Georgia theatre unit, the event was one of the most rewarding ever undertaken by the organization. He added that the presence of many Georgia newspaper editors and writers at the opening luncheon of the convention "will bring additional goodwill and cooperation from the newspaper people in the future."

selling books and successful stage plays that have proven theselves audience-wise. It is our firm conviction that stories are more important than names. When you can effect a combination of both, the result is bound to be profitable motion picture entertainment."

Exec said the studio's talent development program had been intensified and would result in more important stars.

At the meeting, WB v. p. in charge of advertising and public relations, Robert S. Taplinger; Gil Golden, national advertising manager; Meyer M. Hutner, national publicity manager, and W. W. Brumberg, who heads the field exploitation staff, presented merchandising plans for the summer and fall releases.

London, July 2.

Continuing its expansion plans, J. Arthur Rank Overseas Film Distributors, shortly will open offices in Trinidad. The Trinidad offices will be directly responsible to London and will not be part of Latin American setup.

T. M. Lindner, who's been appointed special rep of JAROFD, will leave London within the next few days to set up offices in Port of Spain.

Loew Know-How, Valerio's License Behind Europe's First Class Drive-In

Rome, July 2.

Europe's first modern drive-in (according to local claims) is expected to open just outside Rome early in August, with Loew involved both financially as well as in the technical know-how that goes behind designing the locally still-unknown type of al fresco showcase.

Unusual feature of the up-to-date setup will be that customers at the drive-in, which will be located out on the Cristopher Columbus highway south of the Eternal City, will be able to listen to the soundtrack either in English or in Italian. Loew is adding a second synchronized (English language) magnetic soundtrack to that already on the Italo-dubbed film, and spectators will be able to switch from one to the other via a button on all the speakers.

Loew is partnered in the project with an Italian exhib, Vasco Valerio, who runs 27 other showcases. Split is 50-50, but it's believed that Metro is the prime mover via its know-how in the field, the local partner perforce having no working knowledge in the drive-in sector. In exchange, Valerio came up with the hard-to-come-by license for the drive-in, only one each being currently allowed in major Italian centers under stringent laws governing theatre openings.

Drive-in is licensed for some 750 cars of unspecified size. As an experiment, temporary bleachers will be built this year to accommodate the motor-scooter trade. If this proves a financial success, a permanent amphitheatre will be built for the two-wheel trade, which in addition offers noise-baffle problems in the question of approach to the viewing area.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

Considering the off-voiced concern over what would happen should the Hollywood Production Code lift its restriction on dope themes, the anticipated "flood" of such pictures hasn't developed. There have been several films dealing with dope peddling and addition, but few major ones.

Latest to treat the subject of addiction is 20th-Fox's "A Hatful of Rain," which last week saw the cycle complete—U. S. Narcotics Commissioner Harry J. Anslinger, formerly a stout foe of having the screen say anything at all about narcotics, formally endorsed "Hatful" and said it would help the treatment of addicts.

It was in good part the position of the Commissioner which, in years past, kept the Motion Picture Assn. of America from revising the Code in re the narcotics ban. It was finally lifted last December. Prior to this, "The Man With the Golden Arm" was released without a Code seal.

One current film out and revolving around the dope habit is "Monkey on My Back," the Barney Ross story, which originally ran into difficulties with the Code over the scene showing the plunging of the needle into the arm. Another film is "Pickup Alley" and yet another is "Dope Ship," the title of which now has been changed to "Cargo X."

What appeared to please Commissioner Anslinger in "Hatful" was that it was pointed towards seeking the help from proper authorities. He warned relatives who give loved ones money for narcotics, likening it to "putting more poison in their veins." Anslinger's position originally had been that virtually any dramatization of the dope habit on the screen was apt to rouse the kind of interest that would create new addicts.

General reluctance of exhibitors, particularly small operators, to invest in new equipment is pointed up by the unused gear presently lying around in theatres. These are holdovers from the period when efforts were being made to revitalize the industry with new processes and new gimmicks. It was a period of uncertainty and no one was quite sure what system, what sound method or what innovation would help lure customers into the theatres.

Presently collecting dust in numerous theatres throughout the country are units designed for the dual snychronization of projectors for the showing of the short-lived 3-D pictures. About 100 of the larger cinemas are equipped with large-screen, closed-circuit television units which haven't been used in a long time. The theatres were the prime outlets for the championship fights promoted by the International Boxing Club. However, with the IBC shut out of the upcoming heavyweight championship fight, the event is returning to conventional home video and the theatre tv units will remain idle. The closed-circuit entrepreneurs who had envisioned important b.o. events via closed-circuit have long since shifted their attention to business meetings using hotels as outlets and have forgotten the theatres.

An unknown number of theatres which installed magnetic sound systems find them useless as the film companies have shifted mainly to optical tracks. Many of the early screens for CinemaScope have been scrapped and replaced with better ones.

Although exact figures are unavailable, it's roughly estimated that as much as $3,000,000 in unused equipment can be found in theatres throughout the U.S.

Current industry attempt to influence more newspaper coverage of pictures and players has a special twist. Throughout the years imaginative gimmicks designed to draw fourth estators' interest have paid off And this brings up the question of whether the press is indifferent to the picture business per se or simply finds the usual publicity approaches too commonplace to rate newsprint attention.

Example of the way reporters and editors give a play to the special angled pitch is shown in the way Allied Artists' "Love in the Afternoon" has been spotlighted. AA sent seven French femmes with show business backgrounds on the road. They called at the city desks and simply talked about the picture and French amour. This was no great enterprise on the part of AA, but it at least was somewhat different. The press went for it, with stories and cuts prominent in many of the big dailies (some on Page 1) throughout the country.

Kristina Soederbaum, Swedish-born actress-wife of German picture director Veit Harlan, revealed in Berlin that attacks, stemming from the fact that she is the wife of Harlan, are still continuing against her. Quite recently, it was called an "open scandal" in the German press that she attended a theatrical performance of "Diary of Anne Frank" in Munich. On one occasion, some spit in her face. Once she and her husband were invited for the opening of a picture, but this invitation turned out to be a trap and they were whistled out of the cinema. She still gets letters full of hate.

Miss Soederbaum said that she would understand if these attacks came from Jewish people or other victims of the Nazi regime. "It may sound strange," she told VARIETY, "but our biggest opponents today are Germans who actually liked it quite well under Hitler."

August or September starting date will be firmed shortly on "The Naked and the Dead" which producer Paul Gregory will make on location in Hawaii for RKO. Gregory reported that U.S. Army approval has been obtained and final phases of the script now are being discussed with Gen. Higgins.

Gregory is currently in New York to discuss with CBS-TV execs the details of his 90-minute spectacular "Cresendo," set for Sept. 29, plans to launch his platform play "The Rivalry," in Vancouver Sept. 20. Based on the Lincoln-Douglas debates, the Norman Corwin script will star Raymond Massey, Agnes Moorehead and Brian Donlevy.

National Screen Service trailer for Russ-Field's "The Fuzzy Pink Nightgown" will carry a new animated paper sculpture that gives a three-dimensional effect sans use of glasses. Device, first time ever used, was developed by Robert Winquist, Chouinard Art School instructor who never has worked in films before.

Sculptured paper cutouts will be a feature of the trailer and United Artists has ordered 800 private for nationwide saturation campaign prior to August release of comedy.

Employment contracts for Robert W. Coyne, special counsel, and Charles E. McCarthy, information director, of the Council of Motion Picture Organizations, are up for negotiation. The two execs have been working without pacts right along. Given the job of working out employment agreements with them is a committee comprising Abe Montague, Columbia's v.p. in charge of domestic distribution, and circuit operators Robert J. O'Donnell, Leo Brecher and Max Cohen.

Still another market survey is on the horizon. It's been proposed by Walter Reade as a COMPO project and endorsed by the COMPO exec committee . . . Also re COMPO, 8,242 theatres paid membership dues to this organization last year. And a new member this year is the Theatre Equipment & Supply Manufacturers Assn.

Sound department at RKO studio on Coast will be skeletonized in a few weeks when the studio winds dubbing and scoring of "Stage Struck." Four permanent members of the department as well as several temporary employees have been handed their notices. Department head John Aalberg will remain but henceforth studio will call in technicians on special assignment whenever soundmen are required.

Belgian, Swiss Terms to U.S. Better So Europeans Veto 'Festivals'

Berlin, July 2.

The General Assembly of the International Federation of Film Producers, meeting here during the run of the seventh annual film festival, has so far refused to give official recognition to next year's Brussels film festival, scheduled to run in conjunction with the Belgian capital's World Fair. Federation adopted this stand because of the country's continuing discriminatory attitude to the European producing nations.

The Belgians allow the American distribs to remit 65% of their earnings, but European producers have considerably less advantageous terms. That puts Belgium in conflict with the Federation rules, which stipulate that festivals can only be supported if all membernations are given equal treatment.

The Brussels fest is skedded to run in two parts. The first, limited to shorts, will start on May 20, 1958, and run for a week. The feature festival will tee off May 30 and continue through June 13.

The General Assembly also gave the thumbs-down to the Locarno Festival for the second year running, also because the Swiss authorities have conceded better terms to the American industry than to the European producers. In both cases, the Motion Picture Assn., while rowing in with majority opinion, has adopted a conciliatory line towards achieving official blessing for both junkets.

In the event that the Federation gives official support to the Belgian fest, next year's General Assembly meet will take place in Brussels. Otherwise, the venue will be switched to Vienna.

'KEEP US INFORMED ON ARBITER TALKS'

Austin, July 2.

Texas Drive-In Theatre Owners Assn. has asked that it be given representation at the conferences now being held to establish an industrywide arbitration system.

Eddie Joseph, local theatre owner and operator, and prez of the organization, has dispatched a letter to Ralph D. Hetzel of the Motion Picture Assn. of America in N. Y. advising him that the MPAA "should in all fairness, see that our organization is represented at the conference. Since we are directly affected by whatever decisions are made at these meetings, we feel that if good relationship and better understanding of the problems that affect us are to be achieved, we must be represented."

Ernest Stellings, prez of Theatre Owners of America, said his association would not be adverse to inviting the Texas drive in group to participate in the deliberations, according to Joseph.

San Sebastian Fest Shapes Bigger This Yr. With FIAPF Approval

Madrid, June 25.

Spurred by major festival status granted at the recent Cannes meeting of the International Federation of Producers Associations (FIAPF), the San Sebastian Film Festival committee is trying for the glitter and world ballyhoo that make Cannes and Venice standout gatherings. Calendared for July 21-28, fest will be a composite of the Cannes and Venice festival patterns. All countries present at Cannes have received invitations to San Sebastian. Communist countries will get invites too, despite lack of diplomatic ties with Spain, via the FIAPF offices.

Two golden seashells (Concha d'Oro) will be awarded to the best feature and top short. The International Catholic Cinema Office will offer its own award for the best picture shown. In addition, the city of San Sebastian and local personalities will give prizes for best performances and direction.

An international jury, headed by Festival President Juan Pergola (mayor of San Sebastian), will consist of four Spaniards and a nom d'eminence from England, France, Italy and Germany.

U.S. participation at San Sebastian is a big question mark at the moment. At the FIAPF meeting in Cannes, upgrading of San Sebastian Festival was voted unanimously with Motion Picture Export Assn. delegate F. W. Allport abstaining on the grounds his organization does not have a pact with Spain. MPEA nevertheless has received an invite from Mayor Pergola.

UA 'Viking' Handout Kids Hollywood Censors

Under the heading "What a Choice!" a publicity handout from United Artists last week poked subtle fun at the Code Administration.

It also referred to the Code as "the official Hollywood censors," a nomenclature which the Shurlock office has tried hard to avoid, its argument being that the the Code represents "self-regulation" distinct from censorship.

Asking "Want to be a movie censor?" the release related the case of Kirk Douglas' "The Vikings," now filming in Norway. It contains a scene in which Tony Curtis, as a Viking warrior, is captured by the English. The punishment. They cut off his right hand. In the same picture, a falcon attacks Douglas and rips his face. The owner breaks the bird's wing so he'll never be able to fly again.

Faced with these two scenes, the UA handout related, the Code ruled that the hand-cutting business was okay, but the breaking of the bird's wing represented "excessive brutality." Story didn't detail how each scene was presented, which is a strong consideration re Code approval.

Word From Berlin Is: Bring Own Bedstead

Berlin, July 2.

Again the ceremonies opening Berlin's Film Festival seemed endless, and often silly. Tedium was increased by translating each talk into English and French. This slowed things down, but even so the Italians complained, "What about us?"

The grand parade of stars opening day was less than memorable since half of the 37 introduced were uncharted in cinematic heavens. Human touch came when Henny Porten, who was big in silents, drew a sentimental ovation which nearly reduced her to tears. She dreams of resuming her film career.

Second loudest "ovation," went to Errol Flynn and his wife Patricia Wymore. Errol carried a cane (a novelty around here) with his tux and excused himself: "Mein Deutsch is lousy . . ." England's Trevor Howard, already a regular participant in the local pic fetes, was also warmly hailed.

German fans eagerly await promised appearances in town of Gary Cooper, Henry Fonda and Debbie Reynolds.

Con-current with the Festival's own schedule it is odd to note the Atelier am Zoo, an art cinema under the Zoo-Palast, showing America's "Big House" (1930) and Great Britain's "Atlantic".

Leo J. Horster, Walt Disney rep in Germany points up fact that there hasn't been a Berlin Film Festival which didn't showcase a Disney production. (This year, it's "Secret of Life" and "Man in Space") . . . And Disney has already revealed entry for 1958 Festival: It's "Perry." Herzog-Film, incidentally sent out two invitations to its reception. Repeat to make sure nobody forgot, Herzog distribs Disney pix in Germany . . .

Punsters dubbed this year's festival "Hassival." Because of actor O. E. Hasse being in three festival contenders "Arsene Lupin" (as Emperor Wilhelm II) and "Saiton jamais," both French items, and Germany's "Last Ones Shall Be First" . . .

"Manuela," Lion International production world-preemed here has quickly found a distributor for Germany. Paramount took on this British entry . . . Ivan Foxwell, producer of "Manuela," and a handsome guy mistaken by some fans to be film star.

Noted are many festival pix in which children play leading role, per England's "Spanish Gardner," Denmark's "Be Dear to Me," Japan's "Horse Boy" and "Father Love" and Italy's "The Window to the Luna Park" and "Fathers and Sons."

Miss Elli Silman perhaps the Number One agent in Berlin telegraphed bids to her private party. She has 156 names on her talent roster.

Oscar Martay, the man who started the Berlin film fetes in 1951, strolling about the Ku-damm. Few seem to remember him. Some ask what he's doing now. Martay is married to Renate Barken, German actress. Marriage produced a bambino last year.

Errol Flynn staying at Hotel Gehrhus. He didn't like his rooms in the Kempinski. However, bulk of the Americans are at the Kempinski . . . Hotel situation is again frightful this year. Many guests had to lodge in private quarters. The new Hilton operation hotel, still building an desperately needed.

Club of Berlin Film Journalists will hand a prize to the festival's "most amusing guest" and Henry Fonda gets prize of German film critics (as best foreign male star for "War & Peace").

Hardiest festival guest will probably be Japan's Izumi Yukimura. She arrived June 19 and stays over the whole period (last year's longest-stayer was Egypt's Magda).

Sweden's star contingent is particularly big this year: Ulla Jacobsson, Folke Sundquist, Bjoern Bjelvenstam, Gunvor Ponten.

Photos showing Marlon Brando wearing German officer's uniform (from his pic, "The Young Lions") currently making the local press rounds, B.Z. had it even on front page.

Herman Wobber's Retirement Highlighted By Offer of Another Job

San Francisco, July 2.

Herman Wobber, hale and 77, is taking on a new job.

It was offered him by 20th-Fox President Spyros Skouras in a wire to Wobber's Golden Anniversary luncheon at the Sheraton-Palace last week. Skouras wants to make 20th's longtime Western Division manager his "personal representative in the U. S. and overseas."

Wobber, celebrating 50 years in the film business, called the job "a very flattering offer" and added:

"I've always been a good soldier. Chances are I'll get the passports out."

So what was billed as Wobber's retirement luncheon was, in reality, what one of a dozen speakers called "an interlude between services to the motion picture business."

The luncheon was sponsored by the San Francisco Variety Club and attended by almost 500 production and distribution execs, all chums of Wobber. Chief Barker Irving (Bud) Levin spoke briefly then turned matters over to emcee Paul Speegle.

A number of Wobber's friends then spoke. Among them:

Jesse Lasky Sr.: "I have been Herman's friend for 48 years . . . I wouldn't have missed this luncheon if I'd been in Paris, London or Israel. He has been a wonderful influence . . . of all the men in the industry, the most honest, most truthful, the finest character the motion picture industry ever bred is Herman Wobber."

Alex Harrison: "It's very difficult, as Herman's protege, to speak objectively, but I'll try. This is a great mind, a man whose career has spanned the entire life of the motion picture industry . . . we should use his career as an inspiration to all of us. He has fought for the industry over the years second to nobody. And it is more than an industry. It is the greatest means of selling the American way of life ever devised: should the industry be dissolved, the job of the State Department would be increased a thousandfold."

Assemblyman Caspar W. Weinberger, representing Gov. Goodwin J. Knight and the State Legislature, presented Wobber with a scroll and Wobber finally spoke, briefly.

"This wasn't a job to me, this was a devotion. I practically ran to work every day for 50 years. I'm going to be lost—I feel like a capon when he first realizes what's happened to him."

USUAL SECRECY PREVAILS

Albert Vs. Columbia and Kalamazoo Cases Settled

Chicago, July 2.

Two settlements of antitrust suits against theatre chains and film distribs were made out of court here through the legal offices of Seymour Simon and Sheldon Collen.

Charles Albert, et al. versus Columbia Pictures Corp., et al., was filed in Northern Ohio District Court in 1952. Albert, operator of State Theatre in Urichsville, Ohio, suits against theatre clans and cuit for $396,000 in seeking competitive bidding for first run product there. Seymour Simon and Horace Adams (Cleveland) represented plaintiffs.

Kalamazoo Drive-In Theatre Co. also won a settlement versus major distribs and Butterfield Theatre Circuit having filed suit on similar charges in U.S. District Court for Western District of Michigan at Grand Rapids. The plaintiff operates theatre in Kalamazoo, Michigan. Working with Simon and Collen was attorney Elden W. Butzbaugh of Benton Harbor. Suit was filed in May, 1956.

In neither case was amount of settlement made public.

Britons Divided

tival, which winds tonight (Tues.) with the screening of Metro's "Teahouse of the August Moon," has become a trading centre for motion picture distribs and exporters. Because of this, it has almost been completely stripped of what little glamor it possessed.

At the same time, however, the festival has a major political role, recognized by Washington.

No Berlin Straw Vote

For the first time since its inception, the festival has dropped its poll of the Berlin public due largely to the criticisms published last year when, for the second time running, a mediocre German entry had walked off with the first prize. This year the prizes are being awarded solely on jury verdict.

Some German journalists are reportedly angry with VARIETY for its role in ending the public vote, but it's no secret that the MPEA member companies would have declined to participate if the poll had it been retained. In any event, the International Federation of Film Producers made its attitude clear earlier in the year and urged that the local public vote be dropped.

This year the jury, as well as the hundreds of visiting newsmen, have had a tough assignment, covering a minimum of four screenings a day to cope with the unspooling of 31 features, nine full length documentaries and 60 shorts, making a round total of 100 subjects. There's a growing feeling here that the volume of product is getting out of hand and that authorities will have to introduce some form of limitation, as is now being done in Cannes and Venice.

If limitation were imposed, it would automatically take care of a continuous grouse about the poor quality of much of the product.

Frederick S. Gronich, who heads the MPEA office in Frankfurt, was responsible for the organization of the American reception, which was one of the social highlights of the fest. So great was the clamor for invites that they assumed a black market value and were being offered along the Kurfurstendamm for 22 marks ($5.50). Marc Spiegel, MPEA topper in Europe, came in specially from Paris for the occasion; while Fayette W. Allport, chief of the Association's London office, who was around for the meetings of the International Federation of Film Producers, delayed his return to London to be on hand.

Hollywood, July 2.

Chapter Two—The Case of the Missing Ballots.

Exec board of IATSE Local 728, Studio Electricians, over the weekend recommended to Local's membership that they start all over again with their annual elections. Matter will be decided at membership meeting, July 8.

To recapitulate, at recent election Al Franklin beat out incumbent R. A. (Nick) Nichols for biz agent. Election results were later challenged, but when appointed committee attempted recount, ballots, stored in union office, turned up missing. They still haven't been found, nor has any clue to what happened to them.

Seek Palance for 'Snorkel'

Hollywood, July 2.

Jack Palance is being paged by Associated Artists Productions to star in "The Snorkel," slated for production in England in late August. By that date, Palance will have completed his toplining role in "Flower of May," filmization of the Blasco Vincente Ibanez tome now being produced in Mexico by Olallo Rubio Jr. with Roberto Gabaldon directing.

"Snorkel" screenplay is by Jimmy Sangster and Peter Meyers and is based on yarn by Anthony Dawson.

NBC'S OUTSIDE VS. CBS' INSIDE

Closed-TV's Strange Bedfellows

Rapidly growing field of closed-circuit television equipment is finding new clients, some of them for the strangest purposes, every day. Already used in such widely diversified fields as atomic energy, railroad freightyard traffic, railroad ticket sales and shoplifting detection, the closed-circuit setups, which range anywhere from a single camera and one monitor to more than 100 in each installation, are getting some new goings-over.

Dage Television division of Thompson Products Corp., the leading manufacturer of the closed-circuit equipment (cameras, monitors, amplifying units and self-contained stations), has had some eyebrow-lifters in the form of recent sales. Over and above the orthodox setups like the nine department stores using units to detect shoplifters; the two military installations (one already built in West Germany, the other scheduled to go up in September in the Azores); the "weathervision" units enabling a centrally located meteorologist to brief widely scattered groups of pilots (just installed at McGuire Air Force Base, N.J.), a medical education unit at St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, Dage has completed or contracted for the following installations:

A "visit-vision" setup enabling hospital patients to "visit by closed-circuit from the lobby with people normally refused entry to a hospital, children for example.

A "sidewalk superintendent" setup for a new Lexington Ave. skyscraper currently under construction in N.Y. The building, a 40-story unit under construction by the Minskoff realty interests, will have a front facade during construction which will house three monitors carrying pictures from strategically located cameras covering the entire construction operation.

A "counter unit" at Nathan's in Coney Island, which will cover the entire length of the hot-dog dispenser's counter, enabling a "spotter" stationed at a monitor to order clerks to various locations along the counter where the traffic's particularly congested with hot-dog-hungry patrons.

Shavelson, Rose's Ad Copy Plugging 'Beau James' Rejected as Detrimental to Medium

Hollywood, July 2.

Turnabout obviously is not fair play as far as television is concerned.

For years, the medium has had a good time needling Hollywood, its product and the industry in general. But KNXT has flatly refused to accept spot announcements plugging "Beau James," because the spots poke fun at tv.

Libby-Owens Coin For NCAA Grid

In its network bow, the Libby-Owens-Ford glass outfit has enabled NBC-TV to post the SRO sign on its nine NCAA national football games via purchase of one-quarter sponsorship.

In the football deal, Libby-Owens is taking one-quarter of all nine nationally-televised games, with the others lined up for the football being Sunbeam, Zenith and Bristol-Myers on the national front.

In addition, NBC signed Kemper Insurance, a branch of All-State Insurance, to sponsor the 15-minute "scoreboard" segment following all of the national games. Sportscaster for the wrapup isn't set yet.

NBC-Bankrolled Carson Pilot Peddled by ABC

NBC paid for the pilot on a Jack Carson telefilm, didn't sell it once it was made, and now ABC-TV is out to peddle the show. The Carson half-hour is called "Johnny Come Lately."

NBC let it go when the sales option lapsed, but it's reported that if the show is sold on ABC the NBC contract with Carson allows it to recapture initial production costs. ABC hasn't picked a time slot for the show.

SHARP CONTRAST IN IDEOLOGIES

By GEORGE ROSEN

One of the more intriguing aspects of the upcoming television season—and one which obviously will be watched closely by everybody in the business — is the virtual extreme in programming ideologies attending the NBC vs CBS program semesters next fall, for never before has there been such a wide variance in network philosophy. Who is right and which network will reap the major benefits (in profits and ratings) from the both-ends-of-the-pole concepts will not be known for months to come, but it's readily apparent even now that very much, including a whole way of leadership, is at stake.

Two events at NBC within the past fortnight (coupled with a brace of incidents at CBS within the same time span) perhaps best reflect the divergent approaches of the two major networks. The disclosure last week that Ted Mills and Ben Park, two of the top creative craftsmen within the public affairs-documentary orbit at NBC-TV, were leaving the company to form their own independent production outfit, and the previous week's revelation that Nat Wolff was exiting his key NBC berth in program development, are perhaps typical offshoots of the policies being pursued at NBC under the programming regime of exec veepee Bob Kintner.

In an extension of the thinking that prevailed at ABC when Kintner prexied that network prior to his moveover as Bob Sarnoff's No. I aide, NBC has virtually abdicated any pretense of creating shows from within. Of the score or so of new programs that will preem on the network in the fall, every one without exception has been an out-and-out buy from the outside (most of them coming out of the MCA shop) but on the whole involving, along with MCA, such "external giants" in the talent-packaging orbit as William Morris, General Artists Corp., Ted Ashley, Henry Jaffe, etc. (All of which is a far cry from the Pat Weaver days at NBC with the network's "building from within" and its credo of joint development, which gave it part ownership in such entries as "Dragnet," "This Is Your Life," etc.)

In recent weeks, however, there's been a gradual liquidation of NBC's creative program forces, both in the areas of entertainment and public affairs (as witness the recent manpower defections.) Out on the Coast the NBC creative team of Elliott Lewis-Milt Josefsberg- Carroll Carroll was recently lopped off and creative activity there has slowed down to a walk.

Jaffe-Phillipson's Coronet Prod. Sets $20,000,000 Budget for TV Entries; Three Las Vegas Specs

Hollywood, July 2.

Biggest production splurge by one producing outfit for the next television season, which may reach $20,000,000, has been blueprinted by Coronet Productions, formed last February by Henry Jaffe and William Phillipson. More than half of the firm's output has already been firmed for sponsorship and slotted in peak network time.

Among the new Coast projects will be three full hour specs remoted from Las Vegas, the first major network attraction from the desert spa. Exquisite Form (bras) will bankroll, with the first one in the fall and the other two in the spring. Phillipson will be executive producer and is now screening top femme names as emcee and production and writing talent for the three extravaganzas. Show will have variety-musical format and Vegas headliners will be supplemented by other star talent to be flown in.

Previously set and sealed by Coronet were the Chevy series of 49 hour shows, and the Shirley Temple series of 16 hour-long fairy tales. Deal with Screen Gems for the Temple series is only for use of the Columbia studio facilities, with Coronet paying below-the-line costs and retaining full control of all other elements. Phillipson will be executive producer on the filmed fantasies.

In the Chevy group of 49 will be 20 to 24 from Dinah Shore; 10 others of equal major calibre, some to be remoted beyond the NBC color studios in Burbank, and remainder of lesser budgeted shows for the summer months. Jaffe will act as executive producer only on the Chevy shows.

Others being readied for production are:

Series of 39 half hour programs based on "The 10 Commandments" and to be filmed by Screen Gems.

"Half Way House," series of half-hour comedies by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, with Norman Lessing adapting, to be filmed by Screen Gems.

Series of half hour childrens stories to be filmed here.

Series of half-hour suspense mysteries for filming here.

ABC Bags Kaiser With $7,000,000 Sun. TV Billings

Kaiser Aluminum gave ABC-TV its biggest single chunk of new business in years and the network its first major Sunday night entertainment package. Bankroller signed a weekly commitment for the entire hour of "The Maverick," a cowboy series produced by Warner Bros., to be shown between 7:30 and 8:30 p.m.

Over the period of a year Kaiser will be forking out $7,000,000 net in time and talent, the network said. Gross time charges will be in the vicinity of $3,300,000 on the year, the rest in production costs. It gives the network a programming foothold in five nights instead of four, Saturday and Monday still being relatively weak nights.

James Garner, a thesp under contract to Warners, will play the lead. However, there is under consideration a plan to give Garner, who

Tom Loeb's New Status on Specials

Tom Loeb has been upped to director of special programs at NBC-TV, taking charge of programming of all spectaculars for the network for next season. Loeb, whose last assignment had been producer on "Tonight" for the past few weeks, takes over a post which has been vacant until now, with nighttime programming veep Bob Lewine having handled it on a temporary basis.

Dave Tebet continues under Loeb as manager of special programs, maintaining the continuity of the operation. The spec programming had been handled by the trio of Lewine, Tebet and Nat Wolff (with a programming assist from program sales veep Mike Dann), but Wolff's resignation as v.p. over program development cued Loeb's appointment.

Two golden seashells (Concha d'Oro) will be awarded to the best feature and top short. The International Catholic Cinema Office will offer its own award for the best picture shown. In addition, the city of San Sebastian and local personalities will give prizes for best performances and direction.

An international jury, headed by Festival President Juan Pergola (mayor of San Sebastian), will consist of four Spaniards and a nom d'eminence from England, France, Italy and Germany.

U.S. participation at San Sebastian is a big question mark at the moment. At the FIAPF meeting in Cannes, upgrading of San Sebastian Festival was voted unanimously with Motion Picture Export Assn. delegate F. W. Allport abstaining on the grounds his organization does not have a pact with Spain. MPEA nevertheless has received an invite from Mayor Pergola.

UA 'Viking' Handout Kids Hollywood Censors

Under the heading "What a Choice!" a publicity handout from United Artists last week poked subtle fun at the Code Administration.

It also referred to the Code as "the official Hollywood censors," a nomenclature which the Shurlock office has tried hard to avoid, its argument being that the the Code represents "self-regulation" distinct from censorship.

Asking "Want to be a movie censor?" the release related the case of Kirk Douglas' "The Vikings," now filming in Norway. It contains a scene in which Tony Curtis, as a Viking warrior, is captured by the English. The punishment. They cut off his right hand. In the same picture, a falcon attacks Douglas and rips his face. The owner breaks the bird's wing so he'll never be able to fly again.

Faced with these two scenes, the UA handout related, the Code ruled that the hand-cutting business was okay, but the breaking of the bird's wing represented "excessive brutality." Story didn't detail how each scene was presented, which is a strong consideration re Code approval.

Word From Berlin Is: Bring Own Bedstead

Berlin, July 2.

Again the ceremonies opening Berlin's Film Festival seemed endless, and often silly. Tedium was increased by translating each talk into English and French. This slowed things down, but even so the Italians complained, "What about us?"

The grand parade of stars opening day was less than memorable since half of the 37 introduced were uncharted in cinematic heavens. Human touch came when Henny Porten, who was big in silents, drew a sentimental ovation which nearly reduced her to tears. She dreams of resuming her film career.

Second loudest "ovation," went to Errol Flynn and his wife Patricia Wymore. Errol carried a cane (a novelty around here) with his tux and excused himself: "Mein Deutsch is lousy . . ." England's Trevor Howard, already a regular participant in the local pic fetes, was also warmly hailed.

German fans eagerly await promised appearances in town of Gary Cooper, Henry Fonda and Debbie Reynolds.

Con-current with the Festival's own schedule it is odd to note the Atelier am Zoo, an art cinema under the Zoo-Palast, showing America's "Big House" (1930) and Great Britain's "Atlantic".

Leo J. Horster, Walt Disney rep in Germany points up fact that there hasn't been a Berlin Film Festival which didn't showcase a Disney production. (This year, it's "Secret of Life" and "Man in Space") . . . And Disney has already revealed entry for 1958 Festival: It's "Perry." Herzog-Film, incidentally sent out two invitations to its reception. Repeat to make sure nobody forgot. Herzog distribs Disney pix in Germany . . .

Punsters dubbed this year's festival "Hassival." Because of actor O. E. Hasse being in three festival contenders "Arsene Lupin" (as Emperor Wilhelm II) and "Sait-on jamais," both French items, and Germany's "Last Ones Shall Be First" . . .

"Manuela," Lion International production world-preemed here has quickly found a distributor for Germany. Paramount took on this British entry . . . Ivan Foxwell, producer of "Manuela," and a handsome guy mistaken by some fans to be film star.

Noted are many festival pix in which children play leading role, per England's "Spanish Gardner," Denmark's "Be Dear to Me," Japan's "Horse Boy" and "Father Love" and Italy's "The Window to the Luna Park" and "Fathers and Sons."

Miss Elli Silman perhaps the Number One agent in Berlin telegraphed bids to her private party. She has 156 names on her talent roster.

Oscar Martay, the man who started the Berlin film fetes in 1951, strolling about the Ku-damm. Few seem to remember him. Some ask what he's doing now. Martay is married to Renate Barken, German actress. Marriage produced a bambino last year.

Errol Flynn staying at Hotel Gehrhus. He didn't like his rooms in the Kempinski. However, bulk of the Americans are at the Kempinski . . . Hotel situation is again frightful this year. Many guests had to lodge in private quarters. The new Hilton-operation hotel, still building an desperately needed.

Club of Berlin Film Journalists will hand a prize to the festival's "most amusing guest" and Henry Fonda gets prize of German film critics (as best foreign male star for "War & Peace").

Hardiest festival guest will probably be Japan's Izumi Yukimura. She arrived June 19 and stays over the whole period (last year's longest-stayer was Egypt's Magda).

Sweden's star contingent is particularly big this year: Ulla Jacobsson, Folke Sundquist, Bjoern Bjelvenstam, Gunvor Ponten.

Photos showing Marlon Brando wearing German officer's uniform (from his pic, "The Young Lions") currently making the local press rounds, B.Z. had it even on front page.

John Harris, head of Television-Film Productions here, to sell 25 independent pix ("C" product) from America. He has set up an office in Munich.

Herman Wobber's Retirement Highlighted By Offer of Another Job

San Francisco, July 2.

Herman Wobber, hale and 77, is taking on a new job.

It was offered him by 20th-Fox President Spyros Skouras in a wire to Wobber's Golden Anniversary luncheon at the Sheraton-Palace last week. Skouras wants to make 20th's longtime Western Division manager his "personal representative in the U. S. and overseas."

Wobber, celebrating 50 years in the film business, called the job "a very flattering offer" and added:

"I've always been a good soldier. Chances are I'll get the passports out."

So what was billed as Wobber's retirement luncheon was, in reality, what one of a dozen speakers called "an interlude between services to the motion picture business."

The luncheon was sponsored by the San Francisco Variety Club and attended by almost 500 production and distribution execs, all chums of Wobber. Chief Barker Irving (Bud) Levin spoke briefly then turned matters over to emcee Paul Speegle.

A number of Wobber's friends then spoke. Among them:

Jesse Lasky Sr.: "I have been Herman's friend for 48 years . . . I wouldn't have missed this luncheon if I'd been in Paris, London or Israel. He has been a wonderful influence . . . of all the men in the industry, the most honest, most truthful, the finest character the motion picture industry ever bred is Herman Wobber."

Alex Harrison: "It's very difficult, as Herman's protege, to speak objectively, but I'll try. This is a great mind, a man whose career has spanned the entire life of the motion picture industry . . . we should use his career as an inspiration to all of us. He has fought for the industry over the years second to nobody. And it is more than an industry. It is the greatest means of selling the American way of life ever devised: should the industry be dissolved, the job of the State Department would be increased a thousandfold."

Assemblyman Caspar W. Weinberger, representing Gov. Goodwin J. Knight and the State Legislature, presented Wobber with a scroll and Wobber finally spoke, briefly.

"This wasn't a job to me, this was a devotion. I practically ran to work every day for 50 years. I'm going to be lost—I feel like a capon when he first realizes what's happened to him."

USUAL SECRECY PREVAILS

Albert Vs. Columbia and Kalamazoo Cases Settled

Chicago, July 2.

Two settlements of antitrust suits against theatre chains and film distribs were made out of court here through the legal offices of Seymour Simon and Sheldon Collen.

Charles Albert, et al. versus Columbia Pictures Corp., et al., was filed in Northern Ohio District Court in 1952. Albert, operator of State Theatre in Urichsville, Ohio, suits against theatre clans and cuit for $396,000 in seeking competitive bidding for first run product there. Seymour Simon and Horace Adams (Cleveland) represented plaintiffs.

Kalamazoo Drive-In Theatre Co. also won a settlement versus major distribs and Butterfield Theatre Circuit having filed suit on similar charges in U.S. District Court for Western District of Michigan at Grand Rapids. The plaintiff operates theatre in Kalamazoo, Michigan. Working with Simon and Collen was attorney Elden W. Butzbaugh of Benton Harbor. Suit was filed in May, 1956.

In neither case was amount of settlement made public.

Britons Divided

tival, which winds tonight (Tues.) with the screening of Metro's "Teahouse of the August Moon," has become a trading centre for motion picture distribs and exporters. Because of this, it has almost been completely stripped of what little glamor it possessed.

At the same time, however, the festival has a major political role, recognized by Washington.

No Berlin Straw Vote

For the first time since its inception, the festival has dropped its poll of the Berlin public due largely to the criticisms published last year when, for the second time running, a mediocre German entry had walked off with the first prize. This year the prizes are being awarded solely on jury verdict.

Some German journalists are reportedly angry with VARIETY for its role in ending the public vote, but it's no secret that the MPEA member companies would have declined to participate if the poll had it been retained. In any event, the International Federation of Film Producers made its attitude clear earlier in the year and urged that the local public vote be dropped.

This year the jury, as well as the hundreds of visiting newsmen, have had a tough assignment, covering a minimum of four screenings a day to cope with the unspooling of 31 features, nine full length documentaries and 60 shorts, making a round total of 100 subjects. There's a growing feeling here that the volume of product is getting out of hand and that authorities will have to introduce some form of limitation, as is now being done in Cannes and Venice.

If limitation were imposed, it would automatically take care of a continuous grouse about the poor quality of much of the product.

Frederick S. Gronich, who heads the MPEA office in Frankfurt, was responsible for the organization of the American reception, which was one of the social highlights of the fest. So great was the clamor for invites that they assumed a black market value and were being offered along the Kurfurstendamm for 22 marks ($5.50). Marc Spiegel, MPEA topper in Europe, came in specially from Paris for the occasion; while Fayette W. Allport, chief of the Association's London office, who was around for the meetings of the International Federation of Film Producers, delayed his return to London to be on hand.

IA VOTES DISAPPEAR; WHOLE NEW ELECTION

Hollywood, July 2.

Chapter Two—The Case of the Missing Ballots.

Exec board of IATSE Local 728, Studio Electricians, over the weekend recommended to Local's membership that they start all over again with their annual elections. Matter will be decided at membership meeting, July 8.

To recapitulate, at recent election Al Franklin beat out incumbent R. A. (Nick) Nichols for biz agent. Election results were later challenged, but when appointed committee attempted recount, ballots, stored in union office, turned up missing. They still haven't been found, nor has any clue to what happened to them.

Seek Palance for 'Snorkel'

Hollywood, July 2.

Jack Palance is being paged by Associated Artists Productions to star in "The Snorkel," slated for production in England in late August. By that date, Palance will have completed his toplining role in "Flower of May," filmization of the Blasco Vincente Ibanez tome now being produced in Mexico by Olallo Rubio Jr. with Roberto Gabaldon directing.

"Snorkel" screenplay is by Jimmy Sangster and Peter Meyers and is based on yarn by Anthony Dawson.

Closed-TV's Strange Bedfellows

Rapidly growing field of closed-circuit television equipment is finding new clients, some of them for the strangest purposes, every day. Already used in such widely diversified fields as atomic energy, railroad freightyard traffic, railroad ticket sales and shoplifting detection, the closed-circuit setups, which range anywhere from a single camera and one monitor to more than 100 in each installation, are getting some new goings-over.

Dage Television division of Thompson Products Corp., the leading manufacturer of the closed-circuit equipment (cameras, monitors, amplifying units and self-contained stations), has had some eyebrow-lifters in the form of recent sales. Over and above the orthodox setups like the nine department stores using units to detect shoplifters; the two military installations (one already built in West Germany, the other scheduled to go up in September in the Azores); the "weathervision" units enabling a centrally located meteorologist to brief widely scattered groups of pilots (just installed at McGuire Air Force Base, N.J.), a medical education unit at St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, Dage has completed or contracted for the followi - installations:

A "visit-vision" setup enabling hospital patients to "visit by closed-circuit from the lobby with people normally refused entry to a hospital, children for example.

A "sidewalk superintendent" setup for a new Lexington Ave. skyscraper currently under construction in N.Y. The building, a 40-story unit under construction by the Minskoff realty interests, will have a front facade during construction which will house three monitors carrying pictures from strategically located cameras covering the entire construction operation.

A "counter unit" at Nathan's in Coney Island, which will cover the entire length of the hot-dog dispenser's counter, enabling a "spotter" stationed at a monitor to order clerks to various locations along the counter where the traffic's particularly congested with hot-dog-hungry patrons.

Shavelson, Rose's Ad Copy Plugging 'Beau James' Rejected as Detrimental to Medium

Hollywood, July 2.

Turnabout obviously is not fair play as far as television is concerned.

For years, the medium has had a good time needling Hollywood, its product and the industry in general. But KNXT has flatly refused to accept spot announcements plugging "Beau James," because the spots poke fun at tv.

Time for the spots was purchased by the Weiser Advertising Agency for producers Mel Shavelson and Jack Rose, but the copy was nixed on the grounds that it was "detrimental to the best interests of tv."

Disputed copy reads "Hey you. You look terrible. I mean it. You are suffering from T.T., which means Television Tension. Now why don't you stop looking at this silly little box; stop straining your eyes on this bleak, foggy picture. Tear yourself away from these nauseating wavy lines and break away right now from this tele-

Libby-Owens Coin For NCAA Grid

In its network bow, the Libby-Owens-Ford glass outfit has enabled NBC-TV to post the SRO sign on its nine NCAA national football games via purchase of one-quarter sponsorship.

In the football deal, Libby-Owens is taking one-quarter of all nine nationally-televised games, with the others lined up for the football being Sunbeam, Zenith and Bristol-Myers on the national front.

In addition, NBC signed Kemper Insurance, a branch of All-State Insurance, to sponsor the 15-minute "scoreboard" segment following all of the national games. Sportscaster for the wrapup isn't set yet.

NBC-Bankrolled Carson Pilot Peddled by ABC

NBC paid for the pilot on a Jack Carson telefilm, didn't sell it once it was made, and now ABC-TV is out to peddle the show. The Carson half-hour is called "Johnny Come Lately."

NBC let it go when the sales option lapsed, but it's reported that if the show is sold on ABC the NBC contract with Carson allows it to recapture initial production costs. ABC hasn't picked a time slot for the show.

SHARP CONTRAST IN IDEOLOGIES

By GEORGE ROSEN

One of the more intriguing aspects of the upcoming television season—and one which obviously will be watched closely by everybody in the business — is the virtual extreme in programming ideologies attending the NBC vs CBS program semesters next fall, for never before has there been such a wide variance in network philosophy. Who is right and which network will reap the major benefits (in profits and ratings) from the both-ends-of-the-pole concepts will not be known for months to come, but it's readily apparent even now that very much, including a whole way of leadership, is at stake.

Two events at NBC within the past fortnight (coupled with a brace of incidents at CBS within the same time span) perhaps best reflect the divergent approaches of the two major networks. The disclosure last week that Ted Mills and Ben Park, two of the top creative craftsmen within the public affairs-documentary orbit at NBC-TV, were leaving the company to form their own independent production outfit, and the previous week's revelation that Nat Wolff was exiting his key NBC berth in program development, are perhaps typical offshoots of the policies being pursued at NBC under the programming regime of exec vëepee Bob Kintner.

In an extension of the thinking that prevailed at ABC when Kintner prexied that network prior to his moveover as Bob Sarnoff's No. I aide, NBC has virtually abdicated any pretense of creating shows from within. Of the score or so of new programs that will preem on the network in the fall, every one without exception has been an out-and-out buy from the outside (most of them coming out of the MCA shop) but on the whole involving, along with MCA, such "external giants" in the talent-packaging orbit as William Morris, General Artists Corp., Ted Ashley, Henry Jaffe, etc. (All of which is a far cry from the Pat Weaver days at NBC with the network's "building from within" and its credo of joint development, which gave it part ownership in such entries as "Dragnet," "This Is Your Life," etc.)

In recent weeks, however, there's been a gradual liquidation of NBC's creative program forces, both in the areas of entertainment and public affairs (as witness the recent manpower defections.) Out on the Coast the NBC creative team of Elliott Lewis-Milt Josefsberg- Carroll Carroll was recently lopped off and creative activity there has slowed down to a walk.

Jaffe-Phillipson's Coronet Prod. Sets $20,000,000 Budget for TV Entries; Three Las Vegas Specs

Nielsen's Trendex

Last Friday's (28) "Person to Person" on CBS-TV, which bracketed A. C. Nielsen, the rating man, with humorist H. Allen Smith, smothered the competition on the Trendex tallies, copping a 15.9 for the 10:30 to 11 p.m. segment as against a 9.1 for the Gillette bouts on NBC-TV.

P to P's audience share was equally as impressive: 34.8 against 19.9

Hollywood, July 2.

Biggest production splurge by one producing outfit for the next television season, which may reach $20,000,000, has been blueprinted by Coronet Productions, formed last February by Henry Jaffe and William Phillipson. More than half of the firm's output has already been firmed for sponsorship and slotted in peak network time.

Among the new Coast projects will be three full hour specs remoted from Las Vegas, the first major network attraction from the desert spa. Exquisite Form (bras) will bankroll, with the first one in the fall and the other two in the spring. Phillipson will be executive producer and is now screening top femme names as emcee and production and writing talent for the three extravaganzas. Show will have variety-musical format and Vegas headliners will be supplemented by other star talent to be flown in.

Previously set and sealed by Coronet were the Chevy series of 49 hour shows, and the Shirley Temple series of 16 hour-long fairy tales. Deal with Screen Gems for the Temple series is only for use of the Columbia studio facilities, with Coronet paying below-the-line costs and retaining full control of all other elements. Phillipson will be executive producer on the filmed fantasies.

In the Chevy group of 49 will be 20 to 24 from Dinah Shore; 10 others of equal major calibre, some to be remoted beyond the NBC color studios in Burbank, and remainder of lesser budgeted shows for the summer months. Jaffe will act as executive producer only on the Chevy shows.

Others being readied for production are:

Series of 39 half hour programs based on "The 10 Commandments" and to be filmed by Screen Gems.

"Half Way House," series of half-hour comedies by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, with Norman Lessing adapting, to be filmed by Screen Gems.

Series of half hour childrens stories to be filmed here.

Series of half-hour suspense mysteries for filming here.

ABC Bags Kaiser With $7,000,000 Sun. TV Billings

Kaiser Aluminum gave ABC-TV its biggest single chunk of new business in years and the network its first major Sunday night entertainment package. Bankroller signed a weekly commitment for the entire hour of "The Maverick," a cowboy series produced by Warner Bros., to be shown between 7:30 and 8:30 p.m.

Over the period of a year Kaiser will be forking out $7,000,000 net in time and talent, the network said. Gross time charges will be in the vicinity of $3,300,000 on the year, the rest in production costs. It gives the network a programming foothold in five nights instead of four, Saturday and Monday still being relatively weak nights.

James Garner, a thesp under contract to Warners, will play the lead. However, there is under consideration a plan to give Garner, who

Tom Loeb's New Status on Specials

Tom Loeb has been upped to director of special programs at NBC-TV, taking charge of programming of all spectaculars for the network for next season. Loeb, whose last assignment had been producer on "Tonight" for the past few weeks, takes over a post which has been vacant until now, with nighttime programming veep Bob Lewine having handled it on a temporary basis.

Dave Tebet continues under Loeb as manager of special programs, maintaining the continuity of the operation. The spec programming had been handled by the trio of Lewine, Tebet and Nat Wolff (with a programming assist from program sales veep Mike Dann), but Wolff's resignation as v.p. over program development cued Loeb's appointment.

'PLAYHOUSE 90' MULLS DARROW BIO

Hollywood, July 2.

A television bio of famed criminal attorney Clarence Darrow is being mapped by CBS-TV's "Playhouse 90" for next season.

Writer hasn't yet been assigned to the teleplay, but producer Martin Manulis has the Darrow project on his agenda, and will make the scripting assignment shortly.

Berlin, July 2.

The General Assembly of the International Federation of Film Producers, meeting here during the run of the seventh annual film festival, has so far refused to give official recognition to next year's Brussels film festival, scheduled to run in conjunction with the Belgian capital's World Fair. Federation adopted this stand because of the country's continuing discriminatory attitude to the European producing nations.

The Belgians allow the American distribs to remit 65% of their earnings, but European producers have considerably less advantageous terms. That puts Belgium in conflict with the Federation rules, which stipulate that festivals can only be supported if all membernations are given equal treatment.

The Brussels fest is skedded to run in two parts. The first, limited to shorts, will start on May 20, 1958, and run for a week. The feature festival will tee off May 30 and continue through June 13.

The General Assembly also gave the thumbs-down to the Locarno Festival for the second year running, also because the Swiss authorities have conceded better terms to the American industry than to the European producers. In both cases, the Motion Picture Assn., while rowing in with majority opinion, has adopted a conciliatory line towards achieving official blessing for both junkets.

In the event that the Federation gives official support to the Belgian fest, next year's General Assembly meet will take place in Brussels. Otherwise, the venue will be switched to Vienna.

Nominated for the board were Samuel Einhorn, Norman Elson, Sam Freedman, Bob Goldblatt, Al Greene, Jack Hattem, Jack Heyman Ben Knobel, Sam Keonig, Larry Kurtis, Murray LeBoss, Martin Levine, Al Margolies, Melvin Miller, Irving Renner, Ray Rhone, Jack Rochelle, Tom Rodgers and Murray Schoen.

'KEEP US INFORMED ON ARBITER TALKS'

Austin, July 2.

Texas Drive-In Theatre Owners Assn. has asked that it be given representation at the conferences now being held to establish an industrywide arbitration system.

Eddie Joseph, local theatre owner and operator, and prez of the organization, has dispatched a letter to Ralph D. Hetzel of the Motion Picture Assn. of America in N. Y. advising him that the MPAA "should in all fairness, see that our organization is represented at the conference. Since we are directly affected by whatever decisions are made at these meetings, we feel that if good relationship and better understanding of the problems that affect us are to be achieved, we must be represented."

Ernest Stellings, prez of Theatre Owners of America, said his association would not be adverse to inviting the Texas drive in group to participate in the deliberations, according to Joseph.

San Sebastian Fest Shapes Bigger This Yr. With FIAPF Approval

Madrid, June 25.

Spurred by major festival status granted at the recent Cannes meeting of the International Federation of Producers Associations (FIAPF), the San Sebastian Film Festival committee is trying for the glitter and world ballyhoo that make Cannes and Venice standout gatherings. Calendared for July 21-28, fest will be a composite of the Cannes and Venice festival patterns. All countries present at Cannes have received invitations to San Sebastian. Communist countries will get invites too, despite lack of diplomatic ties with Spain, via the FIAPF offices.

Two golden seashells (Concha d'Oro) will be awarded to the best feature and top short. The International Catholic Cinema Office will offer its own award for the best picture shown. In addition, the city of San Sebastian and local personalities will give prizes for best performances and direction.

An international jury, headed by Festival President Juan Pergola (mayor of San Sebastian), will consist of four Spaniards and a nom d'eminence from England, France, Italy and Germany.

U.S. participation at San Sebastian is a big question mark at the moment. At the FIAPF meeting in Cannes, upgrading of San Sebastian Festival was voted unanimously with Motion Picture Export Assn. delegate F. W. Allport abstaining on the grounds his organization does not have a pact with Spain. MPEA nevertheless has received an invite from Mayor Pergola.

UA 'Viking' Handout Kids Hollywood Censors

Under the heading "What a Choice!" a publicity handout from United Artists last week poked subtle fun at the Code Administration.

It also referred to the Code as "the official Hollywood censors," a nomenclature which the Shurlock office has tried hard to avoid, its argument being that the the Code represents "self-regulation" distinct from censorship.

Herman Wobber's Retirement Highlighted By Offer of Another Job

San Francisco, July 2.

Herman Wobber, hale and 77, is taking on a new job.

It was offered him by 20th-Fox President Spyros Skouras in a wire to Wobber's Golden Anniversary luncheon at the Sheraton-Palace last week. Skouras wants to make 20th's longtime Western Division manager his "personal representative in the U. S. and overseas."

Wobber, celebrating 50 years in the film business, called the job "a very flattering offer" and added:

"I've always been a good soldier. Chances are I'll get the passports out."

So what was billed as Wobber's retirement luncheon was, in reality, what one of a dozen speakers called "an interlude between services to the motion picture business."

The luncheon was sponsored by the San Francisco Variety Club and attended by almost 500 production and distribution execs, all chums of Wobber. Chief Barker Irving (Bud) Levin spoke briefly then turned matters over to emcee Paul Speegle.

A number of Wobber's friends then spoke. Among them:

Jesse Lasky Sr.: "I have been Herman's friend for 48 years . . . I wouldn't have missed this luncheon if I'd been in Paris, London or Israel. He has been a wonderful influence . . . of all the men in the industry, the most honest, most truthful, the finest character the motion picture industry ever bred is Herman Wobber."

Alex Harrison: "It's very difficult, as Herman's protege, to speak objectively, but I'll try. This is a great mind, a man whose career has spanned the entire life of the motion picture industry . . . we should use his career as an inspiration to all of us. He has fought for the industry over the years second to nobody. And it is more than an industry. It is the greatest means of selling the American way of life ever devised: should the industry be dissolved, the job of the State Department would be increased a thousandfold."

Assemblyman Caspar W. Weinberger, representing Gov. Goodwin J. Knight and the State Legislature, presented Wobber with a scroll and Wobber finally spoke, briefly.

"This wasn't a job to me, this was a devotion. I practically ran to work every day for 50 years. I'm going to be lost—I feel like a capon when he first realizes what's happened to him."

USUAL SECRECY PREVAILS

Albert Vs. Columbia and Kalamazoo Cases Settled

Chicago, July 2.

Two settlements of antitrust suits against theatre chains and film distribs were made out of court here through the legal offices of Seymour Simon and Sheldon Collen.

Charles Albert, et al. versus Columbia Pictures Corp., et al., was filed in Northern Ohio District Court in 1952. Albert, operator of State Theatre in Urichsville, Ohio, suits against theatre clans and cuit for $396,000 in seeking competitive bidding for first run product there. Seymour Simon and Horace Adams (Cleveland) represented plaintiffs.

Kalamazoo Drive-In Theatre Co. also won a settlement versus major distribs and Butterfield Theatre Circuit having filed suit on similar charges in U.S. District Court for Western District of Michigan at Grand Rapids. The plaintiff operates theatre in Kalamazoo, Michigan. Working with Simon and Collen was attorney Elden W. Butzbaugh of Benton Harbor. Suit was filed in May, 1956.

In neither case was amount of settlement made public.

tival, which winds tonight (Tues.) with the screening of Metro's "Teahouse of the August Moon," has become a trading centre for motion picture distribs and exporters. Because of this, it has almost been completely stripped of what little glamor it possessed.

At the same time, however, the festival has a major political role, recognized by Washington.

No Berlin Straw Vote

For the first time since its inception, the festival has dropped its poll of the Berlin public due largely to the criticisms published last year when, for the second time running, a mediocre German entry had walked off with the first prize. This year the prizes are being awarded solely on jury verdict.

Some German journalists are reportedly angry with VARIETY for its role in ending the public vote, but it's no secret that the MPEA member companies would have declined to participate if the poll had it been retained. In any event, the International Federation of Film Producers made its attitude clear earlier in the year and urged that the local public vote be dropped.

This year the jury, as well as the hundreds of visiting newsmen, have had a tough assignment, covering a minimum of four screenings a day to cope with the unspooling of 31 features, nine full length documentaries and 60 shorts, making a round total of 100 subjects. There's a growing feeling here that the volume of product is getting out of hand and that authorities will have to introduce some form of limitation, as is now being done in Cannes and Venice.

If limitation were imposed, it would automatically take care of a continuous grouse about the poor quality of much of the product.

Frederick S. Gronich, who heads the MPEA office in Frankfurt, was responsible for the organization of the American reception, which was one of the social highlights of the fest. So great was the clamor for invites that they assumed a black market value and were being offered along the Kurfurstendamm for 22 marks ($5.50). Marc Spiegel, MPEA topper in Europe, came in specially from Paris for the occasion; while Fayette W. Allport, chief of the Association's London office, who was around for the meetings of the International Federation of Film Producers, delayed his return to London to be on hand.

IA VOTES DISAPPEAR; WHOLE NEW ELECTION

Hollywood, July 2.

Chapter Two—The Case of the Missing Ballots.

Exec board of IATSE Local 728, Studio Electricians, over the weekend recommended to Local's membership that they start all over again with their annual elections. Matter will be decided at membership meeting, July 8.

To recapitulate, at recent election Al Franklin beat out incumbent R. A. (Nick) Nichols for biz agent. Election results were later challenged, but when appointed committee attempted recount, ballots, stored in union office, turned up missing. They still haven't been found, nor has any clue to what happened to them.

Seek Palance for 'Snorkel'

Hollywood, July 2.

Jack Palance is being paged by Associated Artists Productions to star in "The Snorkel," slated for production in England in late August. By that date, Palance will have completed his toplining role in "Flower of May," filmization of the Blasco Vincente Ibanez tome now being produced in Mexico by Olallo Rubio Jr. with Roberto Gabaldon directing.

"Snorkel" screenplay is by Jimmy Sangster and Peter Meyers and is based on yarn by Anthony Dawson.

Closed-TV's Strange Bedfellows

Rapidly growing field of closed-circuit television equipment is finding new clients, some of them for the strangest purposes, every day. Already used in such widely diversified fields as atomic energy, railroad freightyard traffic, railroad ticket sales and shoplifting detection, the closed-circuit setups, which range anywhere from a single camera and one monitor to more than 100 in each installation, are getting some new goings-over.

Dage Television division of Thompson Products Corp., the leading manufacturer of the closed-circuit equipment (cameras, monitors, amplifying units and self-contained stations), has had some eyebrow-lifters in the form of recent sales. Over and above the orthodox setups like the nine department stores using units to detect shoplifters; the two military installations (one already built in West Germany, the other scheduled to go up in September in the Azores); the "weathervision" units enabling a centrally located meteorologist to brief widely scattered groups of pilots (just installed at McGuire Air Force Base, N.J.), a medical education unit at St. Luke's Hospital, Chicago, Dage has completed or contracted for the following installations:

A "visit-vision" setup enabling hospital patients to "visit by closed-circuit from the lobby with people normally refused entry to a hospital, children for example.

A "sidewalk superintendent" setup for a new Lexington Ave. skyscraper currently under construction in N.Y. The building, a 40-story unit under construction by the Minskoff realty interests, will have a front facade during construction which will house three monitors carrying pictures from strategically located cameras covering the entire construction operation.

A "counter unit" at Nathan's in Coney Island, which will cover the entire length of the hot-dog dispenser's counter, enabling a "spotter" stationed at a monitor to order clerks to various locations along the counter where the traffic's particularly congested with hot-dog-hungry patrons.

Shavelson, Rose's Ad Copy Plugging 'Beau James' Rejected as Detrimental to Medium

Hollywood, July 2.

Turnabout obviously is not fair play as far as television is concerned.

For years, the medium has had a good time needling Hollywood, its product and the industry in general. But KNXT has flatly refused to accept spot announcements plugging "Beau James," because the spots poke fun at tv.

Time for the spots was purchased by the Weiser Advertising Agency for producers Mel Shavelson and Jack Rose, but the copy was nixed on the grounds that it was "detrimental to the best interests of tv."

Disputed copy reads "Hey you. You look terrible. I mean it. You are suffering from T.T., which means Television Tension. Now why don't you stop looking at this silly little box; stop straining your eyes on this bleak, foggy picture. Libby-Owens Coin For NCAA Grid

In its network bow, the Libby-Owens-Ford glass outfit has enabled NBC-TV to post the SRO sign on its nine NCAA national football games via purchase of one-quarter sponsorship.

In the football deal, Libby-Owens is taking one-quarter of all nine nationally-televised games, with the others lined up for the football being Sunbeam, Zenith and Bristol-Myers on the national front.

In addition, NBC signed Kemper Insurance, a branch of All-State Insurance, to sponsor the 15-minute "scoreboard" segment following all of the national games. Sportscaster for the wrapup isn't set yet.

NBC-Bankrolled Carson Pilot Peddled by ABC

NBC paid for the pilot on a Jack Carson telefilm, didn't sell it once it was made, and now ABC-TV is out to peddle the show. The Carson half-hour is called "Johnny Come Lately."

NBC let it go when the sales option lapsed, but it's reported that if the show is sold on ABC the NBC contract with Carson allows it to recapture initial production costs. ABC hasn't picked a time slot for the show.

SHARP CONTRAST IN IDEOLOGIES

By GEORGE ROSEN

One of the more intriguing aspects of the upcoming television season—and one which obviously will be watched closely by everybody in the business — is the virtual extreme in programming ideologies attending the NBC vs CBS program semesters next fall, for never before has there been such a wide variance in network philosophy. Who is right and which network will reap the major benefits (in profits and ratings) from the both-ends-of-the-pole concepts will not be known for months to come, but it's readily apparent even now that very much, including a whole way of leadership, is at stake.

Two events at NBC within the past fortnight (coupled with a brace of incidents at CBS within the same time span) perhaps best reflect the di rergent approaches of the two major networks. The disclosure last week that Ted Mills and Ben Park, two of the top creative craftsmen within the public affairs-documentary orbit at NBC-TV, were leaving the company to form their own independent production outfit, and the previous week's revelation that Nat Wolff was exiting his key NBC berth in program development, are perhaps typical offshoots of the policies being pursued at NBC under the programming regime of exec veepee Bob Kintner.

In an extension of the thinking that prevailed at ABC when Kintner prexied that network prior to his moveover as Bob Sarnoff's No. I aide, NBC has virtually abdicated any pretense of creating shows from within. Of the score or so of new programs that will preem on the network in the fall, every one without exception has been an out-and-out buy from the outside (most of them coming out of the MCA shop) but on the whole involving, along with MCA, such "external giants" in the talent-packaging orbit as William Morris, General Artists Corp., Ted Ashley, Henry Jaffe, etc. (All of which is a far cry from the Pat Weaver days at NBC with the network's "building from within" and its credo of joint development, which gave it part ownership in such entries as "Dragnet," "This Is Your Life," etc.)

In recent weeks, however, there's been a gradual liquidation of NBC's creative program forces, both in the areas of entertainment and public affairs (as witness the recent manpower defections.) Out on the Coast the NBC creative team of Elliott Lewis-Milt Josefsberg- Carroll Carroll was recently lopped off and creative activity there has slowed down to a walk.

Hollywood, July 2.

Biggest production splurge by one producing outfit for the next television season, which may reach $20,000,000, has been blueprinted by Coronet Productions, formed last February by Henry Jaffe and William Phillipson. More than half of the firm's output has already been firmed for sponsorship and slotted in peak network time.

Among the new Coast projects will be three full hour specs remoted from Las Vegas, the first major network attraction from the desert spa. Exquisite Form (bras) will bankroll, with the first one in the fall and the other two in the spring. Phillipson will be executive producer and is now screening top femme names as emcee and production and writing talent for the three extravaganzas. Show will have variety-musical format and Vegas headliners will be supplemented by other star talent to be flown in.

Previously set and sealed by Coronet were the Chevy series of 49 hour shows, and the Shirley Temple series of 16 hour-long fairy tales. Deal with Screen Gems for the Temple series is only for use of the Columbia studio facilities, with Coronet paying below-the-line costs and retaining full control of all other elements. Phillipson will be executive producer on the filmed fantasies.

In the Chevy group of 49 will be 20 to 24 from Dinah Shore; 10 others of equal major calibre, some to be remoted beyond the NBC color studios in Burbank, and remainder of lesser budgeted shows for the summer months. Jaffe will act as executive producer only on the Chevy shows.

Others being readied for production are:

Series of 39 half hour programs based on "The 10 Commandments" and to be filmed by Screen Gems.

"Half Way House," series of half-hour comedies by Howard Lindsay and Russel Crouse, with Norman Lessing adapting, to be filmed by Screen Gems.

Series of half hour childrens stories to be filmed here.

Series of half-hour suspense mysteries for filming here.

ABC Bags Kaiser With $7,000,000 Sun. TV Billings

Kaiser Aluminum gave ABC-TV its biggest single chunk of new business in years and the network its first major Sunday night entertainment package. Bankroller signed a weekly commitment for the entire hour of "The Maverick," a cowboy series produced by Warner Bros., to be shown between 7:30 and 8:30 p.m.

Over the period of a year Kaiser will be forking out $7,000,000 net in time and talent, the network said. Gross time charges will be in the vicinity of $3,300,000 on the year, the rest in production costs. It gives the network a programming foothold in five nights instead of four, Saturday and Monday still being relatively weak nights.

James Garner, a thesp under contract to Warners, will play the lead. However, there is under consideration a plan to give Garner, who Mezzo-soprano Blanche Thebom, who's over here to appear in the Covent Garden production of "The Trojans," will also be in the show.

Tom Loeb's New Status on Specials

Tom Loeb has been upped to director of special programs at NBC-TV, taking charge of programming of all spectaculars for the network for next season. Loeb, whose last assignment had been producer on "Tonight" for the past few weeks, takes over a post which has been vacant until now, with nighttime programming veep Bob Lewine having handled it on a temporary basis.

Dave Tebet continues under Loeb as manager of special programs, maintaining the continuity of the operation. The spec programming had been handled by the trio of Lewine, Tebet and Nat Wolff (with a programming assist from program sales veep Mike Dann), but Wolff's resignation as v.p. over program development cued Loeb's appointment.

MAGNUSON REPORT LIKELY TO HAVE WIDESPREAD INDUSTRY REPERCUSSIONS

By JACK LEVY

Washington, July 2.

Extensive changes in tv network practices in dealing with advertisers and affiliates were called for last week in a Senate report which warned that if its recommendations are not carried out "the networks may attain such a position of overwhelming dominance that the public interest will require the imposition of detailed and rigid government regulation."

The report, a staff document issued by the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee, of which Sen. Warren G. Magnuson (D., Wash.) is chairman, was prepared under the supervision of Kenneth Cox, special counsel to the Committee. The Committee unanimously agreed to its release but withheld formal approval of its recommendations pending comment from the Federal Communications Commission and the Department of Justice.

In transmitting the report to the FCC, Sen. Magnuson notified the agency his Committee intends to continue "close supervision" over developments and practices in tv networks. He called for comments on the recommendations not later than 90 days after the Commission's network study is completed (approximately Sept. 30). When these comments are received, he said, the recommendations in the staff report may be revised. The Justice Dept. was asked for its views "at an early date."

A challenging document of 101 pages, notable for its clarity in appraising the testimony taken by the Committee at hearings in the Spring of last year, the report is expected to have widespread repercussions. Following a methodical presentation of the charges and contentions made by Richard A. Moore, prexy of KTTV in Los Angeles, and others, it comes to these conclusions:

That the combination of option time and must-buy enables the networks to determine, in effect, what the nation watches on its tv sets.

Concentration of Control

That while there are "sound reasons" for permitting networks to own and operate stations, questions might be raised as to possible undue concentration of control over the medium exerted by "the present extent of their ownership."

That the proposal by Sen. John W. Bricker (R., O.) to put the networks under direct regulation of the FCC should be held in abeyance until the Commission's network study is completed.

That clearance for network programs outside of option time aggravates the problems of the nonnetwork advertiser, the independent program producer, the independent station, and the public. It is therefore necessary to impose restrictions "to prevent television from becoming a completely national medium serving no local need and almost entirely dependent on network service."

That it would be improper for a network "to tie the use of its own staging services to a sale of time

Charles Ayres, who successively headed the ABC and NBC Radio networks, is returning to ABC as a tv salesman. He left ABC about two years ago for NBC, and left latter web six months ago.

Since his departure from NBC, Ayres has not been active in the industry. He'll report to Gene Wyatt, ABC-TV national sales manager.

Doerfer Named As Head of FCC

Washington, July 2.

President Eisenhower yesterday (Mon.) designated Comr. John C. Doerfer as the new chairman of the Federal Communications Commission succeeding George C. McConnaughey whose term expired June 30. Doerfer was notified of his appointment in a certificate from the White House. Since there was no mention of a time limit, it's presumed he will head the agency at least until 1960 when his seven-year term expires.

Prior to joining the Commission in 1953, Doerfer was Chairman of the Wisconsin Public Service Commission. A lawyer, he was City Attorney of West Allis, Wis., from 1940 to 1948, having been elected on a nonpartisan ticket. He has since been active in Republican politics.

Meanwhile, there was no indication as to who would be named to fill the commissionership left vacant by McConnaughey's departure.

McConnaughey announced his return to the practice of law. He has formed a partnership with George O. Sutton, Washington lawyer, and Robert L'Heureux, who simultaneously resigned as Congressional liaison for the FCC. The firm has opened offices in Washington (in the National Press Bldg.) and Columbus, O.

McConnaughey's departure was

Mull New Year's Entry As Hayward's 1st Spec; Dicker Martin-Merman

Leland Hayward's first spec under his five-year commitment to CBS-TV will be telecast around the end of the year, possibly as a New Year's Eve entry, and will be a revue-form vehicle bearing the tentative title, "What a Year!" No talent set yet, but Hayward is understood to be talking to Mary Martin and Ethel Merman for starring roles in the 90-minute spec. Hayward, of course, brought Misses Martin and Merman together in the memorable Ford anniversary spec some seasons back.

As of the moment, the project is on the tentative side, except for the year-in-review theme and the timing of the show. Hayward has had only a couple of meetings with CBS on the project, and is proceeding on his own in its development. Under his five-year deal with CBS, he's committed to deliver one spec per year and one new series per year, in which he gets an ownership stake.

'Telerama's' Likely 400G

Hollywood, July 2.

Final figure of $400,000 is expected from June 22-23 City of Hope "Telerama" telethon on KTLA, plus accompanying house-to-house solicitation.

Preliminary figures issued by general chairman Harry Karl indicated a $250,000-plus take.

Highlights of Magnuson Report

Washington, July 2.

Here are some highlights of the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee staff report on the network phase of its tv inquiry:

On the claim of restriction on network affiliates the report finds that "the impact of the affiliate-network partnership, and the attendant desire of the affiliate to maintain his relations with the network on a friendly and profitable basis, is so strong that a high degree of program control is, in fact, exercised by the network."

On the claim of restriction on non-network producers of programs the report finds "that an independent film producer or syndicator—like a network—can afford to produce a high quality program only if he can be reasonably sure of getting national circulation for it. That involves, of course, getting clearance in most of the major markets in the country—and in all but a handful of areas this means over stations affiliated with one or more networks. And like the network, an independent producer needs good time periods if he is to have a chance of recovering the cost of a first-run syndicated program within a reasonable length of time.

"However . . . a large part of the best evening time is occupied by the networks by virtue of their option-affiliation leverage. If the independent producer is excluded from [major] markets, this may so increase the risks of the venture, or so lengthen the time required to recover the investment, that he may decide not to make the proposed series at all unless he can get assured clearance through a national sale for network release."

On the claim of restriction on advertisers the report finds that "even when time is available, the shadow of the option may discourage the local advertiser from full use of television" and that even if he finds a good time period "he is then up against the growing shortage of new high-quality syndicated film programs. If he is to compete in a good time period with network programming, he must have something which will be attractive to the public . . . It therefore seems that local and regional advertisers, having been excluded from network tv by the must-buy, may be seriously impeded in their efforts to sponsor quality programs in the peak viewing hours as a result of the option rights of the network."

Presbrey's 'Com'l Format' In Bid To Reactivate Institutional Clients

Then There Was 1

As of the summer, when "Big Story" goes to reruns, there will be only one live half-hour dramatic show left on television.

That's the CBS-TV Sunday morning religioso entry, "Look Up and Live."

For all its press and public attention this past season in particular, the public affairs stanza faces one of the toughest sponsor problems in its history. Corn Products, the last sponsor on any of the four major network tv news panel shows, will be ankling "Martha Rountree's Press Conference" at the termination of the current ABC-TV cycle. The reason, contends Oliver Presbrey, who owns part of the show with Martha Rountree, is there has been a fundamental misunderstanding of a panel's commercial values — even by Presbrey.

His theories have a reflection for all institutionally sponsored shows, because Presbrey has stated that today the soft-sell underwriter in tv is primarily interested in generating the enthusiasm of his own big customers and perhaps that of his own employees, but the general audience, which once was the

Philco Shifts A.C. Pageant to CBS-TV

Atlantic City, July 2.

CBS-TV will carry 90 minutes of the finals of the Miss America Pageant from Convention Hall here, instead of ABC, which for the past three years has aired the program.

Albert A. Marks Jr., chairman of the Pageant Television Committee, said that the switch will mean that 20 million more viewers will see the big show, bringing the total number to an expected 50,000-000. Pageant program was third in the list of autumn programs in the 1956 Nielsen ratings.

BBD&O has been retained to stage the telecast this year, and its television department is expected to improve the Philco-sponsored program. One important change is the elimination of all backstage telecasting during the airings of the finals.

This year all cameras will be focused upon the yast Convention Hall stage, and the Pageant committee has obtained an 80-foot long lighting unit which, suspended from the auditorium ceiling, will illuminate the entire stage. Thus no space-consuming lighting units will be needed. Such units in past years marred the vision of ticket holders.

Nearly 200 ABC channels carried the '56 pageant, and the switch to CBS has already resulted in the addition of 68 stations to the network.

Bert Parks may again emcee the big show.

NBC Buys 'Flicka' For 39-Wk. Run

TCF-TV, the 20th-Fox telefilm subsid, has gotten a new lease on life via its first sale of the season, an order from NBC-TV for 39 new "My Friend Flicka" films. Web hasn't lined up a sponsor for the series yet, nor has it found a time period, though its Monday and Tuesday 7:30 to 8 periods are possibilities, as is the Sunday 6:30 slot.

"Flicka" had a year-and-a-half run on CBS-TV, a year of it under Colgate sponsorship. Latter had to bow out, however because of budgetary problems, and the show was carried by Columbia as a sustainer, with an additional deal for reruns for summer use. CBS-TV finishes with the reruns in September. Meanwhile, however, NBC had taken an option on the show, and this week decided to excercise it for new product for the fall.

FCC Okays Dual V & U Station

Washington July 2.

First UHF-VHP dual operation was authorized by the Federal Communications Commission last week with issuance of a permit to WJMR-TV in New Orleans, an ultra high station, to use VHF channel 12 on an experimental basis. Stated purpose of the grant is to conduct "a direct a comparison of simultaneous UHF and VHF operation."

Channel 12 was added to New Orleans about two months ago to provide the city with a third V. The channel is open to competitive applications but WJMR has filed several applications to use it experimentally pending a decision on the inevitable contest for it.

Under FCC policy, experimental stations cannot be used for commercial purposes. The station, therefore, will duplicate its UHF programs on the VHF channel but will not charge extra for the dual coverage.

A dual operation of a permanent nature was proposed in an application filed with the agency by Pittsburgh's educational tv station, WQED, which operates on VHF channel 13. The station, which telecasts an average of 78 hours per week, applied for use UHF channel 47.

Station told the Commission it wants to expand its operations to program for more classrooms It also hopes to provide specialized educational services for industries and professions.

Nearly 100 public schools in the area voluntarily contribute 30s per pupil to support WQED. The Catholic Diocese makes an additional contribution.

Grant of the application will require a waiver of the FCC's "duopoly" rule which prohibits a licensee from having more than one of the same type station in a community.

EXAMINER REVERSED IN OAKLAND GRANT

Washington, July 2.

The Federal Communications Commission yesterday (Mon.) finalized its decision to award Channel 2 in Oakland, Calif. to San Francisco-Oakland Television Inc., in which Ward D. Ingram of San Marino, Calif., and William D. Pabst of Atherton, Calif., jointly hold 95% of the stock. Ingrim is now general manager of the Don Lee Broadcasting System, a division of General Teleradio. Pabst is manager of radio station KFRC in Frisco.

Decision was a reversal of an examiner's recommendation favoring Channel Two Inc., in which Joseph R. Knowland, publisher of the Oakland Tribune and father of Sen. William F. Knowland (R.-Calif.) holds a 5% interest.

'Gunsmoke' Hot as a Trigger

"Gunsmoke" hit the No. 1 spot on the Nielsen Top 10 list for the first time since it hit the air a couple of seasons back, and grabbed off the No. 3 position on the total audience listing as well. Nielsen Top 10 for the two weeks ending June 8 held little else in the way of surprises, except that three NBC specials boosted its quota on the TA list to four out of 10, while it captured three out of 10 on the average audience list. CBS had seven out of 10 on the AA list and six in the TA category.

Can Mail Do What Ratings Don't For 'Club 60'? Show's Fate at Stake

Chicago, July 2.

Rating services are being taken to task in an overt challenge by "Club 60," which is making a last ditch effort now to preserve itself on NBC-TV's daytime lineup. What the show hopes to use as ammunition against ratings is a quantitative mail response from its viewers.

Although the Chicago-originating variety show has never had an actual multi-market survey, the city-by-city ratings are known to be unintoxicating. The Dennis James starrer is under pact to run through Aug. 16, and the handwriting on the wall reads that the show will terminate then unless the net elects to renew it by July 16. It's no secret that the Chicago NBC-TV shop wants the show to continue, although the local ratings are particularly inauspicious, it being the principal web origination from the studios here.

Idea for the mail campaign came quite accidentally. Dennis James last Tuesday (25) gave an inkling on the show that "Club 60" had an uncertain future, and he asked the viewers to write in. Next day brought 500 letters to the Chicago NBC desk, and by the weekend the mail count was at 4,300. This doesn't include the letters sent to the 78 other NBC stations carrying the show.

On Monday (1), the net began offering prizes for the best letters on the subject, "Why I Like 'Club 60.' " Such premiums as Polaroid Land Cameras are being offered as an inducement for a postal show-of-hands. Contest will end July 12, about four days before NBC-TV has to make its decision on whether or not "60" stays on the fall calendar.

As the show is seen in only seven of the 14 major markets, the best yardstick available are ratings for the time period that include local programming in areas that don't carry "Club 60." Trendex

No Suspense Here

It pays to have a film producer in the family, NBC-TV found out. Pressed for a new title for "Crisis" (it sounded too close to Chrysler's "Climax" for the comfort of co-sponsor Ford), web went through a string of possibilities until it settled last week on "Suspicion." That title happened to be controlled by Alfred Hitchcock, who directed the Cary Grant-Joan Fontaine starrer of the same name for RKO in 1941. Hitchcock, of course, is producing 10 of the "Crisis" — oops, "Suspicion" segments for NBC-TV.

Web also this week set Dennis O'Keefe as permanent host for the series, both for live and filmed shows.

CBS-AM Coffers Swelled by 665G

CBS Radio signed six new sponsors to pacts totaling $665,000 gross this week. Three of the deals fell into the web's "Impact Plan;" with Grove Laboratories inking for 20 "Impact" segments per week for 20 weeks starting in October, GMC Truck & Coach Division pacting for three segments a week for four weeks starting in August, and Hudson Vitamin buying one segment a week for 13 weeks starting in September.

Other business came from Sterling Drug, which bought a five-minute weekly segment in "Gunsmoke"; Clairol, for a weekly segment in the Galen Drake show; and Pharma-Craft, for two weekly seven-and-a-half-minute segments a week in daytime for 26 weeks.

Flock of Station Transfers OK'd; WBC Balto Nod

Washington, July 2.

Cleaning up an accumulation of applications prior to the departure of Chairman George C. McConnaughey, the Federal Communications Commission last week gave its okay to 17 sales of radio and tv stations.

Largest of the transactions approved was the purchase by Westinghouse Electric Co. of WAAM (TV) in Baltimore through an exchange of stock. Deal gives Westinghouse its full complement of five VHF stations. Company also holds a construction permit for a UHF station in Chicago.

Commission actions involved one other operating tv station—KNAC-TV in Fort Smith, Ark. Control of the outlet was transferred from the H. S. Nakdimen estate to Harry Pollock and The Harry Newton Co. Consideration involved was $61,500.

Largest of the radio transfers was KHEP in Phoenix, Ariz., which was acquired by Grand Canyon Broadcasters Inc. under a $250,000 rental deal.

Other radio station deals approved were WHMA in Anniston, Ala., sold for $75,000 to Grover Wise and Ralph M. Allgood; WQOK in Greenville, S. C., purchased for $125,000 by owners of WIVK in Knoxville, Tenn.; KJAY in Topeka, Kans., acquired by Dale S. Helmers, et al, for $142,500; WSPC in Anniston, Ala., sold to Anniston Broadcasting Co. for $65,000; WOOO in Deland, Fla., purchased by a group headed by Herbert A. Saxe for $65,000, subject to liabilities; and KIHO in Sioux Falls, S. D., control of which was acquired by James A. Saunders and John W. Hazleff for $65,000.

'PRIDE' SHOWS AT NIGHTTIME?

With next fall's nighttime television lineup presenting an almost solid front of straight bread-and-butter programming, some of the more imaginative network program planners are playing with some intriguing possibilities in terms of "getting television out of its rut."

Though the ideas are strictly in the wide-eyed speculative stage, they present some challenging new thinking in terms of network responsibility in nighttime programming. Basically, the ideas are for the webs to foot the bill to keep nighttime tv perking with programs that normally would be relegated to a Sunday afternoon.

What would happen, the thinking goes, if CBS-TV took an "Odyssey" or a "Seven Lively Arts" and transplanted them to prime evening time? Or NBC took its opera series and did the same? What comes first, the chicken or the egg? Do the Sunday afternoon shows get low ratings merely because they are on Sunday afternoons, or because the public shuns culture at any time? What kind of rating would an "Odyssey," for example, pull down at 8 to 9 Wednesdays?

Use of examples like "Odyssey" and "Arts" are advised ones, since neither is an "egghead" show in the highbrow sense. "Odyssey," though a museum show, ran the gamut of everything from the history of the comic strip to a Japanese film spectacle, from sunken treasure hunting to the story of jazz. "Arts," which is being prepped by the CBS program department, will attempt to do a variety of artistic endeavors but with top marquee values and in a popular style which won't play over the audience, or so the web's Hubbell Robinson hopes.

'Omnibus' as Example

Point is that this type of attraction generates interest and excitement, yet is broadly enough based to create a wide appeal. It's argued that "Omnibus" has never had a chance to prove itself (though there are those who maintain that "Omni" has been playing it with too much sophistication), since its sole nighttime exposure was via ABC and there's no telling how it might have done on NBC or CBS. It's further pointed out that the Frank Capra science shows this past season on CBS more than held their own against the socalled "commercial" entries on competing webs, and that "See It Now" used to do pretty well as a competitive programming draw.

Even assuming the "important" shows of this type aren't strong enough raitng-wise to attract a major audience and sponsorship in prime evening time, isn't it worth it to sustain them, the reasoning goes. CBS and NBC are committed to the program costs on the

Rex Harrison Set as Lead for Gregory's 'Crescendo' Tint Spec

Rex Harrison has signed to play the lead in "Crescendo," Paul Gregory's 90-minute color musical which will kick off the DuPont "Show of the Month" series of 10 spectaculars on CBS-TV Sept. 29. Harrison, currently in the lead of "My Fair Lady," will be able to do the spec by virtue of its Sunday night slot (9 to 10:30), as was the case with his costar, Julie Andrews in her "Cinderella" appearance on the web.

Harrison will play a visiting Englishman through whose eyes a kaleidescope of American music is shown. Remaining talent hasn't been set yet, but Gregory is huddling on casting with CBS-TV exec v.p. in charge of programs, Hubbell Robinson, in New York. Show will originate from Gotham, with Gregory as producer and Dick Lewine, web's exec producer in N. Y., as supervisor.

Goodwin Ankles Par for Fulltime DuM Role; Deal to Buy KTLA Off

Ixnay on the Ansco

In these days of product and sponsor conflicts, even the most innocent promotion tie-in can result in trouble. Latest example is a tie-in between Ed Sullivan and Ziff-Davis' Popular Photography mag, in which Sullivan will pick "the most photogenic girl in the world" and introduce her on his Aug. 4 show. Magazine's end of the promotion will be the enclosure of a separate color slide for all readers in its September issue, plus a feature on the competition.

But the mischief lies in the fact that the girl was photographed on the new Super Anscochrome (with Ansco getting much of the play in the promotion), while starting in the fall, Sullivan's new alternate-week sponsor will be Eastman Kodak.

CBS-TV Dropping Sat. Aft. Gridcasts, Expanding Hockey

For the first time in several years, CBS-TV plans no college football telecasts or roundups on Saturday afternoon next fall, although the web will continue to telecast professional football on Sundays on a regional basis. Instead of the Saturday grid entries, the network will move up the starting date of its pro hockey telecasts to November, a month earlier than usual, with the month of October blank in the sports calendar.

With NBC-TV holding down the exclusive on national telecasts of college football via its contract with the NCAA (and also planning some regional telecasts as well), CBS-TV is frozen out of the national picture and is limited in any regional telecasting. Last year, the web telecast a football scoreboard out of a studio, but this wasn't very successful, and there are no plans to repeat it this season.

On the other hand, both pro foot-

CBS-TV Salesmen Get Hot Flash From Boss: Sell Off 'Perry Mason'

With virtually all its fall sponsors locked in, CBS-TV's sales operation this week ordered its entire staff to concentrate on selling the remaining half of the "Perry Mason" series. That looms as the web's only major problem area for the fall, and all the network's salesmen have been alerted to the "top priority" status on the show, with orders to drop everything else.

Actually, however, there's little else to occupy them, other than daytime. Web has Saturdays at 10:30 open (though there's a possibility Hazel Bishop may stay through the fall with Jimmy Dean in that spot), Tuesdays at 10:30, half of Thursday at 8, half of Friday at 7:30 and all of Sunday at 6 still available. That's a total of only two nighttime house open, besides the "Mason" slot.

Latter is a matter of some concern for the network, however. For one thing, there's some $5,000,000 in time & talent billings involved, since CBS is already committed to the show and has only half sold (to Purex). For another, CBS execs concede that selling against Perry Como is about the toughest job in television today. But against this is set the fact the web made the Purex deal much earlier and more easily than it expected and that history may repeat itself.

Bernard Goodwin has quit Paramount Pictures unexpectedly for a fulltime post with DuMont Broadcasting, and the DuMont board of directors has decided against acquisition of Paramount's Los Angeles tv station, KTLA, for the foreseeable future.

These events, coupled with others, have seriously stalled Paramount's progress as a tv power.

Goodwin has served as prexy of DuMont for two years, but he received his only salary from Par. The Hollywood major owned a 26.6% interest in DuMont Broadcasting and placed Goodwin in charge.

KTLA, owned entirely by the film company, was to be sold to DuMont for between 700,000 and 800,000 new shares of DuMont stock. At 800,000 shares, Par would have had better than 49% of DuMont, and possessed nearly absolute control of the broadcasting company, and at 700,000 shares, it would have still preserved a working control.

By failure to sell KTLA to DuMont, Par lost a chance to consolidate its tv holdings under one roof, and, more important, its stock control in DuMont was lowered instead of raised. It is now down to 23% of DuMont or less, because some 150,000 shares were paid to new shareholders recently, watering down Par's share.

Goodwin, as an office primarily of Paramount, was boss over KTLA. Now that he moves over to DuMont, he leaves Par without a New York command for the L. A. station. It's expected, however, that KTLA chief Lou Arnold will do his reporting hereafter to Paul Raibourn, Par veep.

DuMont board last week decided, after several weeks of planning and negotiation, to drop the KTLA acquisition plan "for the time being." None of the Du-

Lever Still Needs 30-Min. Musical

With Lever Bros. deciding once and for all to drop "Lux Video Theatre" and to concentrate on finding a new half-hour musical format now that it has succeeded in cutting its NBC-TV Thursday night commitment to a half-hour in the 10 to 10:30 spot, Soap outfit hasn't yet been able to come up with a format or a personality for the show.

One possibility discussed was Rosemary Clooney, but other commitments by the singer got in the way. Understood Lever is now trying to bring back to life the proposed Gordon MacRae half-hour which it was considering at mid-season but which never reached the finalization stage. MacRae has been host on "Lux Video" for the past couple of seasons and did a quarter-hour musical for Lever a couple of seasons ago on NBC.

TOM KNODE BACK TO NBC, THIS TIME V.P.

Tom Knode is rejoining NBC's station relations setup with the title of v.p., station relations. He'll report to Harry Bannister, who continues as bossman with the title of v.p. in charge of station relations, but who'll cut down on his activities between now and his retirement in two years. Don Mercer continues as director of station relations, operating under Knode.

Official designation of Knode as a veep won't come till next Friday (12), when the NBC board meets and elects him to the spot. That's a mere formality, however, with Knode's cycle of NBC-to-Ed Petry-to NBC now complete. Knode ankled the Petry firm as v.p. in charge of television several weeks ago.

Everybody Out on Location These Days to Hypo Vidfilm Entries

Location shooting in telefilms has come into its own, with crews shooting new projects in locales varying from the harbors of the U.S., to the capitals of Europe, to the African jungle.

Fewer skeins are confining themselves to interiors with occasional outside shots. More and more, in order to hypo interest, the locale is switched to the outdoors, be it Nairobi or Paris.

To get added production values with on-the-scene shooting, "New Adventures of Martin Kane" and "New Adventures of Charlie Chan" have Europe as a back-drop. Location shooting is heavy on "Captain David Grief." Ditto "African Patrol" and "Harbor Command."

As one heavy buyer of syndicated telefilms put it, today's tv audiences no longer are satisfied with the chase being confined to a narrow street block, the studio variety, with the hero and killer shooting it out between narrow walls. The action-adventure fan wants more scenic, open areas.

Some of the recent commercial syndicated hits. "Silent Service," "Whirlybirds" and "Men of Annapolis" catered to the lure of the outdoors. Others highlighting the location shooting are on their way, including, in addition to those previously mentioned, "Harbor Command" and "Sword of Freedom."

But along with the location shooting, for a commercial property, there also must be that accompanying yarn, for those in the documentary vein, although they may be pictorially as interesting, or even superior, do not register commercially as well.

'Leisure-Time' Series

Derel Producing Associates has started production on a "leisure-time activities" series of 39 filmed episodes, with Rod Warren, who formerly headed the "Grantland Rice Sportlights" producing unit, assigned as producer.

Negotiations are underway for a top-name sports personality to both host and narrate the half-hour skein which will be produced on location throughout the U. S.

TPA Going Places On Filmed Com'ls

Television Program of America's commercial tv division, under the aegis of recently appointed Wally Gould, has tacked off about $90,000 in new biz the past six weeks, and indications point to a spiralling growth in that area for the telefilm outfit.

Over the six-week span, which coincides with Gould's moveover from Guild, TPA has delivered 26 filmed commercials, six one-minute and six 20-second spots for Tintair and four one-minute and four 20-second spots for Harrison Laboratories, in addition to four spots for Nestle-Lamour and two for Alcoa Aluminum.

TPA, which recently activated a mobile tv commercial film unit, also is holding talks with a wide array of national advertisers seeking "on location" shooting for local placing by dealers. Plan also encompasses TPA cameras moving in on the local scene at same time and doing work for local sponsors of TPA syndicated shows.

OG Changes Mind On Multi Ziv Deal

P. Lorillard-Old Gold has bowed out of a discussed multi-market deal, initially touted to encompass about 50 markets, with Ziv. The two Ziv series which were under discussion, but for which Old Gold never came through, are "New Adventures of Martin Kane" and "Highway Command."

With Old Gold out of the picture, Ziv has been selling the shows to other sponsors and stations. Old Gold has taken "Martin Kane" for only one market, Pittsburgh.

WBZ-TV STOCKS UP ON FEATURE LIBRARY

Boston, July 2.

WBZ-TV inked a third of a million dollar deal this frame for 172 films for addition to the well stacked library. Included in the buy were 70 Columbia films from Screen Gems, 50 20th films, from NTA and 52 post-1948 UA films, first major film package containing such recent productions.

WBZ program manager Herbert B. Cahan said the new films will be shown early this fall and will be programmed on all the station's feature film shows, "Boston Movietime," Monday though Friday at 4:45 p.m.; "Hollywood's Best," Monday through Saturday at 11:15 p.m.; "Hollywood Playhouse," Sunday through Friday at 1 p.m.; "Saturday Movietime," Saturday at 5:30 p.m. and "Pleasure Playhouse," Sunday at 5:30 p.m.

Last fall, WBZ-TV bought a big package of WB films, and only last week the tv station lopped off the "Tonight" show in favor of films from their WB library. Also in the works with acquisition of the WB films was a deal with Bette Davis, who resides in nearby Maine, to hostess emcee her films, but it is understood nothing has yet been worked out.

WBZ-TV top brass traveled to Portland, Me. to meet with the film star last fall and talked a deal which was to be consumated this summer on the filmster's return from Hollywood where she was committed to tv films. It was indicated that Miss Davis' asking price, reported $2,000 a week, was more than the Hub station wanted to shell out. Present status of the deal seems to be that if Miss Davis will take less, the station will go for it.

IDEAL TOY COIN FOR SHIRLEY TEMPLE PIX

Ideal Toy, via Grey Advertising, has inked a deal with National Telefilm Associates for from four to nine Shirley Temple pix from the 20th-Fox catalog, which are to be placed in some 60 markets.

Purchase details of which still are being worked out, keynotes Ideal's plans to put out a new Shirley Temple doll. It also comes amidst plans by Henry Jaffe and Screen Gems to present hourlong fairy tales, to star the grown-up Shirley Temple, and to be presented about once every three weeks starting in January.

It was the Shirley Temple doll in the 1930's which saved Ideal from near bankruptcy.

Irving Moore's SG Slot

Hollywood, July 2.

Irving Moore, for 10 years an assistant director at Columbia, has been upped to a director's spot at Screen Gems, studio's tv subsid.

SG toppre Irving Briskin has handed Moore as his first assignments, two segments of "Tales of the Texas Rangers" vidfilm series starring Willard Parker and Harry Lauter. Moore began working at Col 20 years ago as a messenger boy.

TV Film Review

OVERSEAS PRESS CLUB
(Exclusive)
With Claude Dauphin, Richard Thorp, Zena Howard, Hugh Miller, Jack McNaughton, James Durenforth, Ferdy Mayne, Wolf Frees, Dennis Edwards, Stanley Meadows, Robert Crewson.
Writer: Guy Morgan
Director: Edward Sutherland
Producer: David MacDonald
30 Mins., Sat. 7:30 p.m.
ABC-TV, from Birmingham

The Overseas Press Club series, filmed by Bernard Luber in Europe, is taken from the files of top correspondents who cover the worldwide scene for the U.S. press. The story reviewed was an original by Frank Jerome of the European News Service of the New York Times. He becomes the narrator providing the intro for the yarn, as well as offering the basic story. Other distinguished international correspondents have supplied the story material for other subjects in the skein.

The principal feature of this series is that the stories make an unusual dramatic impact, aimed to prove that very frequently truth is stranger than fiction. The first in the series, describing the adventures of a resistance officer who impersonated a Nazi Gauleiter in Norway, was a vivid example; and the current story of a former war ace, turned Trappist monk, is in the same key.

The story of the monk of Chimay as related by Frank Jerome, describes the way in which a British pilot, shot down by the Luftwaffe, was saved by the members of a monastery and given the chance to fly again. It proved to be an exciting and dramatic yarn, hypoed by the realization that it had a factual background.

Production qualities helped to create the realistic atmosphere and a reliable cast, headed by Claude Dauphin, turned in believable performances. Guy Morgan's screenplay helped to maintain the tense atmosphere, which was aided by the expert production by David MacDonald. Edward Sutherland's direction leads the allround technical credits. Myro.

KTRK-TV'S 200G BUNDLE OF VIDPIX

Houston, July 2.

The afternoon schedule for KTRK-TV will undergo a change this week, with eight half-hour filmed series replacing two filmed movie series. The brand new $200,000 package of filmed shows includes six series of programs, first run films with the exception of "Paris Precint," "I Spy" and "Sherlock Holmes."

Others include a complete new set of "Liberace" programs; "Joe Palooka," with Joe Kirkwood; Ella Raines in "Janet Dean"; Betty White in "Life with Elizabeth" and Gertrude Berg in "Molly."

To introduce the shows, KTRK-TV will try a new programing plan. Station will run the same shows once in the mornings, and once in the afternoon, for the benefit of viewers who missed the early running. All changes take place in the 10:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. time segment and replaces "Afternoon Film Festival."

Nothing to Fear But Features

Cincinnati, July 2.

Time was when the underdog station in a market used feature films to compete with network and syndicated entries on the competitive stations. Now, with most stations using feature film, the trick is to top features with other features.

Ed Weston, assistant general manager of WCPO-TV here, appears to have found at least one formula. Long plagued by the late-night supremacy of the "Home Theatre" feature film showcase on WKRC-TV, Weston tried everything including syndicated strips until he came up with the idea of using specialized features—mystery films. He bought the Screen Gems "Hollywood Mystery Parade" package and slotted them earlier than but overlapping with "Home Theatre" and then sat back to watch.

Results, according to Nielsen: an average weeknight increase for the first-week rating of 48.1% over the previous eight-week Nielsen average for the time periods, with a comparable drop of 44.4% for WKRC-TV. Better still, an average Nielsen of 7.7 for "Mystery Theatre vs. 6.9 for the competing "Home Theatre."

25% of CBS' TV Film Sales From Overseas; 'Lucy' All Over the Globe

The foreign gross from telefilms account for from 20 to 25% of the total gross of CBS Television Film Sales, which currently has skeins running in some 16 foreign markets.

CBS skeins have solid representation in such markets as Canada, Australia, England, Italy, Sweden, Cuba, Japan, Luxembourg, Philippines, Puerto Rico and Venezuela. "I Love Lucy," one of the popular series, is running in the four corners of the world—Australia, England, Manila, Venezuela and Japan.

The 20 to 25% figure for CBS Television Films sales is similar to the current domestic-foreign ratio for Television Programs of America, which also includes the Canadian market.

Jerry Hopper Assigned To 'Bentley' Series

Hollywood, July 2.

Director for new Revue "Uncle Bentley" series, toplining John Forsythe, is Jerry Hopper, assigned last week by producer Harry Ackerman.

Hopper starts on 26 "Bentley"-segments after he completes current chore of C. V. Whitney's "The Missouri Traveler."

Pure Oil Dickers Grid Playbacks

Chicago, July 2,

Pure Oil Co., which in recent seasons sponsored live football telecasts of the Big Ten Conference games, may switch to filmed playbacks this fall. Company is close to completing the purchase of "Big Ten Football Highlights" telefilms for 19 midwest markets.

Thirteen-week series is a round-up of the top four games of the week in the conference, with Chick Hearn narrating. Package is meant for Sept. 24. Film is produced by Sports TV Inc. of Hollywood, and Pure Oil deal is being negotiated here through Al Levine of Sportlite.

Colgate Buys 'Thin Man,' To Share in Residuals

The on and off-again negotiations by Colgate for Metro-TV's first telefilm entry "The Thin Man" has now been consummated, with Colgate, under terms of the deal, sharing in the residuals.

Colgate will slot the Peter Lawford, Phyllis Kirk starrer from 9:30 to 10 p.m., on NBC-TV. Deal, which still has to be formalized into contract form, carries a residual profit-sharing provision, under which Colgate gets a percentage of the residual returns up to $10,000 per episode.

Allentown, Pa., Radio Station Sold for 225G

Allenton, Pa., July 2.

Radio Station WAEB in Allentown has been sold to Good Neighbor Stations, Inc., for a reported price of $225,000. FCC approval of the sale will be asked.

WEAB went on the air April 15, 1949, as an ABC affiliate. It became an independent station in 1953, broadcasting music, news and sports. It carries baseball games and also football and basketball games. The owners are Howard Wasserman, Haverford, Pa.; Judge Morgan Davis, Philadelphia, and Sam Smith, owner of WFLN-FM, Philadelphia.

Barton to 'Spin & Marty'

Hollywood, July 2.

Charles Barton has been set by Walt Disney to direct new batch of quarter-hour "Spin and Marty" televpix for ABC-TV "Mickey Mouse Club" series.

Barton will helm 24 stanzas, starring Tim Considine and David Stollery.

'Aerial Holiday' As Telepix Series

Hollywood, July 2.

Golden Arrow productions has been formed by actor Thad Swift, businessman Samuel Anderson and flying service operator Frederick Murphy, to lens travelog telepix series, "Aerial Holiday." Norman Rice draws directorial and co-writer chores on color-filmed pilto, to roll this week at Apple Valley resort.

Airline hostess Lois Rayson has been set to portray Swift's wife, who will also star in series, with Thad Jr. also to appear. Plans are to lens future segments abroad, as well as in U. S., possibly with promotional tieup with airplane manufacturer.

Telefilm Followup

O. Henry Playhouse

"Emancipation of Billy" ("O. Henry Playhouse") tells of the regeneration of a Huey Long type politico through his son's right thinking. Thesping by James Bell as the "Guvenor" and Tom Coley as his reform-minded offspring are okay within limited demands.

With a turning worm twist, the boy who hears himself repeatedly referred to as a lightweight, living under the shadow of a great man, makes the grade in the finale as a crusader. The expose of the old man and his eventual seeing the light lacks punch and makes for a weak finale.

The trial at which the politician-boss admits the crime, but denies the guilt, might have hypoed the tale. But this is told with an exposition bridge by Thomas Mitchell as the homey understanding O. Henry, delivering his information to a straight man crony.

This is accompanied wth "to-get-back-to-the-story" breaks which give the feeling of an upcoming commercial. Three of these interruptions by Mitchell, plus a trio of commercials chop the 30-minute story in jumpy segments. The sets give a static effect with the rooms in the father's and son's homes almost devoid of contrast. Action consists of taking a seat or walking a few steps about a table. Series is produced by Gross-Krasne. Gagh.

SYNDICATORS TIE NETWORKS

Katz Vs. 'Madison Ave. Mirage'

Sales ammunition for the use of spot television, via the buying of half-hour telefilms, has been organized into a booklet, titled "How to Make a TV Half-Hour Work Overtime," by the Katz Agency, one of the largest spot tv agencies in the field. Some of the arguments are telling ones, many of them reasons for the growing number of national advertisers now using telefilm on a spot basis throughout the country.

Programming telefilms on a spot basis is urged for reasons of advertising economy, flexibility and effectiveness. Katz in its booklet calls the factor of network prestige a "Madison Avenue mirage," contending, with more network shows going on film, most viewers don't know whether a film show is network or non-networked in origin.

In the cost area, booklet compares a 60-market spot program buy with a 100-market network buy, pointing to the lower cost of spot purchases in comparison and to the possibility of a greater number of viewing opportunities growing out of proper spot utilization of "overlap" areas.

Presentation also stresses the availability of stars of telefilms for commercials, the experience of a roster of national sponsors riding spot, the desirability of a local tie-ins with dealers, the quality of syndicated programs and the popularity of its stars, the ability to clear local time for a show, and other factors.

NTA's Big Spot 'Exquisite' Barter, But No Bra Exposure for Kids

Spurred by the national bartered spot ride International Latex is having with RKO theatricals, via Matty Fox's C & C Super, Exquisite Form Bra has entered into a projected deal with National Telefilm Associates.

At this stage, contract is similar ot a letter of intent, with NTA pledging to explore feasibility of terms.

The deal, negotiated via Grey Advertising, calls for placement by NTA of spots throughout country, with NTA using features and half-hour telefilms from its catalog to barter spots for programming with stations. Under the deal, NTA reportedly must deliver a potential of 95% of U.S. tv homes within a three-month period, the starting point of which is sometime before the end of the year. It's understood bra outfit has put limitations on the time periods for its spots. Said to be ruled out for bra exposures are the late afternoon kiddie time, early morning and very late at night periods. Deal with NTA runs over a two-year period, with Exquisite estimating it will average seven spots a day, seven days a week over the length of the contract.

NTA will not 20th-Fox product for barter arrangements.

Bra firm, apparently feeling the competition of the International Latex campaign via the RKO features, also has other factors spurring the tv splurge—which also encompasses three or four specs next season on the nets, with about $1,000,000 in the kitty for the net project. Past three years, outfit has built its production, distribution and sales force for the national sell now envisioned.

Houston Axes 'Tonight' for Pix

Houston, July 2.

KPRC-TV will begin nightly film telecasts Monday as part of the general expansion of the station's programming of top quality motion pictures, Jack Harris, veepee and general manager of KPRC and KPRC-TV, has announced.

Pix on the new series, "Late Movie Date," will run from 10:40 p.m. to midnight Monday through Fridays. Series will replace the live NBC-TV series "Tonight."

June Terry, singer, will be mistress of ceremonies on the programs Monday to Thursdays and model Gaylynn Baker will be hostess on Fridays.

KPRC-TV has ecquired a group of 96 20th releases, some of which will be telecast on "Late Movie Date." There are 15 color films in the group and these will be telecast in tint.

23 For 'Big 50'

National Telefilm Associates' "Big Fifty" package, kicked off about two weeks ago with the WCBS-TV, NY. deal, now has been sold in 23 markets.

UA's $3,000,000 Biz on Post-'48's; N.Y. Bottleneck

United Artists-TV, making some good headway with its new feature package of 52, appears to be running into a price bottleneck in the New York market.

Reportedly, the asking price in New York for the package, all post-'48s and headlined by "Moulin Rouge," "African Queen," "Suddenly," "Red River" and "Night of the Hunter," is about $17,000 per pic, a deluxe price tag.

UA TV, in about four weeks of active selling, has racked up some 40 markets, many smaller ones, for a gross of nearly $3,000,000. Buying the package were WBZ, Boston; WCAU, Philadelphia,; WTOP, Washington; KNXT, Los Angeles; WFAA, Dallas, with sales clicked off in Galveston, Denver and Miami, among others.

Philly, Pitt. Sales On 'Soldiers of Fortune'

MCA TV, after selling 78 episodes of "Soldiers of Fortune" to WPIX, N. Y., moved along and inked station deals for the skein with WPFH-TV, Philadelphia, a Storer outlet, and KDKA-TV, Pittsburgh, a Westinghouse station.

Series, held on a national spot basis by Seven Up for the past two years, now is being put into general release, with starting dates for the reruns slated for the fall.

4 New MCA TV Veeps

Hollywood, July 2.

Four new veepees have been elected to MCA TV Ltd.

Quartet include Jerry Gershwin, Martin Kummer, Danny Welkes and Jerry Zeitman.

PROGRAMS BEGIN TO LOOK ALIKE

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

With the networks scheduling solid blocks of bread and butter programming for the new fall season, the spread dividing network and syndicated programming content is growing less and less.

The development of narrowing the division between syndicated and network programming, which has been going on for a number of years, but now is accentuated, carries with it a number of significant implications, many of which are favorable toward syndicated films and in the long run looks unfavorable to the present network structure.

Granted that currently there are many areas syndicated films cannot compete with network shows, in terms of similar programming. News and special events are a vivid example, and there are many others. (But the dissimilar programs do compete ratingwise). And granted comes the new season, the bread and butter week-in-week-out evening routine of the nets will be broken with an unprecedented number of specials. But it's the week-in-and-week-out network programming schedule, a majority of it on film, which will be bucking the syndicated filmed shows. In a four-station market, it will be a networked "Wells Fargo" opposed to a syndicated western such as "Sheriff of Cochise." It will be a network filmed meller, opposed to a syndicated half-hour filmed meller, and right down the line when it comes in the area of action-adventure.

Affiliates Hold Answer

Calling the foregoing competition horizontal, there also is vertical competition within a tv station. The networked filmed half-hours will be competing in a sense with syndicated half-hours the station buys for non-network time—and when an affiliate station can buy similar programming on its own, or as effective, audience-wise, its dependence on the network for programming and ad revenues diminishes. Rumbling signs of this new affiliate independence is scattered throughout the country.

What has happened over the past year, with the demise of a large number of networked one-hour live dramas, the axing of such comics as Jackie Gleason and Sid Caesar, with the networks and agencies virtually living on the cost-per-thousand formula, is fewer regular Tiffany shows planned on the level of "Playhouse 90," slated for week-in-week-out exposure. There is nothing in syndication to compare to a one-hour live drama by a Reginald Rose or a Rod Serling—other than perhaps the feature films. Because of economic reasons and other factors, there isn't a Gleason or Caesar riding the syndication route. (Gleason eventually will with his "Honeymoon-

VIDFILM SERIES ON CAP RECORDS 'BOZO'

Hollywood, July 2.

In an extraordinary deal, Larry Harmon has acquired exclusive tv rights to Capitol Records' "Bozo the Clown" property and will shortly launch a half-hour vidfilm pilot which he will star in as well as produce.

Although no details given, it's understood that no money changed hands in the transaction. Harmon got the okay to go ahead in return for producing the pilot at his own expense. Part of the deal gives him control of commercial tieups for integration with eventual sponsors.

"Bozo" is one of the five alltime top selling disk properties. In the last eight years, more than 6,000,000 records have been sold. In the licensing field, retail sales of Bozo toy items amounted to around $2,000,000 in 1952 and have since become a staple in the market.

Kazan to Vidfilm Producers: 'Gotta Fight City Hall' on N.Y. Treatment

East coast television film producers operating in New York were urged by Elia Kazan to join hands with motion picture interests and others in getting better cooperation from city authorities. The producer contrasted the help of authorities in other cities in the filming of "A Face in the Crowd" with the "awful treatment" received by the production crew in New York City.

Kazan's plea to the National Television Film Council came as the Film Producers Assn. called for the revision of "antiquated" city fire ordinances. Both the NFTC and FPA are engaged in a campaign to keep telefilm production, mainly commercial filming, in the east.

Kazan felt that neither slogans, nor appeals to sentiment will "keep them in the east." In motion picture production, he went on, it isn't a matter of keeping them, but getting them to come east. Kazan, whose recent pictures have been done on location away from Hollywood, called for the formation of some sort of pressure group to get more encouragement from City Hall to film in New York. He said producers such as himself and NFTC members have a common interest and with the help of perhaps other groups, they could present a common front and win the cooperation of city officials.

He said the major studios in Hollywood are fighting for their lives to economically justify the huge studio operation, crediting that factor for the entrance of Metro and Warner Bros. into the commercial tv field. He scorned the sight he had witnessed on the main Metro lot, the size of which in the past demanded such extravaganzas as "Ben Hur," now being utilized—a little corner of the huge lot, that is—for a one-minute commercial.

Jos. Bailey to Ziv

Joseph W. Bailey, formerly production supervisor of "Robert Montgomery Presents" and with a wide background in radio and tv joins Ziv as a business affairs exec.

He is due to take up his new duties in mid-July after returning from a Mexican holiday.

Prior to the war, after a career with his father's law firm, Bailey was with the Louis G. Cowan organization from 1939 to 1942, managing the "Quiz Kids" show. After the war he was with Grey advertising as manager of the agency's radio and tv department, moving over with Robert Montgomery when the latter entered tv production.

Fear Logjam On TV Com'l Filming; 'Keep It in N.Y.'

Delay in firming up fall tv program schedules which held up normal spring production of commercials, will result in the biggest jam of film activity in years. Peak activity for tv commercial film producers over the course of the summer and fall is predicted by Harold E. Wondsel, prez of Film Producers Assn.

FPA, representing companies that produce the bulk of industrial and tv commercial film in the east, in light of the forecast is in the midst of a campaign to keep television film commercial production in New York. FPA, harnessing new members, has ticked off the following companies: Thomas Craven Film, Depicto Films, Elliott, Unger & Elliot, Filmways, Fletcher Smith Productions, Roger Wade Productions, and the recently-formed Wondsel, Carlisle & Dunphy.

Slated for fall FPA projects are another tv commercials workshop, a presentation for industrial film buyers, work on a code of fair practices, revision of New York City's fire ordinances, and other matters.

Texas Oil Coin Being Siphoned Into Kozlenko Authors & Players Pix

Hollywood, July 2.

Authors & Players Co. is being reactivated by Wiliam Kozlenko, story editor at Revue Productions, for production of theatrical films and telefilms. Sidney Pink, Southland theatre owner and film producer, is associated with him in the project.

New company claims it has bankrolling from a group of Texas oilmen and has already optioned two new telefilm series, "Shock" and "Adventures Into the Unknown," to be produced here and abroad. Negotiations are also underway to buy a tome, "Star in the Dust," for a feature film which would be written, directed and produced by Kozlenko.

Authors & Players was originally set up by Kozlenko and Pink three years ago to operate as a repertory company, with screen and film stars to guest in rotating roles, but because of difference in policy between them and other members of the organization all activity was suspended. In addition to film and tv, A&P plans to initiate a repertory theatre for development of new acting, writing and directing for tv and pix, with Kozlenko supervising.

'Honeymooners' Into Syndication

After holding out for a possible network sale for a couple of weeks, CBS-TV turned the Jackie Gleason "Honeymooners" package over to its CBS Television Film Sales last week for syndication. Subsid promptly set the 39 films on sale has set the show in 16 markets including eight for Clairol on an alternate week basis.

"Honeymooners" was bought by Ronzoni Macaroni and Clairol for New York (WRCA-TV), Philadelphia (WRCV) and New Haven (MNHC-TV). Clairol also bought alternate weeks in San Francisco, Cleveland, Washington, Miami and Buffalo.

Web bought "Honeymooners" from Gleason several weeks ago for $750,000, but was undecided between turning the Electronicam-produced pix over to Film Sales or attempting a network rerun sale a la "I Love Lucy." Network turned the films over to Film Sales three weeks ago, then pulled them back at the last minute for another try, but couldn't put through a sale.

Dick Irving Tapped For Spillane Series

Dick Irving, vet motion picture and tv director, has been selected by Revue Productions to direct the new Mickey Spillane series for MCA TV. His most recent assignment for Revue has been "State Trooper."

Irving returned to Hollywood from New York, where he screened actors for the lead role. Other tests will be made on the Coast. Production is slated to start in July.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor from whom the film is aired.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Person to Person.

Ed Murrow closed out his fourth "Person to Person" season on CBS-TV Friday night (28) with a suburban Chicago-Mt. Kisco, N. Y., tandem that parlayed a "trade showing" of market researcher A. C. Nielsen ("hey, mom, here's that rating man") and prolific humorist H. Allen Smith.

For all the Page One hullabaloo in the continuing protestations of the tv comics that Nielsen's putting 'em out of business, which would seem to have the affect of putting the "rating man" in public domain, the "P to P" pickup nonetheless was a fairly listless exhibition, insofar as the general viewing audience is concerned. For the trade, it added little or nothing to the rating rhubarb, although Nielsen took apart one of his audimeters (out of which pop two 25c pieces as a "bonus" for the home set owner each time a cartridge is changed). Murrow's attempt to probe into the dubious impact of a 1,200 audimeter sample as sufficient to register the tastes and fancies of the entire U. S. populace elicited little more than the observation from Nielsen that scientifically it's as accurate as you can get. However, since "P to P" viewers derive their greatest kicks from the cameras' roving about the premises, the Nielsen pickup had its quota of rewards. For market research has undoubtedly been kind to Nielsen, who sports a 22-room suburban Chi home with a built-in squash court that can be converted into a three-car garage, a tennis court, etc. As homes in suburbia go, this one's probably on the Top 10 realty list.

In terms of "P to P" rapport and content, Murrow's switchover to H. Allen Smith was the more enlightening and entertaining. Considering the brevity of the visit a lot of the peculiar chemistry that flows through the "life & times" of the totem pole's low man transmitted itself to a surprising degree. Smith's recital of addenda (letters from kids) for his "Write Me a Poem, Baby" (including a hilarious one-paragraph summation of the world from Adam & Eve to Davy Crockett); his frustrations as an all-night clearing house for telephonic info from tavern quarrelers (the penalty for possessing a rare built-in enclyopedic library), his byplay with wife Nell, all had a quality of ease and good nature calculated to strike a warm responsive chord with the viewing audience. Rose.

Goodyear Playhouse

Whether the son of the founder of a flourishing export-import business would take control of the firm upon his father's demise provided a fair amount of suspense in "The Legacy" as telecast Sunday (30) via NBC-TV's Goodyear Playhouse. The Steven Gethers script was so-so material, but good performances on the part of the principals plus Fielder Cook's sharp direction helped save it from mediocrity.

Family rivalries accounted for most of the drama in this hourlong production. Vieing for the mantle of Melvyn Douglas, dynamic head of Sterling Inc., were Phil Abbott, his son, and Walter Matthau, his son-in-law. The father, a shrewd businessman, outwardly indicated a desire that his own son take over the reins but inwardly preferred the son-in-law. His preference stemmed from the latter's aggressiveness and ability to make decisions.

Even so, it was somewhat of a twist at the denouement when the son quit in favor of his adversary. Douglas was well cast as the crafty exec whose loyalty obviously was with his business rather than with his family. Abbott was suitably shy and retiring as the son who had no interest in the firm, while Matthau's portrayal of the alert son-in-law at times bordered on the bombastic.

Seen in supporting roles were Roland Winters, impressive as Douglas' business associate; Sally Chamberlin, wistful and appealing as Matthau's wife and June Dayton, Abbott's loyal spouse, among others. Philip Barry Jr.'s production mantlings helped sustain the overall atmosphere of a busy export-import house. Gilb.

As the final show of the season, CBS-TV's "Playhouse 90" last Thursday night (27) came up with another good biographical drama in the story of Robert Briscoe, the Jewish Irishman who became Lord Mayor of Dublin. While Erick Moll's script had many effective moments, particularly in the opening scenes, the show's main impact was delivered by Art Carney, in the lead role, with the backing a topflight supporting cast. (The show, incidentally, just got under the wire since Briscoe lost the Dublin mayorship on Monday (1).

Carney is proving himself a first-rate thesper who can handle any kind of role with conviction. He used to be uniformly excellent as Jackie Gleason's goofy sidekick; he was just as good in a radically different groove as the intense Irish revolutionist in a part that was set against Briscoe's Jewish family and faith. Carney was completely successful in handling both the Irish and the Jewish elements in the Briscoe character.

The play opened in an atmospheric setting reminiscent of "The Informer" with trench-coated Irish youth locked in guerilla warfare with the British Black-and-Tan troops. The script was at its best here in its counterpoint of the nationalist struggle and the Jewish Passover ritual with Carney making the most of his handling of a traditional Hebrew song.

After this sock intro, the drama failed to sustain the impact. It slowed down and eventually fell apart into an episodic yarn that went from melodrama to sentimentalism. Carney, however, was persuasive throughout.

Eli Mintz gave a meaty performance as Briscoe's father-in-law while George Matthews was impressive as the IRA chief. Katharine Bard, as Briscoe's wife; David Opatashu as his father; and Michael Higgins, as a fellow revolutionist, also contributed excellent performances. Peter Lorre turned up in a five-second bit that had little meaning.

Eddie Cantor handled the drama's preface in effective straight style. Herm.

Steve Allen Show

To coin a judicial phrase, the dead hand of the past dominated the Steve Allen Show on its Sunday (30) soiree. Apparently, the late Mayor Jimmy Walker was such a powerful and dominating figure that even at this late date, his film clips stole the show from Allen, Bob Hope and Georgie Jessel, et al. The comedy honors for the day went to the late Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia for the prizewinning reproduction of Hizzoner reading the comics during a N. Y. newspaper strike.

They must have gotten Hope very cheap, because the bulk of the show was devoted to a discussion of Walker and his biopic, "Beau James" in which Hope is vitally interested. Show constituted a review of the 1920's in a manner that was a full-hour plug for the picture.

Fortunately, the 20's were a particularly glamorous period for many today, and any reproduction thereof seems to automatically carry a certain amount of comedy and atmosphere. The dance sequences staged by Rod Alexander were especially good and the banter between the three major principals turned out well. Dean Martin got himself involved in the proceedings by plugging his disking of "Beau James" and the enciente Vera Miles plus Alexis Smith did a minute bit from the film. Show closed with a community sing of Walker's "Will You Love Me in December" but in its entirety it said little about the film. The session did prove that New York does occasionally have a colorful brand of politics.

Ed Sullivan Show

Outing on Sunday (30) did not shape up as the best of Sullivan, but there was enough entertainment in the variety of acts (and pix) to keep the customers happy. Registering high were disk fave Bonnie Guitar singing "Dark Moon," comedy team of Davis and Reese (their seventh appearance on the show), the Kirby Stone Four, mimicking singing quartet, and the U. of Georgia Glee Club.

Film clips of the premieres of "The Prince and the Show Girl," and "Island in the Sun" supplied some of the glamour. In addition to the clips, there were short scenes from the two pix, as well as "Pride and the Passion." Standout was Marilyn Monroe. She focuses well all over the place.

Frances Farmer, staging a comeback after several years of treatment for alcoholism, made her first public debut. Plainly dressed, against a static background, the actress, who never sang in pictures, rendered an o.k. version of "Aura Lee." Sullivan plans to have her back in a dramatic piece, where her talents should get better showcasing.

In a fast medley of disk acts, the

ORIGINAL AMATEUR HOUR
With Ted Mack, others
Producer: Lewis Graham
Directors: J. Robert Blum, Lloyd Marx
30 Mins.; Mon. 10 p.m.
HAZEL BISHOP
NBC-TV, from New York
(Raymond Spector)

Ted Mack moves from network with the ease of one shifting into a new apartment in the prewar days. Now his wheel of fortune finds him back at his old stamping ground on NBC on which network the late Major Bowes also used to labor regularly (in radio) around 1935. From previous experience on other showcasings, it seems pretty evident that Mack will take his amateurs and audiences with him, no matter the station or time slot.

It does seem, however, that with the passage of time, the Mack amateur show is getting more orthodox. The tyro talent now being selected are of the type that used to go in the family time vauders, as indeed some of them performed after an airing on this session. The mad, homegrown novelties seem to be no longer around. Maybe nobody learns to play the spoons any more, or maybe the Bendix has put the washboards out of circulation, or it could be that scientific farming methods have cut down the number of peasants with theatrical hankerings. Anyway, the tone of the show is now conservative, and the imagination has gone out. The one major change is the use of a band instead of pianos as act accompaniment. It could also be that with the lack of spots to develop acts, he's trying to showcase for the commercial marts. It's certain that nobody misses the cruelty of the old gong, but perhaps some livelier contestants might add greater excitement to the show.

Preem night didn't have the salute to the cities. Now why should Mack & Co. throw away such a valuable merchandising lift?

"Amateur Hour" is doing summer duty for Hazel Bishop in the Monday 10 p.m. slot. In the fall it shifts over to Sunday night at 7. Jose.

JACK EIGEN SHOW
With Jack Eigen, Ginger Lor, guests
Director: Forrest Fraser
30 Mins., Tues., 10:30 p.m.
Participating
WNBQ, Chicago

It's a new Jack Eigen, all right. He says so himself, and indeed the man who has made a career—both in N. Y. and Chi—of acid comment and embarrassing interviews seems to be chewing on Miltown now.

On his new WNBQ show, Eigen declined a gambit he couldn't have resisted in the past. On the opening chapter, three weeks ago, he invited three of Chi's busiest deejays to prove via lie detector that they have never accepted payola. All three nixed the invitation, and the trade here was making book that Eigen would turn the refusal into implicit evidence of guilt. Instead, on last week's segment (25), he said without sarcasm that he knew the jocks were "clean" and he didn't blame them for shunning the test. Where it was once his wont to make grist out of chaff, he has now reversed the process.

His three interviews, too, were palsy-walsy tete-a-tetes, reminiscent of the earliest method of tv interviewing, when the principal purpose for the get-together was a plug in the context of mutual back-patting. Comics Will Jordan and Jack E. Leonard plugged their respective nitery openings, engaged in some horseplay, and completely upstaged Eigen, who probed for inconsequentials. His session with model Virginia Dodds was an overlong yawn to promote the Chicagoland Fair.

If the reformed Jack Eigen has lost his bite, he still has his bark. Fed questions by assistant Ginger Lor to start the show, he's still free with denunciations of certain show biz personalities and with arbitrary opinions on topics of current interest. Still amusing is his colossal egotism, reaching a peak in his billing as "America's Most Imitated Interviewer." As Eigen himself says it, "I've got more road companies than anything since 'Blossom Time'." Particularly, he bumraps Mike Wallace for stealing his thunder.

Vulnerable as he is, and albeit artless in his gab, Eigen has built a strong following on his longrunning radio strip, and there's even reason to suppose he can do it on tv too. He has a gift for being amusingly obnoxious, and he knows how to space his shows briskly. His guests so far have been the top visiting names in town, and the participating sponsor list has been growing.

Show is done in color, but so far no one has explained why. Les.

THOSE WHITING GIRLS
With Margaret Whiting, Barbara Whiting, Mabel Albertson, Jerry Paris
Producer: Bert Granet
Director: Norman Tokar
Writers: John Greene, Peggy Chantler, Ben Gershman
30 Mins., Mon., 9 p.m.
GENERAL FOODS, MAX FACTOR
CBS-TV (film)
(Y&R, Doyle Dane Bernbach)

"Those Whiting Girls" is back for its second summer try as a possible fall contender. This Desilu-produced family comedy series replaced "I Love Lucy" two seasons back with fairly gratifying results, but last summer gave way to "The Charlie Farrell Show," a somewhat sad affair. Now "Those Whiting Girls" is back, replete with brand-new footage, and its resumption should make its sponsors and the summer audience the happier.

No great shakes for an original thesis, "Whiting Girls" nonetheless shapes up as one of the brighter comedy shows to hit television for some time. That's due to some snappy scripting by John Greene, Peggy Chantler and Ben Gershman, and some superb comedics by Mabel Albertson, playing the girls' mother. As for the in-person Whiting sisters themselves, younger sister Barbara has a natural comic flair which the writers and director Norman Tokar have played to the hilt, and Margaret plays an excellent straight. Jerry Paris, as the fourth cast member and Margaret's accompanist, adds a zany touch to the show.

First episode—and if memory serves it was a better show than the preem stanza two years back, which itself was pretty good—concerned Barbara's putting her sociology studies to work on mom, deciding she is a perfect case study in geriatrics. Naturally, mom resents it, and the script takes off from there. Credit the scripters with some fine adult dialog and business, and the cast, particularly Miss Albertson, with topflight delivery. Windup is a Held-costumed trio serving as a fine topper.

Tokar, an old hand at this sort of thing, moves the plot along briskly, and maximizes his opportunities with cast and script. Bert Granet's production values are topflight throughout, and of course the Desilu filming is tops. Not much chance for "Whiting Girls" to make it in the fall, but with the flood of cancellations expected in December (at least by the cynics in the trade), it could very well reappear as a winter replacement. Chan.

BRIDE AND GROOM
With Frank Parker, Bob Paige, others; Paul Taubman orch
Producer: Roger Gimbel
Director: Dick Schneider
Writers: Jack Wilson, Bob Cenedella, Beryl Pfizer
30 Mins.: Mon.-thru-Fri., 2:30 p.m.
Participating
NBC-TV, from N. Y.

Some people like weddings regardless of whether or not they know the couple involved and some people enjoy listening to others reveal how a romance blossomed. For them, "Bride and Groom," which returned to NBC-TV last Monday (1) as a half-hour cross-the-board daytime entry, is just what the doctor ordered. The program has nothing, however, for those who aren't wedding-happy or particularly interested in how boy meets girl.

The essentials of the show are simple, a couple about to be married on the program are interviewed on how they met and other matters pertaining to the courtship. Then the wedding ceremony is performed, followed by a reception during which the just-married couple are showered with cuffo gifts, including a honeymoon trip. All this takes place in a half-hour period and is supposedly entertainment.

On hand to co-host the daily sessions are Frank Parker and Bob Paige, the former also doubling as singer, with Paul Taubman orch backgrounding. They handle their chores adequately, but there's little they do, or can do, to punch up the proceedings. A bit with Paige apparently pretending to have misplaced the wedding ring on the opening show didn't help matters either in its obvious corniness.

There is also something indigestible in having the actual wedding ceremony preceded by a number of short commercials. But, then again, there's all that free loot. Jess.

INTERVIEW WITH MARSHAL TITO
(See It Now)
With Edward R. Murrow; panelists Clare Booth Luce, Hamilton Fish Armstrong, William H. Lawrence; Richard C. Hottelet, moderator
Producer: Murrow, Fred W. Friendly
Director: Don Hewitt
90 Min., Sun. (30), 3:30 p.m.
CBS-TV, from N. Y.

CBS-TV again showed some journalistic enterprise, with Edward R. Murrow doing a special "See It Now" full hour interview with Marshal Tito, filmed at the Yugoslav President's summer residence on the island of Brioni in the Adriatic Sea. And to avoid the criticisms stemming from the recent "Face the Nation" interview with Sovict leader Nikita Khrushchev, the network followed the Tito interview with an immediate live panel discussion moderated by Richard C. Hottelet and featuring such foreign affairs authorities as Clare Booth Luce, ex-Ambassador to Italy; Hamilton Fish Armstrong, editor of Foreign Affairs and director of the Council On Foreign Relations, and William H. Lawrence, White House correspondent of the New York Times.

While hardly the newsworthy or momentous event that characterized the Khrushchev interview nor as stimulating to the viewer, Murrow's 60-minute meeting with Tito and the resultant panel discussion nonetheless represented good electronic journalism.

Most important contribution, of course, was this person-to-person on-the-spot technique which permitted one of the leaders shaping world events to have his day before the American public. Unfortunately there was no simultaneous translation as in the Khrushchev interview which thus disturbed the continuity and tended to detract from both the momentum and the interest. Murrow made little attempt to interject questions even at some remarks by Tito that must have begged for a telling blow, but just permitted him to propound and expound.

In the course of some lengthy excursions into the meaning of Communism and Titoism, the Yugoslav president chanted some twice-told tales yet gave some very positive declarations of his views of what was happening in Yugoslavia and what its ideology was. He was less revealing in his answers as to the progress and the acts of Communism in other parts of the globe. Murrow for his part virtually encompassed all the salient issues befitting such high level tete-a-tete: Yugoslavia vs. the Church; Tito's reactions to the situation in Poland, Hungary, reunification of Germany, views on the Middle East, etc. Tito was not only a willing listener but an articulate, voluble and frank subject, frequently in fact interrupting the interpreter to either clarify or add to the topic under discussion.

Actually the ensuing panel discussion was much more interesting and rewarding as an evaluation of Titoism, with Clare Booth Luce in particular betraying soundness of background and a positiveness of declaration. Obviously they all came well prepared and were probably briefed on the film in advance but not all their comments were based solely on the Tito exchange. There was practically a unanimity of opinion that Tito was first and foremost a diplomat playing for time and that our monies expended in backing him would bear fruit in favoring the advance of democracy and creating the first halt to Soviet expansion.

But if anything the panel discussion was an isolated segment that could have stood on its own and might just as well have taken place before the Tito interview. For they were well thought-out generalities, lacking the spontaneity that an immediate response to a provocative discussion should have aroused. Rose.

GEORGIA GIBBS SHOW
With Lane Bros., Eddie Safranski
Producer-director: Tom Naud
15 Mins., Mon., 7:30 p.m.

Kickoff quarter-hour of the new "Georgia Gibbs Show" ran like a house ad for RCA Victor. She's one of the diskery's top seeded songstresses, her guests, the Lane Bros., also are Victor diskers and her plugs for the "1,000,000-record sellers" (Perry Como's "Temptation," Artie Shaw's "Begin The Beguine" and Fats Waller's "I'm Gonna Sit Right Down and Write Myself A Letter") all came out of the Victor hopper at one time or another.

However, she's a solid selling songstress and can pitch out a tune for nifty impact. Stanza wisely spotlights this plus by keeping

In Chicago television, he's WBBM-TV. And he's earned his reputation through Showmanship.

As nationally-known TV Critic Janet Kern recently wrote in the Chicago American, "Today it is WBBM-TV which presides over Chicago's national reputation for Showmanship." In discussing WBBM-TV's programming Miss Kern commented: "Such additions to the local program schedule as 'In Town Tonight,' 'Best of MGM,' and 'Susan's Show' have put competition to rout. Fahey Flynn and John Harrington have a corner on the local market for TV newscasts. Howard Miller, Ray Rayner and others have boosted WBBM-TV onto the top of the Chicago TV heap."

VARIETY - ARB FEATURE FILM CHART

VARIETY's weekly chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau's latest reports, on feature films and their competition covers 120 cities. Each week, the 10 top-rated features in a particular city will be rotated.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor, included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature, and audience composition, i.e. a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi-stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week, a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles, the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained from a multiplicity of station and other data.

NBC, CBS-TV Hot After Libby Coin

Both NBC and CBS are hot on the trail of Libby-Owens-Ford, which is about to commit for an alternate-week half-hour program for the fall. CBS-TV is pitching a half of the alternate-week hour available on the "Perry Mason" stanza, while NBC has presented a couple of properties, among them "The Californians," on which Singer has already purchased the alternate week.

The glass manufacturer has already purchased one-quarter sponsorship of NBC's nine nationally televised NCAA football schedule for the fall, but won't make a decision on its program buy until later this week. Negotiations are being made via Fuller & Smith & Ross, repping the client.

CBS had Libby-Owens interested in half of "Mr. Adams & Eve" as a replacement for Colgate, which asked to be released from its alternate-week commitment, but that fizzled out. Reason was that Libby-Owens in its advertising claims to be the chief glass supplier for General Motors, while "Adams" is adjacent to the Ford Motors-sponsored "Zane Grey Theatre."

Sunshine Biscuit's CBS-TV Daytime Buys

Sunshine Biscuits is making its appearance as a network sponsor via a lineup of three alternate-week CBS-TV daytime quarter-hours. Sunshine, which will advertise three products on its schedule, will sponsor two adjacent quarter-hours of Garry Moore on alternate weeks plus an alternate-week quarter hour of "Our Miss Brooks."

Deal was set via Cunningham & Walsh, which until now has channeled all Sunshine's television business into the spot field.

Houston—Elliott Field has been appointed public relations director here of KILT, operated by Gordon McLendon of Dallas.

Too Many Sponsors, So Canada AFM Yanks Summer Variety Series

Toronto, July 2.

For the first time in CBC-TV history, American Federation of Musicians yanked a program at the last minute. The AFM claimed that "Summertime," a summer variety replacement, was a two-sponsor show instead of a reported one-sponsor series; that members of Jack Kane's 26-piece orchestra were therefore entitled to an extra $5 each for the Friday night 30-minute kickoff of a 13 weeks' program emanating from here over the CBC-TV network across Canada. Dispute will be resolved this week by AFM and CBC brass.

Walter Murdoch, head of the Canadian Council of AFM, claimed that Nescafe and Quick (Hayhurst Agency) were reported as jointly sponsoring the opening program but that signoff commercial, according to script submitted by CBC to AFM, stated "next week's broadcast" would be presented by Sunbeam (Vickers & Benson), this making "Summertime" a two-sponsor show, according to AFM regulations.

To puzzlement of trans-Canada viewers, who immediately started checking newspaper tv listings, a kinescoped play was substituted for the musical show teeoff, with CBC-TV announcement at finish that "'Summertime' has been indefinitely postponed pending an agreement for the series between the American Federation of Musicians and the Canadian Broadcasting Corp."

NBC-TV's $2,260,000 In Daytime Billings, New Biz & Renewals

NBC-TV this week wrapped up $2,260,000, in gross daytime television new business and renewals, pacting American Home to a 52-week renewal for four alternate-week quarter-hours and signing the Drackett Co. (Windex) to a new business-renewal contract for five alternate- week quarter-hours over a 13-week span starting in September.

The American Home deal, set via the Geyer agency, amounts to $1,700,000 gross and involves "Tic Tac Dough," "It Could Be You," and two segments on "Queen for a Day." Drackett coin, via Young & Rubicam, amounts to $560,000 gross and involves two "Bride & Groom" segments and single alternate-week segments of "Tic Tac Dough," "Price Is Right" and "It Could Be You," plus two weekly participations in "Today."

ZIV'S 'WEST POINT' SHIFTING TO ABC

CBS-TV may not want it, but ABC-TV does. Latter has tentatively established Ziv's "West Point Story" at 7:30 Mondays for next season. The half-hour telefilm was sponsored this season by General Foods on CBS Fridays at 8, but was cancelled after one go-round.

After being in and then out again several times over, it once more appears that "Wire Service" is back in ABC's Monday night picture. Plan to do a half-hour version of the current Don Sharpe-produced hour vidfilm was rejected by the network three weeks ago, but now ABC is considering it for 8 p.m., to follow "Story." It's held likely in New York that Brian Keith will alternate with Dane Clark as star of "Service."

WLW-T in Cincy Gets RCA Tint Mobile Unit

Cincinnati, July 2.

WLW-T, the Crosley Broadcasting outlet here, became the first non-network-owned television station equipped with its own color mobile unit, a $250,000 RCA unit which mounts three cameras, audio equipment and a mobile transmitter which microwaves remotes to the station's transmitter. Unit even has air-conditioning.

Station celebrated acquisition of the unit yesterday (Mon.) with a special program which was carried also by Crosley's Columbus and Dayton outlets.

Kaiser Deal

plays Bret Maverick, a brother, rather than have him in every one of the 60-minute westerns.

A new corporation will be formed with a three-way partnership to produce the series, beginning Sept. 22. ABC, Kaiser and Warners are teaming in joint ownership of the package.

Three weeks ago, a conditional contract for the 7:30 to 9 p.m. Sunday time on ABC-TV fell through because Kaiser was unable to line up a sufficient number of quality features for television.

"Maverick," following "You Asked for It," a limited-network show sponsored by Best Foods, gets the network off a serious Sunday night hook, though ABC still hasn't sold the time from 8:30 to 10, when Mike Wallace takes over for a half-hour on behalf of Philip Morris.

Kaiser aim, by doing the western, is to bridge CBS' Ed Sullivan and NBC's Steve Allen, both from 8 to 9, and to offer tv audiences counterprogramming to the comedy on both networks from 7:30 to 8.

WERNER MICHEL TO REACH & McCLINTON

Werner Michel has joined the Reach, McClinton agency as v.p. in charge of radio and television. He'll supervise the broadcast activities of such clients at the agency as Prudential, International Latex, Beneficial Finance and Westinghouse International.

Michel resigned from Benton & Bowles, where he was producer of "Edge of Night," the first of the half-hour daytime soapers (on CBS-TV), for Procter & Gamble. Prior to that, he was exec producer for the DuMont network, director of productions for Electronicam and associate producer for Kenyon & Eckhardt.

Canada's B'casting Policies Due For Drastic Changes

Ottawa, July 2.

Canada's Progressive Conservative party, when it was official opposition in the House of Commons, severely and persistently blasted government policy on broadcasting in general and the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. in particular. Now the PCs are in power, although weakly and possibly briefly (they elected only four more members of parliament than did the Liberals in the June 10 federal voting and another election is considered inevitable), they are expected to make changes in Canada's radio and television regulations and operations.

What the changes will be have not been officially indicated but an unofficial and strongly reliable indication has come through J. Alex Hume, whose third-of-a-century as parliamentary press gallery writer for The Ottawa Citizen has given him valuable insight and connections. Hume, who can—and has—correctly predicted many things from the outcome of an election to the appointee to a senior civil service job, cites Parliament Hill sources for predicting that:

A new regulatory body will be appointed soon with full jurisdiction over CBC and non-CBC television and radio. Under standing arrangements, the CBC board of governors makes recommendations to the federal Transport department on licensing matters and the CBC administers all radio and video regulations. The new body, Hume predicts, will have even wider powers than recommended by the recent Fowler Commission.

Granting of new tv and radio broadcasting licenses will be considerably loosened, even where it means competition for CBC.

CBC will be ordered to go after more commercial revenue on all fronts, sponsors to spots.

Progressive Conservative relaxation of restrictions on licensing privately-owned video outlets is expected because the PCs in opposition continually termed the CBC as a "monopoly" since it would not allow non-CBC tv stations in major cities having CBC video stations.

TV for Bermuda

Bermuda is getting its first television station come November. Station, which will operate on Channel 10 under call letters of ZBM-TV in Pembroke, is owned by Bermuda Radio & Television Co., Ltd.

Outlet is affiliating with CBS-TV as an Extended Market Plan station, using kinescopes of CBS shows where ordered by sponsors.

Updating the Soaps

Some soapopera scripters have fertile imaginations, but Hector Chevigny, who writes the CBS Radio "Second Mrs. Burton," came up with a lulu.

He had the editor-publisher of a smalltown newspaper and one of the principals in the serial (Dwight Weist plays the role) take off for the Big City for a week (July 8). Purpose—to try and get a job with CBS News in N. Y.

Mutual

Kudner Advertising, has ordered a five-times weekly morning newscast at 7:30 a.m., plus three Gabriel Heafter evening commentaries for a four-week campaign starting July 29.

Also starting this week is a campaign by S. C. Johnston for its insect repellent "Off," for 40 20-second spots following newscasts on five consecutive weekends, starting Friday (5). Firm also has ordered participations in five "Counter-Spy" broadcasts.

A campaign involving 100 eight-second spots each week following newscasts has been ordered by Equitable Life, to run for six-weeks starting Aug. 31. Florists Telegraphic has taken 20-second net chain break spots following newscasts on a one-week per-month basis.

Beltone Hearing Aid has again placed a 26-week order for sponsorship of Gabriel Heatter newscasts at 7:30 p.m., starting Sept. 10. Also covering Heatter programming is an order from Sleep-Eze for a new Heatter news feature to be initiated on the net's Sunday schedule this fall.

The new MBS programming formula gives net five-minute of news on the half-hour to sell, as well as 20-second and eight-second network chain break spots.

gave the 12:30-1:30 p.m. (CDT) slot a 3.8 rating in May and Nielsen a 3.3, in their multi-network area surveys. In Chicago, the ratings are second in the time period but well behind CBS-TV fare.

Local brass feels the show could be a sleeper despite the ratings and maintains the letters will prove, if nothing else, that the "60" audience is a devoted one. Feeling is also strong that each letter represents a greater number of viewers than the viewers-per-inquiry estimations of rating services.

Several months ago, the net drew almost 11,000 unsolicited letters from James' reading of the prose poem, "Listen, Son," on the show. Network's spot sales department now is sending copies of the sentimental opus to agency prospects, in hopes they'll respond to the mail statistics instead of the ratings.

announced by the White House in making public an exchange of correspondence between the former FCC chairman and the President. McConnaughey wrote the President he feels he "must retire from government service" at the expiration of his term June 30 "due to personal considerations."

He said it had been "a most delightful experience" to have had the privilege of serving "under the leadership of the most able President of the United States during my lifetime." He concluded by saying that if he could ever be of service again he hoped the President would "command" him.

In reply, the President said he fully appreciated the reasons for McConnaughey's decision "to retire" and that it was "with regret" that he learned of it. As chairman of the FCC and previously as chairman of the Renegotiation Board, the President said, "you have rendered able and distinguished service to the Nation and to this Administration."

put, only one series will originate in N. Y. It will be "Command Performance," to be produced in cooperation with the American Theatre Wing. Phillipson said an order for this series of 13 live hour shows is expected next week. Format is in the nature of a salute to the famous figures of the American stage, with their greatest triumphs reenacted by others.

All Coronet properties are being sold without pilots. Phillipson said the company's policy is to use the money expended for pilots to improve the quality of writing.

Hub's WNAC (AM & TV) Packs 'Em in for Pops Night at Symphony Hall

Boston July 2.

WNAC and WNAC-TV's biggest shebang, Pops Night, had 2,325 invited guests, including radio tv aud members ad agency reps, the press and the radio-tv's station family at Symphony Hall where maestro Arthur Fiedler and his orch played a salute to start of WNAC-TV's 10th year and WNAC's 36th year. Ed Sullivan flew in for the event, was introed by Phyllis Doherty, p.r. and adv director, and gifted Norm Knight, exec veep. It was Sullivan's ninth anni on WNAC-TV.

Special selections for the Pops concert were chosen by Ed Pearle of the promosh dept. and there were special musical tributes to personalities Louise Morgan, Jim Dixon and Gus Saunders. special "Easy Listenin'" composition was rendered tieing up with WNAC radio's format of smooth music. Pops Night, anni affair, is biggest goodwill p.r. endeavor of the org.

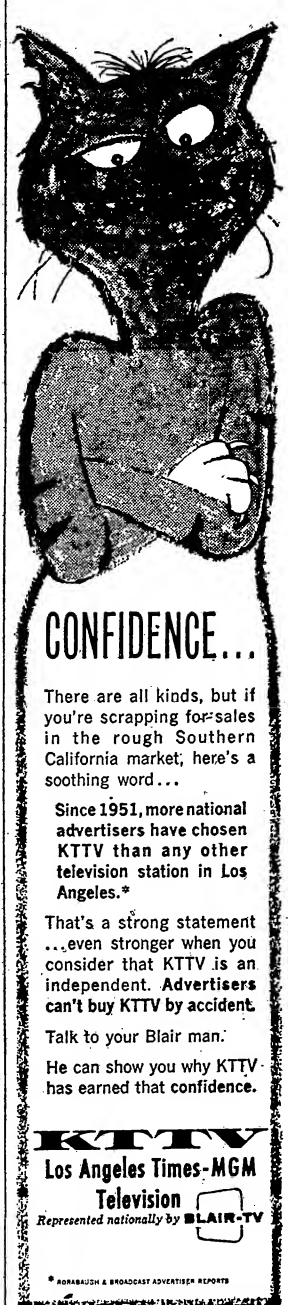
Oklahoma City—James R. Terrell, national sales manager for WKY-TV in Oklahoma City, has been elected to serve as secretary of the Oklahoma Association of Manufacturer's Representatives, Inc for the 1957-58 term. New officers were selected during the June 10 meeting.

'WAY OUT IN FRONT!

Oldtime steamboat races along our Ohio River Valley were often close, and hazardous to put your money on. Quite different from today's audience race among TV stations. When you put your money on WSAZ-TV, you've picked THE winner. Survey after survey gives the title to this 69-county giant — and the latest Nielsen is no exception. Consider these WSAZ-TV margins over the next-best station:

95,670 more homes per month

99,430 more homes per week



101,130 more daytime homes, weekdays

100,580 more nighttime homes, weekdays

WSAZ-TV steams with comparable popularity across a four-state domain wherein almost $4,000,000,000 buying power awaits advertisers who like to ride with the winner. The gangway is down at any Katz office.

CONFIDENCE...

There are all kinds, but if you're scrapping for sales in the rough Southern California market, here's a soothing word...

Since 1951, more national advertisers have chosen KTTV than any other television station in Los Angeles.*

That's a strong statement ...even stronger when you consider that KTTV is an independent. Advertisers can't buy KTTV by accident.

Talk to your Blair man.

He can show you why KTTV has earned that confidence.

Inside Stuff—Radio-TV

CBS-TV, following the precedent it set with its interview of Nikita S. Khrushchev a month ago, has turned the prints of its "See It Now" interview with Yugoslavia's Marshal Tito over to its CBS Television Film Sales subsid for sale to local stations in the U.S. and abroad. Film Sales has already sold the Edward R. Murrow interview stanza to six foreign outfits and to WPIX, N.Y., in the U.S.

Six foreign television operations are BBC-TV in England, CBC for Canada, Australian Broadcasting Corp., Radio Janst in Sweden, CMAB in Cuba and XEW in Mexico City. Interview was aired Sunday (30).

Stockholders of TelePrompTer Corp. have been summoned to a special meeting on July 15 by the board of directors to weigh a capital stock increase and a two-and-a-half-for-one stock split.

According to Irving B. Kahn, chairman and prexy, the split, if approved by the shareholders, will be effective on the day of the meeting and the stockholders will receive shortly after the meeting certificates for the increased number of shares.

Kahn stated that management believes the new move will result in greater investor interest in the stock of the company and will result in broader ownership. He added that the increased capital stock is required because of the company's expansion program. Kahn stressed, however, that no additional financing is contemplated at the present time.

Ed Sullivan was elected president of the National Academy of Television Arts & Sciences at a coast-to-coast telephone meeting of the board of governors. Sullivan, former chairman of the ATAS' New York chapter, was elected by unanimous vote of the board, in the latter's first meeting. Harry Ackerman, prez of the Los Angeles chapter, was elected first vicepresident; Mark Goodson, prez of the Gotham branch, second v.p.; Robert Longenecker, former v.p. of the L. A. chapter, secretary; and Lawrence Langner, treasurer of the N.Y. unit, treasurer of the national body.

Telephone election officially activated the national body. A second meeting, also via phone, will be held within a month to create a common basis for east-west membership classification and to discuss the awards setup for the next Emmy presentations.

Writers represented by the Blanche Gaines office give NBC-TV's "Matinee Theatre" a 1-2-3 punch this week. On three successive days, from yesterday (Tues.) to tomorrow (Thurs.) it's a George Lowther adaptation, an Ellen and Richard McCracken original and a James Truex original.

Lowther, incidentally, may well have established a record as a "Matinee" scripter with seven plays for the NBC daytimer in the last two months. His eighth will be an original, "Portrait in Miniature," July 15.

Montreal freelance Mac Shoub begins to look like another Arthur Hailey. His "Thank You, Edmondo," first a half-hour radio play, was done three times on Canadian Broadcasting Corp.'s networks; then as an hour tv play on NBC's "Matinee Theatre;" later as a half-hour tv play on CBC's "On Camera;" and shown on kine, by the BBC. A French version will soon be done on CBC's French network. It's also in "Prize Television Plays," published by Harcourt, Brace.

Shoub's "Ashes in the Wind," done as a two-hour radio play by CBC in '46, was tv'd last year by NBC's "Kraft Theatre" and later by CBC's "General Motors Theatre." It was the first hour-long Canadian play to be shown by BBC, last year, and was again done the same year as an hour-length radio play. CBC's French network has done it in French, and it's been sold to "Matinee Theatre." It's published in NBC's "Best Television Plays." Shoub has sold plenty more, too, but not so many ways.

Darch Upped at WSBT

South Bend, Ind., July 2.

Will Darch has been upped to the new post of commercial manager at WSBT and WSBT-TV here. New position combines the previous separate designations of national sales manager and local sales manager.

ABC Radio to Ankle Nielsen Service, Sez It's Being Short-Changed

ABC Radio is dropping the Nielsen audience measurement service when its contract is up sometime in the next six months. Robert Eastman, new ABC prexy, okayed a letter by his research chief Larry Pollock only last month, which blasted Nielsen for the alleged inadequate way it covered the radio market.

Pollock said Nielsen had "short-changed" the industry by counting the large out-of-home (car) radio audience as only a "bonus" group. A service to replace Nielsen as the major rating instrument at ABC Radio has not been disclosed.

Prestone Antifreeze Into Dean Martin Specs

Prestone antifreeze division of the du Pont Co. will sponsor Dean Martin in one or two NBC-TV spectaculars next fall. The antifreeze outfit, via BBD&O, hasn't yet decided whether it will fully sponsor Martin in one special or will take half-sponsorship in a pair of them, but it's committed to go one way or the other. Shows will be aired in late fall, during Prestone's sale period.

Apart from the Martin shows (which have nothing to do with the singer's half-hour show Saturday night for Liggett & Myers and Max Factor on NBC), Prestone is looking for a couple of specials on CBS-TV and is committed to a radio saturation campaign during late fall on ABC Radio. Parent company du Pont, of course, is set with 10 90-minute specials next season on CBS-TV.

Forth Worth — Joe Evans has been named national sales manager of KFJZ-TV here succeeding Dale Drake who recently was named manager of KLIF, Dallas.

'WHO STOLE OUR COM'LS'?

Philly Station Clears Up Mystery Of Disappearing Samples

Philadelphia, July 2.

WCAU-TV audiences have been getting some unexpected plug-free programs during the past few months because janitor Joseph McKnight, said (after his arrest) he thought the props were junk to be tossed out. Instead he loaded the stuff—sunglasses, toiletries, hosiery, bathroom scales and a clothes hamper—into his car and took them home.

"We were embarrassed," an exec declared. "We would be ready to televise a scheduled commercial and would discover the sponsor's samples had vanished."

A hidden camera was set up in the station's storeroom prepared to start grinding when anyone entered. The films clearly showed McKnight as the culprit. The station did not press charges but the janitor was tossed out.

Tunick Joins Daniels At TNT Tele-Sessions

Irve Tunick, tv, radio and film writer has been signed to an exclusive contract by TNT Tele-Sessions, Inc., closed-circuit television organization. Tunick will work with Marc Daniels, director of TNT's program department.

The General Electric Portable Appliance Dept.'s close-circuit tele-session on Monday (1) represented Tunick's seventh writing assignment for TNT. Tunick, winner of four Peabody Awards, has written for "Studio One," "Omnibus," "You Are There" and "Armstrong Circle Theatre." In addition, he has written industrial films for Dupont, SEP, General Foods and Standard Oil.

The GE show starred Orson Bean and GE executives in a new product introduction for distributors and dealers in 44 locations from coast to coast. It was the ninth GE closed-circuit telecast handled by TNT.

'Pinocchio' Simulcast

Rexall Drug has decided to extend its "Pinocchio" spec coverage to radio and has ordered a simulcast for the Oct. 13 NBC entry. Show, produced by Talent Associates and starring Mickey Rooney, Walter Slezak, Fran Allison, Stubby Kaye, will be aired at 6:30 to 7:30 that night.

Deal for both the radio and tv versions was set through BBD&O.

Congress Gets Bill Asking Gov't Clearance on All Red Interviews

Washington, July 2.

Broadcast interviews with Communist leaders, such as those televised by CBS, would have to be cleared with the Government, under a resolution introduced yesterday (Mon.) in the House by Rep. Ray J. Marren (D-Ind.) a member of Rules Committee.

Resolution expresses the "sense of Congress" that the FCC require advance clearance with the Secretary of State and Central Intelligence Agency of questions asked in such interviews.

Madden told the House that questions propounded to Nikita Khrushchev and Marshal Tito by American reporters were "skimmed milk, watered down interrogations" which provided Soviet and Yugoslav leaders opportunities for "false propaganda and lies" in comparing Communism with Democracy.

"If Communist leaders are willing to answer only questions which are submitted for their approval before the broadcast," said Madden, "they should be denied the use of our airwaves."

"The Khrushchev-Tito broadcasts were excellent opportunities to submit questions to these two Communist leaders which, if answered in truth, would reveal important facts about the Communist conspiracy which millions throughout the world do not know."

The Congressman said the Communist leaders could have been asked about free elections, slave labor, destruction of churches and imprisonment of clergy.

"The CBS network," he said "should offer to the State Department its facilities to answer the unfortunate and misleading broadcasts which they allowed to go over the airways on their programs yesterday (Sunday) and on June 2."

Madden's proposal came in for criticism by Reps. Steven S. Derounian (R-N.Y.), a member of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and Michael A. Feighan (D-O), a member of the Judiciary Committee. Derounian remarked that CBS commentator Edward R. Murrow would be driven out of business. Feighan suggested the resolution be amended to have questions cleared with Madden.

Some Series Games To Be Televised in Tint; NBC Irons Out Kinks

NBC-TV, whose colorcasts of the World Series year before last were a flop, believes it's got the kinks worked out of the system and plans to tintcast at least two games in this year's Series. Web will colorcast the first two games in the Series, out of the American League city.

If the National League city is close enough to the American League market to permit shuttling NBC's color mobile unit, then all the games will be colorcast. If that's not possible but the series runs over five games, the contests beyond that will be colorcast, since they will emanate from the AL city. NBC did the Series last year in black-and-white only, even though all the games were played in New York (Yanks vs. Dodgers).

Cleve. Westinghouse TV'er Lops Off 'Tonight'

Cleveland, July 2.

KYW-TV's dropping of "Tonight" resulted in only 12 protest letters to the station while Cleveland News radio-tv editor Maurice Van Metre allowed "thus far there has been little sign of a storm" although admitting he had anticipated "viewers would rise up and demand that 'Tonight' be returned."

Station had eased "Tonight" off on two stanzas and made dropoff complete with announcement that it would show best in recent Westinghouse purchase of RKO package.

TV Follow-Up Comment

Everly Bros., two youngsters, did "Bye, Bye Love," and Nancy Whiskey, flown from England, with the Charles McDevitt Skiffle group, did "Freight Train." Comedienne Kaye Ballard got some yocks out of a mother-daughter bit. Jo, Jack & Joanie, comedy threesome from England, looked funnier than their act delivered. Horo.

I've Got a Secret

It's no secret that "I've Got a Secret" never meant to keep a secret, or, for that matter, divulge one of even moderate interest. The gimmick on this CBS-TV Wednesday night half-hour, now in its sixth year, is so frail that when the panelists are not being especially funny, which has to happen sometimes though that's what they are essentially being paid to do, the show's muscles are clipped.

But, not counting some of the usual floundering any panel has to go through when they are trying to guess things that interest them not one iota, the past outing (26) was on the funny side, until the weekly ringer was rung in, that is. Lou Costello—and what would Goodson & Todman do if for just one week they were unable to locate a bigname guest—had a secret. It wasn't much of a secret, and it didn't come off well. As a matter of fact, it was amateurish and somewhat embarrassing the way his secret was divulged. That didn't seem to be the comic's fault half as much as the producer's, for giving him what he had to do. Costello imitated the poses of various high fashion femmes—and that was his secret—as their pictures were projected on a screen behind the panel as the panel was attempting to figure out what was what. Costello, about as comfortable as a dowager in a steam bath on the lower east side, is no pantomimist.

Panel and moderator on "Secret" are particularly pleasant persons, adept at the easy, adlib humor. Front man Garry Moore, Bill Cullen and Henry Morgan are in total harmony, everything they do coming off nicely. Faye Emerson and Jayne Meadows are no slouches either, and while just as glib as the males, their job is more one of charm than humor. Incidentally—this being only a neutral comment—Miss Meadows and another G-T panelist on another G-T show, Arlene Francis on "What's My Line?", sound a great deal alike, inflection in particular. Art.

Kraft TV Theatre

David Davidson turned in an interesting though unsuccessful drama in "The Curly-Headed Kid," last week's Kraft entry on NBC-TV. In attempting to create a full-scale characterization of a crusading newspaper columnist, Davidson resorted to the pat and cliche in creating and analyzing his central figure, and the characterization just didn't come off.

What did sustain interest, however, was the other side of the drama, the plot development concerned with an amiable youngster in the title role. In developing his characterization of the columnist through the story of a young drifter whom the columnist saves from execution on a phony rap and who then settles down to try to make something of himself, Davidson perhaps unintentionally came up with something far more rewarding than the attempt at characterization.

He was abetted in this via the performance of a newcomer, Warren Beatty, in the title role. Young Beatty first of all is amiable and personable. Secondly, he can act. Perhaps his pronunciation falls a little too close to the grunt and groan variety for some tastes, but his performance was clear-cut and believable. He'll be around for some time to come.

Raymond Massey, as the columnist, was crisp and authoritative in a sort of change-of-pace for the vet actor. Though saddled with a part that tended to strain the credulity, Massey gave it at least an external believability in his handling of the part, and Davidson helped with some crisp dialog. Nancy Malone, as his daughter (who falls in love with the boy), was fresh and purty and also believable. Director Peter Turgeon moved the story along swiftly.

Jim Bishop appeared as a special guest, lauding his fellow columnists all over the country. His prose was purpler than the Kraft colorcast. Chan.

Sunday Night at the London Palladium

The final show in this series from the London Palladium, networked by Associated TeleVision (23), provided one of the weakest vaude bills aired throughout the program's run. During the past months, Val Parnell, who's produced the show, has, with only a few exceptions, provided headliners of international fame and up to the minute appeal. In many cases they'd just wound a Palladium vaude stint. On this occasion Lily Pons stepped into the star spot to receive a lukewarm reception for a tepid performance.

She made an uncertain entry down a long flight of stairs, concentrating more on her descent than on the rendering of her classical disklick, "The Bell Song." Her singing lacked the quality associated with an opera star of her status and she just didn't look comfortable in front of the cameras. Her other offerings, concluded by "The Blue Danube," were all disappointing. As the topper of this show, Miss Pons fell very much short of the standard set in the past.

Another unusual entry for this program was excerpts from the London production of "Damn Yankees," which heralded the first public performance in the femme lead of Elizabeth Seal, who's taken over from Belita at the Coliseum. Miss Seal put over the seduction scene in "Whatever Lola Wants," with plenty of appeal but the number lost most of its impact by starting cold and without any lead in. Although he was billed, the male lead Ivor Emanuel did nothing but watch Miss Seal. The other excerpt from the show, the male quartet rendering of "Heart," came across much better, and its comedy content registered well.

George Holmes provided a good tv act with his acrobatic dancing and routine with lighted cigarets which kept appearing from his mouth. Brightest spot of the 60-minute program was the "Beat The Clock" spot conducted by emcee Tommy Trinder, who leaves the show during its summer switch to Blackpool. For the past nine weeks contestants have been trying to win the jackpot which increased by $280 each week. The aim has been to get a bucket, suspended from the middle of a cord tied round two competitors waists, over a peg without using hands. It was finally achieved on this show when the prize stood at $2,520.

The George Carden dancers, resident on the program throughout its run, maintained their high standard, and Cyril Ornadel's Palladium orch provided excellent accompaniments. Bary.

ARB Goes Out of Town In Expanding Its TV Audience Measurement

Another service to television stations, that of measuring the out-of-town audience, as well as the audience in metropolitan areas, is being offered by American Research Bureau. The new service comes on heels of ARB's announced plans for a "secret week" rating and a four-week rating service, in order to overcome the practice of slotting the best feature films during rating week.

Beginning in June ARB area audience surveys will measure entire television market areas instead of specific station coverage areas. Each market area survey will include all counties in which any home market station claims effective coverage. In presenting area measurement results ARB will depart from its normal rating report format by reporting audience size for each program in terms of total homes reached. Currently ARB's plan is to produce a total area report a minimum of once per year for each of ARB's 16 monthly cities. The charge to the station for the extra service will be from $2,000 to $3,000.

Telethon Funds Benefit Fargo Tornado Victims

Fargo, N. D., July 2.

The North Dakota Broadcasting Co. and the Dickinson Radio Assn. carried a special telethon which ran from Saturday (29) at 9:30 p.m. through the following day at 5 p.m., to raise funds for the victims of the recent Fargo tornado. Total of $51,000 was raised with more to come.

The 19 and one-half hours telethon was broadcast simultaneously on radio and tv, originating from the KXJB studios at Fargo. All funds raised through the telethon were turned over to the American Red Cross to be administered to victims of the Fargo tornado. Cooperating stations underwrote costs with much manpower and material donated by local business and professional people.

'Treasure Chest' as Daytimer on NBC-TV

"Treasure Chest," the Jan Murray quizzer which had held down a Friday night spot on ABC-TV this season, will shift to NBC in mid-August as a half-hour daytime strip. "Treasure Chest" moves into the 10:30 to 11 a.m. strip as one of the two replacements for "Home," with an Arlene Francis the vahiety show other.

"Chest" is a William Morris property which replaced "Dollar a Second," another Murray starrer, at the start of this season on ABC-TV. "Dollar" showed up this summer, with Murray as emcee, as an NBC-TV Saturday night summer replacement. Starting date on "Chest" isn't set yet, nor does NBC have any sponsorship lined up for the segment.

Weaver in WABD Tie

Affiliation deal for a New York outlet for Pat Weaver's limited network is about to be signed via WABD, the DuMont outlet in Gotham, following the collapse of negotiations between Weaver and WPIX, the Daily News indie. Understood one consideration in the breakup between Weaver and WPIX was the early-morning slotting of the "Ding Dong School" stanza, which would have required an earlier sign-on for the station and additional programming.

Weaver hopes to get a 14-city lineup for the show, for which the only sponsor signed thus far is Cocoa-Marsh. He's got WGN-TV in Chicago, along with DuMont's WABD and WTTG in Washington, but is still dickering affiliations in the other markets. Weaver's projected starting date is late August.

Buckley, Jaeger Buy Providence AM Station

Richard D. Buckley and his chief sidekick at WNEW, New York, John B. Jaeger, paid $830,000 between them for ownership of WHIM, Providence, R. I., daytime radio operation. Deal, made by Howard E. Stark, station broker, was with Frank Miller Jr.

Buckley, prexy of WNEW and a veep in its parent, DuMont Broadcasting Corp., and Jaeger, WNEW exec veep, say their primary interest is still with DuMont. WHIM is considered an equity for the Buckley family and for Jaeger, who doesn't have the ownership interest in DuMont of his partner.

Station is a 1,000-watter on 1110 kc. Deal is up for FCC approval.

her singing practically all of the way. On opener she worked over "There'll Be Some Changes Made," "Around The World," "Ballin' The Jack" and "I'm Gonna Sit Right Down And Write Myself A Letter" after she had turntabled a few bars from Waller's vintage etching.

The two Lane boys were quickie guesters with only a rundown of "Ding, Dang Danglin'." Impact was okay.

Show keeps its trappings at a minimum and producer-director Tom Naud keeps everything rolling at a brisk gait.

In all, it's a pleasing musical entry but is the "1,000,000 record" angle designed to take the edge off CBS-TV's fall entry "The Big Record?" Gros.

RICHARD DIAMOND, PRIVATE DETECTIVE
With David Janssen, Regis Toomey, others Producer-Writer: Richard Carr
Director: Roy Del Ruth
30 Mins., Mon., 9:30 p.m.
INSTANT MAXWELL HOUSE
CBS-TV (film)
(Benton & Bowles)

When Dick Powell, who owns this telefilm series through Four Star Films in which he is partnered, played Richard Diamond way back when, on radio, he was a private eye who ran the gamut of standard melodramatic plots but he was a notch above so many of his confreres because he cultivated one of the first of the offbeat charmers as a girlfriend, borrowed from her butler, ended up with a song, though in a cracked, often flat voice, and always cavorted in a likeable easy way. Yet the new "Richard Diamond, Private Detective," the one which preemed Monday (1) on CBS-TV as the summer replacement for "December Bride," and acted by David Janssen, was standard melodrama without any of the authentic fillips.

Janssen, who bears a superficial physical resemblance to a younger Powell, does, however, have sex appeal—in great doses. He has a strong face, which he deadpanned throughout the first half-hour program, and a unique voice, a resonant tenor that's sure to catch on. Janssen, a cool cat, had to get mad a couple of times at the typical weasel and goon types that populated the pieces, but he was about as ferocious as Spring Byington.

If Janssen were unable to carry off the tough-guy portions of his role, it was probably more the fault of producer-writer Richard Carr, who penned some pretty hack lines. It's difficult to generate anger where none is really called for. The spotty script contained room for Regis Toomey, as Diamond's police lieutenant friend.

Sponsor Maxwell House's sales success this summer is evidently hinging in good measure upon the calculated appeal of star Janssen, certainly not on this story, a poor imitation of a nifty original. Art.

MOONLIGHT BAY
With Bruce Smith, Carol Starkman, Jack Creley, Don Wright Singers, Bert Niosi's Orch
Producer-Director: James Guthro
Writer: Cliff Braggins
Musical Director: Bert Niosi
30 Mins; Wed., 8:30 p.m.
STANDARD BRANDS
CBC-TV, from Toronto
(J. Walter Thompson)

"Moonlight Bay" kickoff for forthcoming 13 weeks on 38 stations of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. network is a musical package that has Bruce Smith as maitre d' of a mythical summer hotel. Smith, considerably pretied-up for his tv debut, has a healthy 6-9 a.m. radio audience for his off-to-work "Toast and Jamboree" chatter and platter-spinning via CJBC, Toronto; and has been identified with this morning chore for nine years. Any curiosity on the teeoff, therefore, is due to Bruce Smith.

Opener in lobby setting was a cross-stage greeting by summer resorters to "Hi, Neighbor" by the company; an "Oceana Roll," in straw hat and blazer, by Jack Creley; Carol Starkman singing "Personality," with gyrations on a table-top; a sing-song medley by the Don Wright Singers (five men, five girls); with a duet of "I Can Do Without You" by Creley & Starkman. For choral finale, grouping sang "Deep Night" and "Moonlight Bay."

Interpolated was Bruce Smith's smooth, avuncular delivery of camping hints that was too lengthy and belonged to a public service announcement rather than a musical. Apart from the harmony of the Don Wright choral group, and the excellent backgrounding of Bert Niosi's orch, "Moonlight Bay" needs greater injection of comedy values and, particularly, a tightening of direction that will remove some of the amateurish stiffness of the principals—all of whom have had stage experience. They can sing but the acting had a gee-whiz, look-ma, quality that is disconcerting to viewers used to professional presentation.

Under the present State-operated tv system, the sponsor takes what program and time is allocated him by the CBC but pays the production shot. This time, Standard Brands is plugging Chase & Sanborn coffee, plus Royal Instant Pudding, and such visual commercials are commendably short; but, unless there is a pickup in prodial. gram tempo and entertainment, viewers are going to turn that McStay.

RUSTY DRAPER SHOW
With Joanie O'Brien, Chamberlain Orch, vocal chorus, guests; Roy Rowan, announcer
Producer - Director - Writer: Milt Hoffman
25 Mins.; Mon. thru Fri., 8:35 p.m.
Sustaining
CBS, from Hollywood

Rusty Draper, a disk fave on the Mercury label, is running a bright musical show from Hollywood. If he can maintain the breezy pace of the kickoff stanza Monday (1), Draper might prove that there's still a future for live music on the sightless kilocycles despite the fact that disks sound virtually just as good and are considerably cheaper to program.

Besides being a potent song stylist, Draper projects effectively with a folksy quality as the program's host. His script could stand some sharpening and the show would gain if use of the word, "wonderful," were made verboten by Draper and the other performers.

On the opener, another teenage idol, Tommy Sands, turned up as a guest and neatly rendered one classy ballad, "Let Me Be Loved," and then bowed off after calling his teenage fans "wonderful." Draper registered with solid vocals of the current hits, "Bye, Bye Love" and "I'm Gonna Sit Right Down and Write Myself A Letter." A promising young thrush, Joanie O'Brien, a regular on the series, also contributed a neat "Breezing Along With the Breeze" and "Old Cape Cod," while a vocal combo on the show, as yet unnamed, was okay on "Shenandoah Rose" and "Marianne."

Played before a large studio audience, stanza had that "live" feeling which gives the performers a spark and a spontaneity rarely found on disks. Herm.

ABC's WHDH-TV Tie

That affiliation contract with WHDH-TV has finally been signed, giving ABC-TV its first live coverage in the key Boston market. Station goes on the air late this fall.

ABC-TV will have live coverage in 85% of the U.S., according to the network.

L.A.'s 18 FM'ers

Hollywood, July 2.

Eighteenth local FM station, KMLA, L.A., went on the air yesterday (1). Station is a subsid of Music Cast Inc., local "functional music" operation.

Music Cast has been using facilities of KRKD-FM for past seven years. Firm will continue to use KRKD-FM for "functional" music, but will broadcast standard programming from new transmitter, using tower of KCBH (FM), Beverly Hills. However, within six months, KMLA plans to "multiplex" its functional music from new transmitter.

As part of new programming, KMLA plans a Sunday stereophonic music program in cooperation with KCBH, first time this has been done by two FM stations.

TV PIONEERS ELECT 'DUB' ROGERS PREXY

Washington, July 2.

W. D. (Dub) Rogers Jr., head of KDUB radio and tv stations in Texas, has been selected as prez of the Society of Television Pioneers—which held its organizational meeting in Chicago in April on the occasion of the annual convention of the National Association of Radio and Television Broadcasters.

At that time Rogers, who had taken the initiative in encouraging "old timers" in tv to organize the society, presided at the session. By vote of the charter members the organizational committee was installed as the board of directors and authorized to elect officers.

Henry Morgan 'Sez Who' As CBS Radio Entry

CBS Radio is making with the comedy shows for summer replacements. Having set Stan Freberg to sub "Our Miss Brooks" for the summer, the network has now tapped Henry Morgan to emcee a new comedy-panel session, "Sez Who" as the dog-days replacement for Jack Benny. The two series will run back to back Sundays at 7 to 8 p.m.

Backing Morgan will be panelists Gypsy Rose Lee, Joey Adams and John Henry Faulk. "Sez Who" is a Frank Cooper package, created by Sidney Resznick. Show starts July 14.

Philly Deejay Cleared

Philadelphia, July 2.

Bob Horn, 41, former WFIL-TV deejay, was acquitted on moral charges last week by visiting Judge Cyrus M. Palmer, who presided at a two-day trial without jury. Horn's trial on same charges last January resulted in a hung jury.

The disk jockey was cleared on all charges made by Lois Gardner, teenager formerly on the Paul Whiteman program. Defense witnesses testified Horn had been elsewhere on all dates specified by Miss Gardner.

FM Staging Comeback in So. Cal., Upswing in Biz; Multiflex a Factor

Hollywood, July 2.

Frequency Modulation radio, once all but buried under the impact of television's coming, is making a vigorous comeback in Southern California.

Item: FM stations in Beverly Hills, San Francisco, Reno, Portland and Seattle are currently joined in an informal Pacific FM Network, in which tape-recorded programs are exchanged. Next month, KRCW, Santa Barbara, goes on the air, and will act as a relay station for a live Coast FM net.

Item: Harry Maizlish, former KFWB topper, who now operates KRHM (FM) Hollywood, is planning to mount an extensive campaign to "Make one set an FM set."

Item: a recent Pulse Inc. survey showed 48% of all Los Angeles-Orange County radio sets (estimated total, 1,900,000) are capable of receiving FM signals (i.e., either FM sets or combo AM-FM). This would put FM receiver count at about 900,000 locally. Further, Maizlish is mounting his own FM survey through Facts Consolidated org.

Item: (and perhaps the most important item), FM business is definitely on the upswing. A. A. Crawford, topper of KCBH, Beverly Hills (and interim prexy of new Pacific FM net) admits that two years ago, when he started operations, his music store sustained the station completely. This year, he's 60% sold out to commercial sponsors.

The new FM net has set N. Y.-Chi station rep firm of FM Unlimited as national reps. Another firm, United FM Inc., has been set up by Paul Roberts to rep FM stations solely. United FM reports two major sales in past week—to a N. Y. savings firm on WBFM, there, and to Diners Club for 11 major markets.

These sales mark a new trend in FM locally. In past, much income of the 18 FM stations in the area have derived from "functional music" operation, in which stations supplied background music to stores, bars, dentist offices, etc. Under new "multiflexing" setup okayed by the FCC, in which the same FM frequency channel can be used for two or more separate broadcasts simultaneously, most stations will continue "functional" operation. However, more and more, the FM'ers are pitched for the ad dollar, especially in recent months.

One factor working in favor of the Frequency Modulation camp is the hi-fi craze which has swept the nation. Technically, most hi-fi gear utilizes Frequency Modulation for top reception, and FM radio has been a natural beneficiary.

Another factor has been that even the minor AM stations are having an unprecedented boom, and prime time availibilities are hard to come by. In top AM stations, sponsors have been known to wait, coin in hand, for months for a good time schedule. Some of this money has gone into FM, especially for advertisers seeking specialized audiences.

'No Double Spotting'

However, all is not clear sailing to the FM broadcasters. Significantly, Harry Maizlish, a veteran of the AM wars, warns: "I'm determined not to duplicate the errors of AM radio. There will be no double or triple spotting on KRHM. And we won't permit the overhead to get out of line. We intend to keep down the personnel. We don't need expensive personalities. A normal AM station needs 200 to 300 spot announcements daily to come out ahead. We can get by with considerably less.

"This is the postman, ringing the second time. I hope we don't repeat the mistakes of the past. We can operate on less than the 25% of the income of an AM station and still be in the black, on a music and service policy. The personalities will be there, but on a realistic monetary basis.

"The field is there; the room is there. All we have to do is to put on something to which the public wants to listen, then let them know about it."

Several AM stations in L.A. also run FM stations, as a subsidiary operation. Calvin Smith, general manager of KFAC-AM-FM, reports that his stations run the same programming, and that when an advertiser buys KFAC, he buys a package of both stations at a single rate. Smith wasn't quite as enthusiastic about FM's future. Several years ago, a KFAC-FM merchandising offer drew 600 replies; recently, another similar offer drew the same. In short, there's not much increase in FM demand, Smith feels.

More upbeat is John Hansen, manager of KABC-AM-FM (ABC owned-and-operated). KABC is only local AM-FM station which programs separately for each operation. FM station airs music during nightly baseball broadcasts on AM, and two hours of opera over each weekend. Business for FM alone hasn't been too strong, Hansen admits, but recently it's been picking up. "I expect a real boom in FM next year," he predicts.

Mortimer Hall, who runs the very profitable KLAC operation, recently applied to the FCC for an FM construction permit. Says Hall, with customary frankness, "Who knows what's going to happen next in this crazy business?" Hall amplifies that he's applied for the FM license with a view to future possibilities not because he expects FM radio to be a profitable venture in the near future.

Pharmaceuticals Firms Up Sat. at 10

Pharmaceuticals Inc. firmed up a 52-week sponsorship deal for NBC-TV's Saturday at 10 period, with the web thereupon posting the Saturday night SRO sign, but hasn't yet decided its program choice for the time slot.

Under consideration by the sponsor and the Ed Kletter agency are "Truth and Consequences," "High-Low" and a new EPI package, "What's the Use?" Decision won't be due till the first of next week.

Hollywood—James P. Boysen, ABC-TV producer-special events editor here, has resigned to become program director of WLOL, Minneapolis.

primary target, is relegated to a secondary position.

According to Presbrey, who has a new sales plan for "Press Conference," it's senseless for an institutional advertiser to buy every week of a panel stanza, because of the limited pitch he has to make. He feels that the institutional pitch is too limited in variety and scope to be repeated weekly without soon becoming dull and ineffectual, especially since it cost a single sponsor of a half-hour panel between $2,500,000 and $3,000,000 in time and talent annually to support it.

Since the webs themselves haven't been doing much in support of their top panel shows, Presbrey sees his blueprint as the best way to salvation.

Rather than dissapate the pubaffair program's institutional impact, the producer believes, it should be sold to four different bankrollers, each taking one week out of the month. First off, a $5-600,000 yearly tab would permit any number of underwriters to buy the pubaffairs package who now shy away from prestige tv because of the high cost-per impression.

He said that the institutional advertiser—and it's clearly known—doesn't seek the continuity and repetition of the hard-sell sponsor, and that he can instead do a better job of creating identity by buying only once a month and correspondingly planning his commercials carefully, perhaps with the support of a strong periodic mail or word-of-mouth promotional campaign among customers. That way, Presbrey pointed out, the pubaffairs show gains impact from "a party-like atmosphere," meaning the institutionaler can excite more interest over a show that is like a tv special than over monotonously unbroken sponsorship.

"All the identification they want," the producer said, "is the understanding in a limited area of what their company is doing and has to say. You can't repeat this message too often; once a month and they can make a big thing of it."

He said that holds for the big potential underwriters as well as the small. The General-Electrics, U.S. Steels and DuPonts would be wasting coin on a regular institutional tv basis.

Besides "Press Conference" on ABC, NBC has "Meet the Press" and the alternating "Youth Wants to Know" and "American Forum," while CBS runs "Face the Nation."

. . . or to seek to accomplish the same preferred status for its own facilities through the use of non-competitive business practices or the imposition of rules which discriminate against independent supplies of sets and scenery."

That spot representation and film syndication activities by networks raise problems that merit further Committee inquiry if the FCC does not cover them in its network study.

That affiliation agreements be open to the public and that their terms be extended to five years but that affiliates be given the right of cancellation on shorter notice to maintain flexibility. That if this requires an extension of the licensing period there should be legislation "strengthening the Commission's other means of control over the performance of its licensees."

That since abuses are possible in the power of networks to give preferential treatment to their own programs, the FCC and the Dept. of Justice should look into the matter on a continuing basis. Similarly, the agencies should concern themselves with the possibility of networks buying into independently produced programs as a condition to their being broadcast on the networks.

The purpose of the recommendations, the report declares, is "the elimination of artificial restraints which distort the processes of competition in favor of the networks, so as to open the entire industry up to freer, more equal competition."

Actually, it concludes, the proposed changes "may work to the ultimate benefit of the networks themselves, although they would no doubt insist that they are better able to decide than anyone else. Nonetheless, the networks are powerful organizations staffed by able people with the finest background of experience in the industry and with ample financial resources to sustain their operations. It is not believed that any of the suggestions made . . . will seriously impair the ability of the networks to compete, and it is confidently expected that they will continue to thrive and serve the public."

Built-In Educ'n

the Fund for the Advancement of Education. Its sponsors are the New York City Board of Education, the Hudson Guild and Language Research Inc.

Details of the television installation, engineered by General Precision Laboratory, whose equipment is being used, show program origination facilities at three points—the elementary school, the health centre, and the neighborhood house. A central tv control room at the school will contain a vidcon film chain to provide a ready source of filmed information directly to the houses at any hour of the day. Programs from all three locations are fed to the four apartment houses and piped into each family's television set via Channel 6.

Present plans call for a production staff consisting of a director, an assistant director, a technician, secretary, and a group of part time consultants and evaluators. Including language courses, health, nutrition, music, art and other aspects of adult education and community activities, the project will serve as an experimental studio for development of educational tv as well as a pilot program for a special audience tv system appropriate to a small community or a chain of public housing buildings.

Goodwin

Mont executives involved could or would say if the delay were permanent. Nonetheless, the reasons for the decision against buyout of KTLA were made clear several weeks ago, when the trade got it through channels that the deal, which everybody initially thought was a foregone conclusion (since Par was then considered the controlling interest in DuMont) was going through a shaky period.

Buckley a Factor

Richard Buckley, now a veep in charge of sales and programming at DuMont, had just sold WNEW, a New York radio indie to DuMont, and was leading a DuMont board faction not overly enthusiastic about the deal. Par, it has since maintained of itself, was staying completely neutral; it left the decision up to the other DuMont board members, but it was generally conceded that consummation of a KTLA-DuMont corporate tieup was to Par's advantage.

Buckley and his cohorts contended that the stock price asked by Par for KTLA was too high. The one station, which is just now converting to black ink, at the Par rate of exchange, was worth about 50% of the entire worth of DuMont, which owns two tv stations, both of which made money last year, and WNEW, the richest indie in the radio field.

From now on in, Goodwin will be paid by DuMont and will share the top management of the chain with Buckley. It's he who will be primarily active in the areas of new station acquisition, it was reported, and Buckley will handle the day-to-day management.

It was Buckley and other former WNEW owners who received the 150,000 new DuMont shares which lowered Par's control of DuMont. Buckley himself has nearly 10% of the company and would have had about 7% if the KTLA deal were completed.

Syndicators

ers" but the reference is to what was the live Gleason show.)

Syndication Quality Up

Now at the other end of the stick, the quality of syndication programming, at least in terms of screen values and dollars invested, has gone up over the years. And the level of syndication programming, and perhaps the variety, should continue to rise—especially if the station bottleneck in the U. S. is broken.

As this is happening in the syndication field, the networks elect to program virtually in the same areas as syndication, the westerns, the mellers, the costume adventures, the action adventures, mysteries, the whole bread and butter field which a syndicator hues to as a baby clings to his bottle. And if the development continues unabated—with less Tiffany shows on network and better telefilm product in syndication, with each show vieing to capture the mass market and thereby leavening programming differences—the network's role in the future is thrown into question. Will it follow the course of radio once the tv station bottleneck is broken? Will film in tv serve as transcriptions and records in radio? Will the tv network of the future be relegated in the main to news and special events coverage and occasional extravaganzas? These are some of the questions being posed, and some of the answers indicated appear in the long-run to upset the present net structure if web and syndicated programming continue to grow along lines now mapped out.

NBC Vs. CBS

Similarly in the east the stripping down has been going on at an accelerated pace. Such old standbys in the production purlieus of bigtime entertainment as Hal Janis and George McGarrett are gone. Max Liebman is still under contract, but unassigned. Fred Coe is under contract, but with no assignment on tap. On the topside administrative end in programming, Tom McAvity is sitting out a contract.

The NBC pruning through the process of "buying from without" is saving the network a bundle of coin. The NBC command is convinced it's the right way and the effective way. By the first of the year some telling returns should be in.

The CBS Way

On the other side of the street, CBS-TV is literally bursting at the seams in building its creative forces under the Hub Robinson programming concept of doing things from within the organization and perpetuating the joint development and ownership on acquisition of shows. Such vet NBC standbys as Gordon Duff, Herbert Brodkin, Vincent Donehue, Arthur Penn, Gordon Duff, to name but a few, are now doing duty in the CBS creative vineyards as Columbia virtually alone carries the torch on the live hour dramatic entry (most of NBC's are going off.)

As NBC narrows its sights on inside creative personnel (both in N.Y. and L.A.) it's interesting to note that CBS' Hub Robinson returned only last week from London where he set up a creative programming unit overseas. Simultaneously came the announcement that the network's ambitious "Playhouse 90" series was in the market for an additional flock of topflight directors. Perhaps the most notable illustration of in-depth staffing of creative talent is the seven-man directorial team assigned to CBS-TV's "Seven Lively Arts" series: Franklin Schaffner, George Roy Hill, Sidney Lumet, Charles Dubin, Mel Ferber, Jack Smight and Robert Sharpe.

In contrast to NBC, this is programming on a very costly scale. But like NBC, Columbia's willing to gamble that this is the right way and the most effective way.

Can't Kid TV

vision trap. Button your shirt. Put on your shoes, grab the little woman and take her out to some real entertainment, the movies. And while your're at it, go to the best. See Bob Hope as the fabulous Beau James, Vera Miles as his fabulous girl friend and Paul Douglas as a fabulous city hall slicker in Beau James, shown on a 21-foot screen in VistaVision and Technicolor. It's the picture that cures T.T—Television Tension."

Shavelson and Rose, expressing shock that the copy was rejected, pointed to tv's longtime kidding of films and contended that they will consult legal advice on "how free is the air and why two can't play at the same game.

"There is no question of taste involved. Could it be that KNXT really has high tension shakes?"

Bill Tankersley of the station's acceptance department declared that it was rejected because it "was disparaging to the industry. We would turn down anything that is disparaging to any industry. That's on of the precepts of the NARTB code. They must be out of their minds to expect us to take it."

Desperate Hours

shows anyway (and neither "Arts" nor the operas have lined up any sponsorship prospects for their present slots; "Odyssey" is being dropped), and the differential then becomes one of losing out on potential time sales for the period contemplated.

But an hour's worth of time over 39 weeks comes to some $3,500,000 for the season. A hefty sum, to be sure, but there's another side to the coin. The hour shows could be slotted 10 to 11 on days when the 10:30 period isn't or can't be sold, so that the potential time sales eliminated would come to a half-hour, or some $2,000,000. Moreover, viewing the cost in terms of a public relations-public responsibility expenditure, it might be well worth it in its effect in contenting critics of the industry ranging from newspaper professionals to Congressmen to intellectuals like Carl Sandburg, latest to blast the medium.

It's true, the argument goes, that the networks expect to compensate somewhat for the week-in-week-out bread-and-butter routine with an unprecedented number of specials (24 on the books so far for CBS, nearly 60 for NBC). But what if those specials turn out to be the same old tired spectaculars? There's an element of calculatel risk involved—that the specials may heap more insult on the industry instead of turning loose the peace doves.

ball and pro hockey, which the web inaugurated last season, came off very well in terms of audience and sponsorship, so that the network is expanding its hockey schedule to overlap further into the grid season and is continuing pro football on the same basis as last year. The pro football regional sponsorship pattern is almost completely set, with just a few gaps which the web expects to be filled within three weeks or so.

Network's sports department is also in the process of renegotiating its contract with the Orange Bowl, which expires at the end of the year, after the New Year's Day telecast. CBS-TV is seeking two basic changes in the contract, one being a less lavish price for rights than the current $275,000 per game, the other a better choice of teams for the contest.

Web has already met with Orange Bowl officials on the latter point, and recommended that the Bowl retain either the Big Seven or the Atlantic Coast Conference (the two current sources of Bowl entries) but eliminate one and select the other team on an at-large basis. Since the Bowl's commitments to the conferences also end this year, the Bowl committee wants to make its new conference deals before working out the CBS contract. However, contract discussions between the web and the committee are set for late summer.

BMI SUIT STALLS ASCAP DEAL

Over-Spiced Album 'Art'

The VARIETY spotlight on the leer-ics in the early rock 'n' roll items had its salutary effect in intra-trade sapolioing of the single-entendre wordage, to the degree that even the gravest offenders among the indie labels have long since conceded the industry service that was ultimately achieved.

In the same spirit, any medium that serves as the pillar and conscience of the business there is no business like can't ignore the "mood" album covers of late. The independent labels appear to be the prime offenders, and whether or not they have taken their cue from the "art" stills inspired by the major companies, this is the time for abrupt self-examination—and sharp editing.

Some of the mood poses, keyed unequivocally to adolescent attitudes, would indicate that the prime purpose of these mood music album covers is to inspire a mood for French postcards. The uninhibited art work may help sell albums—but why clutter it up with the wax works at all?

In recent years the diskeries have done a bangup merchandising job with some slick packaging, with accent on the external appeal. But merchandise-counter eye-deals are not ideal if the kids and other customers can't truly judge the contents by the cover.

Disk Industry's 'Oscar' Org Plans Meets In Key Cities; Weston Heads L.A.

Hollywood, July 2.

Organizational meetings in New York and other cities are being mapped for the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences which was formally launched at a meeting here which named Paul Weston as president of the Los Angeles chapter. Session was chaired by James Conkling who will continue to function as organizational chairman.

First order of business of the meeting here was the election of a board of governors which in turn elected the officers. In addition to Weston, those named were Lee Gillette, veepee; Sonny Burke, treasurer, and Tom Mack, secretary. The four officers and Benny Carter will serve as an executive committee to transact initial business.

Board of governors consists of Nat King Cole, Jo Stafford, Henri Rene, Lowell Frank, Val Valentine, Bill Claxton, Marvin Schwartz, Sammy Cahn, Jay Livingston, Stan Kenton, Felix Slatkin and Spike Jones, in addition to Weston, Gillette, Burke, Mack and Carter.

Organization meeting was attended by some 60 members of the disk industry representing the following vocalists, leaders and conductors, arrangers and orchestrators, a&r producers and directors, engineers, art directors and editors, composers, instrumentalists, comedy and education, documentary and miscellaneous.

'A Set of Regulars'

A VIP made a request of a music publisher for " a set of regulars," once an important intra-trade courtesy, referring to the latest sheet music. At one time, even professional copies were jealously guarded unless to known professionals, or musicians, presenting their cards and dates where booked.

The music man says he hasn't had a request for "a set of regulars" for so long he almost forgot the meaning of the trade term "because it seems nobody of late even opens the piano."

TV COOL TO EARLY WRAP-UP

The shadow of the ASCAP songwriters' suit against Broadcast Music Inc. and the major networks is due to loom larger and larger in the negotiations between the American Socety of Composers, Authors & Publishers and the television industry for a new licensing pact. At the first talks held in New York last week, the $150,000,000 antitrust action was cited as one of the major hurdles to the writing of an early deal.

It's understood that ASCAP, through its committee chairman Oscar Hammerstein 2d, suggested a straight renewal of the current licensing pact which expires at the end of this year. ASCAP negotiators reportedly said they were satisfied with the terms of the new pact and regretted that they could not write a contract extending over a longer period. The last deal ran four years.

2d Suit After Renewal?

The broadcasters turned down ASCAP's proposal to renew the pact on one ground that the ASCAP songsmiths' suit, in effect, charged the current pact with being inequitable. What, the broadcasters asked, was to prevent the same litigating cleffers, or another group of writers, to start another suit against the industry after the pact was renewed?

ASCAP execs reportedly agreed that the suit was a problem but

The music biz apparently isn't buying the bromide that letter-writing is a lost art. Already on the hit lists are Pat Boone's "Love Letters In The Sand" (Dot) and Billy Williams' "I'm Gonna Sit Right Down and Write Myself a Letter" (Coral). Upcoming is Dean Martin's "Write To Me From Naples," via Capitol.

And now Lionel Hampton is planning a revival of "Air Mail Special" for release on the Imperial label.

Gross revenue for the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers from its licensees reached the peak figure of $24,731,156 during 1956, according to a financial report to the membership by prexy Paul Cunningham. Latter decided to make a detailed report to the membership on income and expenses because the majority of ASCAPers have been unable to attend the membership meetings held semi-annually in New York and Los Angeles.

Distributions to ASCAP members last year totalled $18,689,638. Expenses of the Society during 1956 totalled $4,462,251, slightly under 18% of the gross, while $1,800,000 was set aside for payment to foreign societies. (Not reported in the statement was ASCAP's distributions to its members from overseas performances. Last year, this distribution totalled around $1,500,000).

Biggest item under the homeoffice expense heading was for distribution, which includes indexing, logging and tabulating. This cost $219,609. Advertising and publicity amounted to $177,794. Total homeoffice salaries were $1,501,754, while branch office salaries amounted to $604,621. Payments to legalites, including retainers to outside counsel, totalled $272,094 last year. Another major item in ASCAP expenses was relief to its members totalling $136,134.

As of March, ASCAP's membership totaled 3,732 active writers with 451 non-participating writers and 974 active publishers. The Society has 26,351 licensees, including bars, grills, taverns, hotels, night clubs, restaurants, cocktail lounges, dancehalls, skating rinks, film theatres, drive-ins and wired-music operators. There are 3,475 radio stations licensed and 21 national and regional radio networks, plus 453 television stations and three video networks.

In addition to income from licensees, ASCAP also had some incidental revenue from interest on U. S. Treasury bills and notes, amounting to $91,081; and from membership dues, amounting to $72,991. The total income was $24,895,230.

IBEW Strike Halts Recording at Col

Recording at Columbia Records has come to a standstill. The diskery is being struck by its engineers in New York and Chicago. (Col doesn't use its own facilities on the Coast.)

The engineers are members of the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers (AFL-CIO), Local 1212 in N.Y. and Local 1220 in Chicago. The company's contract with the union expired Sunday (30).

Diskery execs and union officials held several confabs last month but couldn't come to any agreement. Union demands included wage hikes, overtime pay and vacations as well as a number of new provisions in the field of work regulation, enlarged jurisdiction and regulation of experimental work.

Col's offer of extended jurisdiction and a wage increase was rejected by the union.

Arthur Israel Jr. V.P. Of Famous-Paramount

AFM Bd. to Hear Kid Ory's Charge That a Frenchman And MCA Owe Him $15,000

San Francisco, July 2

Charges that a French promoter and Music Corp. of America had withheld "considerably more than $15,000" from Kid Ory and that the agency failed to give the Negro jazzman enough money to return from Paris after a European tour last December have been brought before the American Federation of Musicians' exec board for adjudication. The AFM board bears such appeals as regular procedure as a way of expediting the settlement of such claims without resort to the courts.

Ory, who played Europe with his combo last fall, claims that funds received from the European promoters were never credited to his account. Complaint also charges that though the MCA contract called for payment in full to Ory for the last three weeks of the contract, the agency took its commissions and notified the promoters on the road to stop Ory's drawing account.

Mrs. Barbara Ory, the trombonist's wife, who detailed the complaint in her suburban home here, stated that Ory had to wait until late spring to collect all figures from his Paris lawyer before pressing charges before the AFM. She said that other performers in Europe ought to have their accounts checked because of difficulties in translating foreign exchange to dollars.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Frank Sinatra (Capitol): "YOU'RE CHEATIN' YOURSELF" (Barton*), an uptempo ballad with a good lyric idea, is sold all the way via one of Frank Sinatra's strong rhythm vocals. "SOMETHING WONDERFUL HAPPENS IN SUMMER" (Sands*) is a lush type ballad with a melodic, romantic idea warmly projected by the crooner.

Art Mooney Orch: "THE PARADE IS PASSING ME BY" (Sunrise†) shapes up as a promising entry via this colorful, marching arrangement by Art Mooney's orch and chorus. It could hit big. "HONEST LOVE" (Daniels*) is a more conventionally tailored side.

Chuck Berry (Chess): "OH BABY DOLL" (Arc†) is another solid Chuck Berry number, one of the most talented writer-performers in the rhythm & blues field. It's got an offbeat sound over a rocking base. "LAJAUNDA" (Arc†) is an okay Spanish-flavored number.

Mickey & Sylvia (Vik): "LOVE WILL MAKE YOU FAIL IN SCHOOL" (Ghazi†) makes strong material for this team and it could hit big with the kids. "TWO SHADOWS ON THE WALL" (Ghazi†) is a less impressive tearjerker.

Frankie Lymon (Gee): "GOODY GOODY" (DeSylva, Brown & Henderson*), the swinging oldie, turns up in a sock rock 'n' roll version that will pass muster with the current generation of teenagers. "CREATION OF LOVE" (Kahl-Wemar†), a new ballad, is a slow-tempoed item slanted for the juves.

Tommy Sands (Capitol): "LET ME BE LOVED" (Livingston & Evans*), theme song of the "James Dean Story" pic, is a solid ballad delivered in excellent style by Tommy Sands who eschews all rockabilly mannerisms here. On "FANTASTICALLY FOOLISH" (Snyder*), Sands reverts back to the rocking groove with okay results.

Dean Jones (MGM): "HUSH-A-BYE" (Rooseveltt), a lullaby with a Latin beat, gets an attractive workover by Dean Jones. "THE BALLAD OF GUNSIGHT RIDGE" (Madrigal*), UA pic title song, is a prosaic storytelling yarn with an over-dramatic background.

Gene Austin (RCA Victor): "A PORTER'S LOVE SONG TO A CHAMBERMAID" (Mayfair*) is an amusing, oldfashioned number which vet crooner Gene Austin handles very attractively against a rinky-tink background. "I COULD WRITE A BOOK" (Chappell*), a showtune standard, is less suitable material for Austin.

Victor Young Orch (Decca): "TELL MY LOVE" (Famous*), one of the late Victor Young's film tunes from the Paramount film, "Loves of Omar Khayyam," gets a lush, listenable reading by the Victor Young orch conducted by Alfred Newman. "THE PURPLE HILLS" (Young*), another Young pic composition from RKO's "Run of the Arrow," is an attractive ballad with a western flavor.

Julie London (Liberty): "DARK" (Larrabee†), a moody ballad with a literate lyric, adds up to excellent material for Julie London's smokey pipes. A quiet number that packs lots of impact. "IT HAD TO BE YOU" (Remick*), the oldie, also gets an effective, sultry-voiced rendition.

Mel Tillis (Columbia): "IF YOU'LL BE MY LOVE" (Cedarwood†), a folk-type ballad, makes a good showcase for Mel Tillis, a country singer who doesn't try too many extreme rockabilly mannerisms. "JUKEBOX MAN" (Golden West†) is typical c&w material with a boogie beat.

Roy Tann (Dot): "HOT ROD QUEEN (Harman*), a driving teenage slanted number, gets a jivey workover, complete with the motorcycle noises, that the leather-jacket set could go for. "ACAPULCO" (Milbee*) is a fair Latin-flavored entry.

Winifred Atwell (London): "SPACE SHIP BOOGIE" (Wood*), as the title indicates, is a medley of offbeat sounds and the boogie tempo as played by accomplished keyboard performer. "STRUTTIN' DOWN JANE STREET" (Mecca*) is a more melodic side also expertly played by Miss Atwell.

Vivienne Della Chiesa (VIP): "AN AFFAIR TO REMEMBER" (Feist*), song of the 20th-Fox film, is handled effectively with this songstress' potent legit pipes against a lush background. "YOU'RE SOMEONE NEW" (Parakeet†), a new ballad, is another class tune delivered without vocal gimmicks.

Lee Denson (Vik): "NEW SHOES" (Sherman†), a folk-type ly by Lee Denson, a singer in the Presley school. "CLIMB LOVE MOUNTAIN" (Sherman†) is an appealing slow ballad.

Johnnie Eager (RCA Victor): "THERE ARE TWO 'EYES' IN HAWAII" (Criterion*), a cute tune which could launch the Hawaiian cycle predicted in some quarters, gets a pleasing rendition by Johnnie Eager with twanging guitars and vocal ensemble. "NO HUHU" (Criterion*) is a rhythm novelty using some Hawaiian vernacular.

Henry De Parl (RKO Unique): "SOMETHING SPECIAL" (Amy†) is a catching instrumental with a soprano sax lead. "BRAVO TOREADOR" (Amy†) is a Spanish-styled item with the same kind of sound.

Don Deal (Era): "UNFAITHFUL DIANE" (Hilliary†), an okay rocking ballad, gets a competent workover in a rockabilly idiom by crooner Don Deal. "DEVIL OF DECEIT" (Pampert) is a more elaborate ballad also well handled.

Tony Travis (Verve): "RED SHUTTERS" (Bourne*) is a bright number with a simple beat and original lyric that gets a good projection by Tony Travis. "FOOTSTEPS" (Hill & Range†) is an exotically flavored tune with an offbeat idea that may draw some attention.

Jovan Dell (Bally): "BON BON BABY" (Bon Bon†) is a bouncing rhythm tune delivered in standard rocking style. "LOVE ME FOREVER" (Valleydale†) is the slow ballad side also belted with the assortment of usual vocal tricks by Miss Dell.

Narvel Felts (Mercury): "KISS-A-ME-BABY" (Pure†) is a rockabilly entry with a Latin flavor delivered by a singer who sounds like a parody of Elvis Presley. It's got an amusing sound. "FOOLISH THOUGHTS" (Pure†) is strictly routine.

Jerry Lewis (Decca): "BY MYSELF" (DeSylva, Brown & Henderson*), from the Paramount pic, "The Delicate Delinquent," is not the best type of material for the Lewis style of piping. "NO ONE" (Leeds*) is a more swinging number which Lewis handles in straight style. Unfortunately, without that Jolsonesque touch, his vocalistics are not particularly effective.

Four Spices (MGM): "HOW I LOVE YOU" (Bourne*), the standard, could come back into the pop lists via this colorful ride by a good vocal combo. "WILD FLOWER" (Harms*), another oldie, has a charming, oldfashioned quality that could also click big.

Pat O'Day (RCA Victor): "TURNABOUT" (Rush†), a rocking number, is fair material for Pat O'Day who's making her bow on this label. "THREE ROADS" (Rush†), a more pretentious ballad, is given a good ride by Miss O'Day, but the lyric takes a long time winding up.

Little Joe & The Thrillers (Okeh): "LILY LOU" (Eby†) is a rock 'n' roll tune written and delivered strictly according to the pattern. The line, "I Love You, Yes, I Do," sounds as if it turns up in every song of this type. "PEANUTS" (Cranford†) is only slightly less familiar.

Album Reviews

"Omar Khayyam"-"The Mountain" (Decca). This is a double feature on wax, containing the soundtrack scores from two Paramount films. The late Victor Young's score for "Omar Khayyam" has several flavorsome melodic strains which give it impact. On the flip side of this LP is Daniele Amfitheatro's score for the Spencer Tracy starrer, "The Mountain." This is more typical film music, serving excellently as atmospheric background but with little independent significance.

Guckenheimer Sour Kraut Band: "Sour Kraut In Hi-Fi" (RCA Victor). Although there's a comedy aspect to this group's monicker which is also accented in the liner notes, the music is more or less legitimate. It's real German street band music played in traditional style by a group of Coastites who formed this band as a hobby. With titles like "Wiener Blut," "Tyroler Waltz," "Der Lustige," "Hamburger Waltz," etc., nobody is gonna take home this set by mistake.

Tutti Camarata: "Tutti's Trumpets" (Disneyland). Six fine trumpeters in one section are spotlighted in this attractive instrumental set arranged and conducted by Tutti Camarata, a trumpet player himself. Numbers range from sweet to swing and from lush to taut with the ensemble work always precise. The featured players on horn are Pete Candoli, Conrad Gozzo, Shorty Sherock, Mannie Klein, Joe Triscari and Uan Rasey. The selections include some fine oldies plus some interesting originals by Camarata, among them the fine "Trumpet Soliloquy."

Johnny Puleo & His Harmonica Gang (Audio Fidelity). Alumni of the late Borrah Minevitch's Harmonica Rascals, Johnny Puleo's combo is comprised of expert mouth organists who get an unusually wide variety of sounds out of their instruments. They are at their best in numbers like "Peanut Vendor" or "St. Louis Blues Boogie" where the group's virtuosity, together and solo, is strikingly evidenced. Reportory also includes such standards as "Peg O' My Heart," "Sheik of Araby," "Roses of Picardy" and "Bolero." The recorded sound is excellent.

Sallie Blair: "Squeeze Me" (Bethlehem). A young Negro songstress now working the cafe circuit, Sallie Blair registers as a highly promising stylist. Miss Blair apparently listened closely to Lena Horne and Sarah Vaughan (who are fine models for any songstress), but she's developed her own style with a set of flexible and intense-sounding pipes. She gets solid backing in this set of oldies by a group under Richard Wess.

Gerry Mulligan Quartet (Pacific Jazz). Gerry Mullingan's combo continues to turn out some of the best sounds in the modern jazz school. In this set, recorded during a performance at the Storyville club in Boston, Mulligan who plays baritone sax and, occasionally, piano, has Bob Brookmeyer on trombone, Bill Crown on bass, and Dave Bailey on drums. One again, the combo accents intricate, swinging musical patterns by instrumentalists who always know that they are doing, which is more than can be said for many other modern jazzmen. Fr. Norman O'Connor, Catholic Chaplain of Boston U. and a deep-dyed jazz fan, writes some humane, literate liner notes.

New York Woodwind Quintet: "The Music of Alec Wilder" (Golden Crest). "This is a tough one to classify between a pop or longhair set. It tends more to the latter category, since only one pop tune, "Dinah," turns up in this highbrow collection of Alec Wilder compositions arranged for woodwinds and played by a crack combo.

Phil Nimmons Group: "The Canadian Scene" (Verve). While practically every country on the face of the globe, including Japan, has turned up with a jazz combo of one knd or another on wax, Canada, the closest neighbor to the U.S., has not been very productive in this field. This Verve album showcases the Phil Nimmons Group, a modern-sounding combo from Toronto with many interesting musical ideas. More so than probably any other musical idiom, jazz again shows that it knows no national boundaries.

Jose Melis (MGM). Jose Melis, a fancy keyboard performer proficient in both U.S. pop and Latin-American grooves, dishes up a pleasing program of oldies with rhythm accompaniment. Included among the dozen numbers are "September Song." The Theme from "Limelight," "Serenata," "Granada," "Solitude" and other opportunities for lush arpeggios.

Jodie Sands' P.A.s

Jodie Sands, who has broken through with a hit on the Chancellor label with "With All My Heart," is getting plenty of work calls since.

She's set for shots on the Vic Damone, Steve Allen and Julius LaRosa video shows and she's been booked with the Alan Freed show at the Broadway Paramount Theatre starting today (Wed.) following with a flock of nitery engagements in the east.

Presley, 8-Time Golden Boy

It's not news any more when Elvis Presley turns up with another 1,000,000-disk seller. But just for the record, Presley's latest RCA Victor platter, "Loving You" and "Teddy Bear," has become the singer's eighth disk to enter the golden circle. One week after its release, the disk passed the 1,250,000 marker and Victor execs say sales are still mounting steadily. Songs are from Presley's upcoming Paramount film, "Loving You."

Other Presley 1,000,000-disks have been "Heartbreak Hotel," "I Want You, I Need You, I Love You," "Don't Be Cruel," "Hound Dog," "Love Me Tender," "Too Much" and "All Shook Up." Don't Be Cruel" is Presley's top-selling side, having hit around 5,000,000 in sales.

The 22-year-old-singer has concentrated his string of hits into a period of less than two years.

RKO-Unique Back On Platter Front With Film Tunes

RKO-Unique Records returned to recording action last week with a flock of tunes from forthcoming United Artists' pix. The dates were a&r'ed by Jimmy Krondes, who heretofore had handled promotion for the label. The diskery's recording activities came to a virtual standstill a few months ago when Joe Leahy exited to form his own National label.

Artists on the sessions were Joe Tucker and Bill Fontaine.

In a move to get the diskery into high gear, exec veepee Stan Borden has brought in Ralph Scull as chief engineer and Al Colon to take over the traffic and shipping details.

Firm is now pushing two recently acquired masters, "Turnpike Cruise," by the Charlie Ross Quartet, originally cut on the Reserve label, and "Tanganyika," by the Johnny Noubarian Quartet, which was picked up from the Demo label. In the album field, the company is rolling with three current issues, Herbie Fields' "A Night At Kitty's," Artie Wayne's "You're My Thrill" and Ted Lewis' "A Million Memories." Set for July release are Keefe Brasselle's "The Modern Minstrel," Michael Srtange's "Something Strange" and the Victor Young score from the pic, "Run Of The Arrow."

New TV Pennsylvanians

Fred Waring is on the prowl for new Pennsylvanians. Maestro wants to refurbish his orch and choral crews for his upcoming CBS-TV show as well as a 10-week road tour which follows.

Waring goes on tv for six weeks beginnning July 22 with a cross-the-board show originating from his Shawnee-on-Delaware resort.

Joe Leahy Feeds On RKO-Unique to Staff His 'National' Label

Joe Leahy rounded out the personnel setup of his new National Records operation last week. Phil Macy has come in as chief engineer heading all the diskery's technical work and Ray Meinberg takes over in the sales manager's slot. Paul Leahy will be production supervisor in charge of shipments and traffic. They were all with RKO-Unique before joining National. Joe Leahy was RKO-Unique's prexy and a&r chief.

National's advertising, promotion and publicity will be handled by Sid Ascher. Meinberg is currently is on a 35-city tour huddling with label's distributors in key areas.

Meantime, Leahy is prepping a series of LPs including two featuring G. Schirmer standards, a dance package and a vocal album of secular songs by the English Bell Singers. He's planing to the Coast today (Wed.) to dicker for some soundtrack sets.

Coniff-Cal Cagno Pards

Ray Conniff, arranger-conductor for Columbia Records, and Joe Cal Cagno, former writer-artist with the King Features Syndicate and the N. Y. Daily Mirror, have entered the music biz via a new company, Conniff-Cal Cagno Enterprises.

It's a music publishing and talent management firm headquartering in New York. Songstress Helen Dixon has already been signed to a management pact.

BMI, SPA In 'Numbers Game' Over Publishing Tieups of 21 Artists

No. 1 Film Tune

At the half-year mark, only pic tune that's made a decent dent in the bestsellers has been "It's Not For Me To Say." Song is slotted in Metro's "Lizzie" and is riding high via Johnny Mathis' disking for Columbia.

Tune was cleffed by Robert Allen and Al Stillman.

LERNER & LOEWE'S 'GIGI' RE-RECORDING

Hollywood, July 2.

New approach to soundtrack music albums is being mulled by Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe for the projected package on "Gigi," Metro tuner they're writing. MGM Records will release the album.

Tune team wants to abandon the traditional practice of merely transferring the sountrack to an album in favor of a complete re-recording of the score by the cast. They feel it will give the album an added lift and will more closely approximate the original cast albums of Broadway shows, all of which are specially recorded. There has been no decision yet. As part of the argument in favor of it, Lerner & Loewe point out that the diskery must pay for re-recording anyway, under union rules, even though the actual track is used.

Broadcast Music Inc. slapped the Songwriters Protective Association for an alleged "slur on the integrity" of a group of performers who, in statements released last week, denied favoring BMI tunes. Of the 21 names making such statements in behalf of BMI, SPA said that 14 had interests in publishing firms "subsidized by BMI."

A BMI spokesman said that both SPA's arithmetic and logic were incorrect. In the first place, none of the artists in the group had firms that were "subsidized" by BMI, that is, received guarantees from BMI irrespective of the number of earned performances. Secondly, only 10 of the 21 were, in some way, affiliated with BMI firms. Of these 10, one (Dinah Shore) had a part-interest in a BMI firm that has published only one song. Another, Rudy Vallee has not had a BMI firm in active status since 1945. Thirdly, the BMI spokesman stated that SPA had failed to point out that the artists with BMI firms also had, in virtually every case, ASCAP firms.

BMI, which released the statements by the 21 performers as a counter-blast to Bing Crosby's rap against the broadcasters and BMI, pointed out that the artists' income from their publishing interests, both ASCAP and BMI, was relatively trivial. But of the performers reacted solely to the coin involved, then it would be more likely that they would favor the other side since their ASCAP firms were generally productive of more money.

This is the BMI breakdown of the publishing affiliations of the 21 artists involved: Dinah Shore, both BMI and ASCAP; Lawrence Welk, ASCAP only; Benny Goodman, none; Gene Autry, ASCAP and BMI; Patti Page, ASCAP and BMI; Nat King Cole, ASCAP only; Rosemary Clooney, ASCAP only; Rudy Vallee, inactive; Les Paul, ASCAP and BMI; Eddie Arnold, none; Kay Starr, BMI only; Sammy Davis Jr., none; Ray Bloch, ASCAP only; Ray Anthony, ASCAP and BMI; Percy Faith, none; Lanny Ross, ASCAP only; Mindy Carson, ASCAP only (through her husband Eddie Joy); Jack Hope, none; Fran Allison, BMI only (through her husband Archie Levenson); Sammy Kaye, ASCAP and BMI; and Stan Kenton, ASCAP and BMI.

Victor Expanding Plant In N.J. to Meet Disk Sked

RCA Victor is expanding its plant in Rockaway, N. J., to include a new warehouse and distribution centre. Ground clearing has begun for a one-story brick structure containing 120,000 square feet of floor space.

Although Victor opened its plant in Rockaway only three years ago, it soon became inadequate due to the steady rise in the company's disk biz. The new building will provide office space and storage for all disks produced at the manufacturing plant which, in turn, will convert its warehouse space into additional pressing facilities. L. M. Goebel, plant manager, stated that the new layout will place the Rockaway plant, which services about 20 states along the eastern coast, in a more favorable position to maintain critical production schedules.

Victor has two other disk manufacturing factories, in Indianapolis and Hollywood.

Chicago Jazzmen Aid Ailing Lee Collins

Chicago, July 2.

Local jazzmen gave forth at a benefit Sunday (30) for ailing Lee Collins. Collins, who brought his dixieland trumpet from New Orleans to Chi in the '20s, is currently in County Hospital with a dilated lung.

Concert was held in the Glenhard Firehouse in Lombard, Ill., and performers included both contemporaries of Collins in the early heyday of Chi jazz and younger musicians active here today.

Unit headed by sagebrush singer Hank Snow plays 8,500-seat Auditorium, Ottawa, July 13 with Cowboy Copas, Wilma Lee and Stoney Cooper featured.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Inside Stuff—Music

Vik Records, the RCA subsid label, has snagged another flock of artists for its roster. Among the new additions are songstresses Helen O'Connell and Julie Wilson. The Winged Victory Chorus, pianist Neil Wolfe, saxman Bobby Dukoff, guitarist Chuck Wayne have also been signed to cut albums for the label. Also joining up are several combos, such as the Rover Boys, the Gallahads and the Country Singers, plus balladeer Brook Benton and rockabilly singer Gene Morris. Herman Diaz heads Vik's album output, while Bob Rolontz pilots the singles division.

The Call Board, official organ of the Catholic Actors Guild of America, issued a Gene Buck Memorial Issue in Jne, featuring tributes to the late songwriter-producer and longtime prexy of the American Society of Composers, Authors & Publishers. George Buck, exec secretary of the Guild, wrote the leadoff tribute to his brother, who was prexy of the Guild for 15 years. Others memorializing the veteran showman are Walter Kiernan, Gene Fowler, George E. Sokolsky, Bob Considine, Frank Scully, Ward Morehouse, L. Wolfe Gilbert, and Bruce Reynolds, latter for the Lambs Club.

Decca Records' line of phonographs for the coming year has been expanded into 14 models ranging from $19.95 to $199.95, in addition to an augmented series of accessories, including disk storage racks, needles, cases, etc. Lowest-price model is a manual machine while the top-priced phonos have hi-fi features and can be used with three different speaker enclosures being marketed by the diskery. Decca is currently kicking off the sales campaign for the new machines under the tag of "Preview '58."

Next year's Newport Jazz bash may be switched to a later date because of a skedded appearance at the Brussels World's Fair next July, according to prexy Louis L. Lorillard. This year's festival gets underway Thursday (4) and continues through Sunday (7) at Freebody Park in Newport, R.I. Lorillard said arrangements are being made through the State Dept. for a touring group of Newport Jazz Festival artists to give a major performance on several nights of the Brussels event. This would mean that the 1958 festival might have to be skedded for later in the summer, possibly the first week in August, he pointed out. Lorillard field confabs with Brussels officials in Europe earlier this year

Maestro Hank Sylvern is writing his own material for a pipe organ series of albums that he'll cut for the ABC-Paramount label. He'll cut them at the Paramount Theatre where his recording sessions will start at 1 a.m., closing time for the Broadway house.

Goughan Named Manager Of Col's New PX Division

Columbia Records is going after the Armed Services Post Exchange trade. Diskery has set L. Laurence Goughan as manager of military sales,a newly created spot.

Goughan will handle both Columbia and Epic lines for the PX push. Epic is Col's subsid label. There are about 3,000 post exchanges in this country alone.

Before joining Col, Goughan had been associated with European post exchange operation for the past 12 years.

Israeli 'Hipsters' to Cap

Hollywood, July 2.

Capitol's next new offering via its international release program will be Trio Aravah, an Israeli group currently working its way through Europe enroute to the U.S. Vocal trio has been tentatively set for an appearance on the Ed Sullivan show in the fall.

Unlike other artists introduced in the Capitol series of albums from around the world, Trio Aravah has a modern music flavor. They concentrate on Israeli material, of course, but in the more modern idiom rather than traditional. It's described as the Middle East's first "hip" act.

Vik Signs Pat Susuki

Pat Susuki, Coast songstress, has been added to the roster of Vik Records, the RCA subsid label.

Herman Diaz, artists repertoire chief of the label, inked the thrush while in Hollywood last week.

Newport Grins and Bears It as Fans Invade Town for Jazz Festival

By DAVID BITTAN

Newport, R. I., July 2.

This onetime watering spot for the Vanderbilts and Whitneys was girdling today (Tues.) for the fourth annual onslaught of jazz fans from all parts of the nation.

Some 25,000 persons are expected to attend the four-day Newport Jazz Festival which opens Thursday night (4) with the traditional-style blowing of Louis Armstrong and closes Sunday night with the Count Basie band's swinging sounds.

All available hotel space has been booked for weeks. Many private citizens are dusting their guest rooms to rent them out for the four days. Restaurants are doubling and tripling their food orders. It's jazz festival time and Newporters by now know how to take care of the jazz fans.

Any resistance of the more staid citizens had to the nonconformist jazz lovers has long since melted.

This year's extraordinary talent lineup—which features a good percentage of the top jazz names in the business—is expected to draw a record crowd to the concert sessions at Freebody Park.

The opening night session has been billed as a "party" for Armstrong, who will be celebrating his 57th birthday July 4. Ella Fitzgerald will be featured vocalist. Traditionalists Sidney Bechet, Kid Ory and Jack Teagarden are among those on the bill.

After the last note sounds Thursday night at the open-air stadium, Armstrong will be the guest at a party given by Mr. and Mrs. Louis L. Lorillard, patron saints of the festival, at their Newport mansion, Quatrel.

These Lorillard parties for musicians and the press, annual affairs, are featured by jam sessions which last into the early hours.

Serious Side

The festival, directed by Boston nitery operator George Wein and run as a nonprofit venture, has its serious side, too. Free forums will be held Friday and Saturday mornings. Saturday's controversial topic will be on "Music and the Use of Habituating and Addicting Drugs." Nat Hentoff will moderate a panel comprising Dr. Paul Diamond, psychiatrist; John Hammond, jazz critics; the Rev. Norman O'Connor, chaplain of Boston University's Newman Club and a jazz expert; pianist Billy Taylor and attorney Maxwell T. Cohen.

The modern jazzmen take over for Friday night's concert. Featured, among others, will be Stan Kenton and his band, singer Carmen McRae, the George Shearing Quintet, the Erroll Garner Trio and saxophonist Stan Getz.

Saturday night's bill includes the Dave Brubeck Quartet, Dizzy Gillespie's big band, singers Billie Holiday and Chris Connor and the Gerry Mulligan Quartet.

On the bill with Basie Sunday night will be Sarah Vaughan, Lionel Hampton, the Oscar Peterson Trio, saxophonist Jimmy Guiffre and pianist Teddy Wilson.

In a Newport departure, Mahalia Jackson and the Clara Ward singers will be featured at a Sunday afternoon "Gospel session."

The Farmingdale, N.Y., High School jazz orchestra will play at the Saturday afternoon concert, along with the groups of Don Elliott and Horace Silver, among others.

Three foreign-born musicians, Japanese pianist Toshiko; Bernard Peiffer, French pianist, and Dutch accordionist Matt Matthews are on the bill for Friday afternoon's concert.

The afternoon sessions, billed as featuring "Future Jazz Greats," although many already have arrived, will have a $1.50 admission. Tickets for the evening sessions range from $3 to $5.

The festival's promoters are hoping for better weather this year than last. The opening concert in 1956 was played in a drenching rain, with some performers and the entire audience soaking wet. It rained so hard umbrellas and raincoats didn't help. The second's night's performance also was marred by rain.

But, rain or shine, the jazz festival will go on as scheduled.

The Sparks to Decca

The Sparks, a teenage combo from New Orleans where they recently won a talent contest sponsored by Universal Pictures, have been inked by Decca Records. It's an instrumental-vocal quintet in the rock 'n' roll groove. First Decca release will be an instrumental on "Old Man River" and a vocal rendition of "Merry, Merry Lou."

Decca, at the same time, has picked up a disk by "Cousin" Herb Henson originally issued on the indie Tally label on the Coast. Tunes are "Up the Path and in My Door" and "Up Yaander."

Sister of Victor Young Withdraws Biroteau Suit

Hollywood, July 2.

Helen Hill, sister of the late Victor Young, has withdrawn her suit against Jacques Biroteau, manager of the composer-conductor and head of the Victor Young music corp., after new financial arrangements were made for her.

In her L. A. Superior Court suit filed June 14, she asked for establishment of a trust for Young's musical properties and his stock holdings.

insisted they had no control over the songwriters one way or another. (Hammerstein, though not a plaintiff in the suit directly, has been an active supporter of the litigation. Paul Cunningham, ASCAP prexy who was also present at the negotiations, is a plaintiff in the suit.)

The broadcasters also refused to renew the present agreement because they noted that there was some feeling among video station operators that ASCAP was getting too much money. ASCAP earned about $10,000,000 from the video industry last year and, if the current licensing fees are maintained, is figured to earn more in succeeding years as the video industry's earnings go up.

Meetings Continue

While the respective negotiating committees were unable to see eye to eye at the first session, the video industry's counsel, former Federal Judge Simon H. Rifkind, and ASCAP general counsel Herman Finkelstein will continue to meet until the next general powwow in about a month. It's understood that there's some feeling on both sides that if the current pact is not renewed at an early date, there should be a complete rewrite of the contract.

Under the current pact, ASCAP's blanket license for stations calls for a 2.05% cut of net revenues from sale of airtime after certain deductions. Networks, under a blanket deal, pay 2½% of net revenue from sale of airtime plus a sustaining program charge of $150 per affiliate per year. The per-program license rate is 9% of the net revenue from the sale of programs using the Society's music.

3 ASCAP Pubs In Test Case Vs. Store's Tune Use

A test case to determine whether a retail store with its own music system has to pay license fees for the use of copyrighted music is shaping up as a result of a suit filed in N. Y. Federal Court against the Lane Bryant store in Manhasset, L. I., by three ASCAP publishers. ASCAP already has several stores among its licensees, but since Lane Bryant, after several discussions, believed they were exempt from the licensing provisions, it was decided to test the case in court.

Issue has come to the fore since an increasing number of establishments are using their music setups with LP disks played over amplifier systems. Where wired music services are used, the establishments are automatically licensed by the central source which pipes out the music.

Publishers bringing the action against Lane Bryant are Famous, New World and Chappell. Plaintiffs asked the court to restrain the store from performing their songs and to award statutory damages of $250 per infringement, plus court costs and attorney fees.

Revel's 'Ghostrophobia'

Composer Harry Revel is due for an album splash via Vivian Della Chiese's indie V.I.P. Records. Diskery has latched on to 20 original Revel pieces for a two-album packaging.

The first album will be tagged "Visions in Color," a mood music package. Second set will be called "Ghostrophobia," which will spotlight rhythm instrumentals.

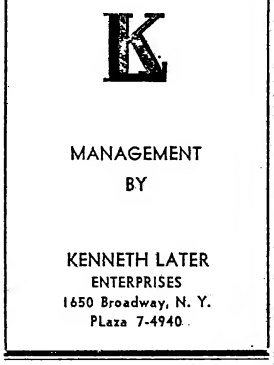
Trade-In Booms Victor Longhairs; 400% Up in May

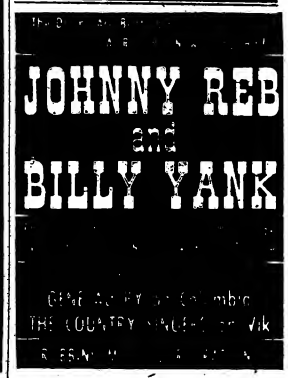
RCA Victor's trade-in program for classical disks clicked big with a 400% boost in longhair sales during May as a result. W. W. Bullock, chief of Victor's album division, said that dealers credited the trade-in program with boosting traffic in a normally dull month. Promotion involved dealers giving a $1 trade-in allowance on old albums towards the purchase of a new Victor classical LP.

In the New York area, because of the prevalence of price-cutting, there was little activity in the promotion, Bullock reported. But Boston, despite price-cutting, did strongly with the plan. Some customers were reported to have traded in their whole 78rpm libraries to get started on the first LP purchases.

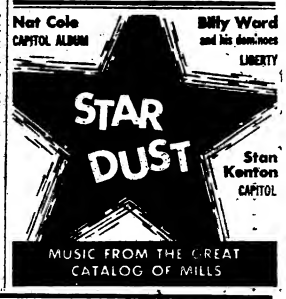


One dealer in Los Angeles received over 1,700 78 rpm albums while a Chicago outlet reported that one customer brought in 104 old-speed albums at one time. Similar incidents occurred in other parts of the country.

The promotion was sparked by a $250,000 ad campaign on the local level in addition to national mag displays and commercials on network video shows. At this point, Victor has not decided what to do with the old trade-ins. They are currently being counted at the distribution centres.



Ivan Mogull to Europe



Publisher Ivan Mogull left for a six-week European trek Friday (28). First stop will be in London where he'll launch Ivan Mogull Ltd.

He also plans to o.o. the publishing potential in France, Spain and Italy for his own indie operation.

shortly after the actual civil anti-trust complaint was filed.

This is the third of a series of such actions in connection with the distribution of jukeboxes. Earlier, the Government settled similar actions against J. P. Seeburg and Wurlitzer, via consent decrees.

"The judgment," said Victor R. Hanson, head of the antitrust division, "prohibits from restricting, or limiting, the persons to whom its machines will be sold. Further, it prohibits restrictions, or limits, by AMI on territories in which its distributors may sell the coin-operated machines.

"It also bars the cancelling of any distributorship franchise because of the failure, or refusal, of a distributor to limit or restrict his sales, or the territory in which he may chose to sell. The defendant, AMI, is also prohibited from maintaining a list of purchasers, or serial numbers of coin-operated machines purchased from its distributors, and using any such list for the purpose of restricting or limiting the territories in which, or persons to whom, distributors may chose to sell AMI products."

agent trustee, who is owed $14,000 by Royal for mechanical royalties. Several months ago, Hooke had signed a confession of judgment acknowledging the debt, and he agreed to pay off in regular quarterly instalments. Fox, through his attorney Julian T. Abeles, stipulated that if the payments were not made promptly, the whole debt would become immediately payable. The judgment, moreover, was worded in a way that made the corporate officials personally liable, so that the bankruptcy proceedings may not affect the debt to Fox.

Other creditors on Royal's books are Capitol Records, for $7,100; Commodore Records, $8,080; Globe Albums, $2,152; Globe Productions, $5,000; Forshay Music, $10,000; Music Performance Trust Fund, $2,000; Arc Music, $2,000; M. Warren Troob, $1,200 for legal services; Cospat Distributing, $1,193; Birdland Presents Inc., $4,000, and Music Publishers Holding Corp., $1,800.

Hearings on the bankruptcy petition are due to be held next week.

Ruth Brown, Bo Diddley and the Paul Williams orch will be in a rock 'n' roll show coming to the Municipal Auditorium, San Antonio, July 13. Also on the bill will be the Five Satins, the Coasters, the School Boys and the Drifters.

BONIFACES' BLUECHIP BINGE

Wildwood's 'Supermarket Special'; 3,100-Seat Cafe, ½ Acre & Names, Too

Wildwood, N. J., July 2.

The trade is watching with interest a new experiment in cafe entertainment being tried out here. The new Beach Club at Diamond Beach Lodge, just south of Wildwood Crest, is believed to be one of the few cafes ever to seat 3,100 persons at one time for a plush, "supermarket" form of after-dark entertainment. Originally planned to seat 2,300, the finished product now comfortably seats 3,100. A small army of 150 employees are on duty.

Covering 20,000 square feet of space, or nearly half an acre, the club is semi-circular in design with six descending tiers divided by silver ropes. The floors are covered with nearly 2,000 yards of rich, deep red plush carpeting. The decor is flaming red and jet black. The four bottom tiers are devoted to tables while the top tiers are bars.

The dance floor is a sharp departure from the usual night club postage stamp type. It can comfortably accommodate 250 couples. It is surfaced in a tri-colored cinnamon brown, red and black.

The management has invested in theatre-type sound systems with unusual attention to acoustics. Elaborate stage lighting includes banks of overhead and footlights, special dimming equipment and follow-spotlights.

The waiters wear scarlet mess jackets with gold braid epaulets, and dark trousers. Male patrons are required to wear jackets, despite the summer resort atmosphere.

The entrance is an adaptation of classical Greek style architecture. The exterior lighting is designed to emphasize the broad white horizontal bands and vertical blue sawtooth effect of the facade of the drum-shaped building. An 80-foot sign in blue neon is visible for seven miles and from the nearby Garden State Parkway. The building is completely airconditioned and dressing rooms are designed to be especially spacious and comfortable.

During a trial run, the spot has been attracting large crowds with the Charlie Spivak band and singers Barbara Bowman and Keddy Lester. Word-of-mouth and the entertainment world grapevine have given the club tons of support before the doors even opened. The full impact is not expected to be felt until tomorrow (Wed.) night when the complete show with Frankie Laine moves into the big room. Show will include Corbett Monica and Danii & Genii Prior.

Spike Jones bows in July 14 for 10 days, followed by Ted Lewis and the "Calypso Carnival" starting July 24, also for 10 days. Martha Raye is picking her own supporting acts for her Aug. 2 opening, while Lou Monte has been added to the Eartha Kitt and Gypsy Rose Lee show from Aug. 12-16. The McGuire Sisters bill Aug. 17-26 will include Ned Walsh, the Priors and the Capri sisters. Allan & DeWood will appear with Nat King Cole in the season closer from Aug. 26 to Labor Day.

The new Skyway Lounge overlooking the ocean will feature pianist Penny Parker and the Skyliners trio.

COLE, CHRISTY'S 19G IN FRISCO ONE-NITER

San Francisco, July 2.

"Record Star Parade" topped by Nat King Cole, June Christy, Nelson Riddle orch, among others, scored a near sellout of $19,000 in a onetimer Sunday evening (30) at the Civic Auditorium, here. Top was $4 with nearly 6,000 attending.

Start of the show delayed nearly a half-hour because of the last minute rush. Charley Stern handled the promotion for Carlos Gastel, Cole's manager.

N.J.'s West End Casino Playing Acts Weekends

The West End Casino, West End, N.J., will resume weekend talent operations July 5 when Alan Dale and Lou Alexander work the spot for two days. Meg Myles and Will Jordan go in July 12 and Gene Balos and Millie Vernon hit the cafe July 19.

Spot has been established many years and at one time had full-scale name shows.

Tiff With Unions Douses Hamid's Flushing Show

The George A. Hamid Water Circus slated to have opened tonight (Wed.) at Flushing Meadows Amphitheatre, Flushing, N.Y., has been called off after breakdown of negotiations with various unions.

According to Hamid, conditions imposed upon him by various crafts would have made operation impossible. One of the major offenders, he said, was the United Scenic Artists, which Hamid declared didn't want to permit him to use his own sets, demanded royalty on what was hung as well as on costumes that were brought in. Stagehands, he declared, increased wages over last year and didn't want to permit seven-night operation. Another offender, Hamid said, was the American Federation of Muscians which demanded 22 men for this project instead of 14 or 15 that it would require.

Hamid declared that it was tough enough trying to make a go of this because of the uncertain weather element and the necessity to pay the cast whether worked or not, without having to pay the upped union demands. In addition, ATAM didn't permit his own pressagent, but wanted him to hire two others.

Champ Divers Booked For Mpls. 'Aqua Follies'; 140G From Det. Angels

Minneapolis, July 2.

Al Sheehan's locally produced annual "Aqua Follies," July 17-28, a major attraction of the Aquatennial, summer mardi gras here, will have as its headliners Olympic and world diving champions Pat McCormick, making her professional debut, and Jauquin Capilla, for the first time in the show, plus the perennial Bruce Harlan.

Other pool principals will include Charlie Diehl, Hobie Billingsley and Orwin Harvey, "Follies" regulars, and Al Coffee, Bill Woolsey, Jimmy Goodhead and Johnny Bower. Stage end will have singer Jimmy Carroll, musical comedy performers Marilyn Delaney and Mitchell May, comedian Charlie Dunn and Chinese "hillbillies" Ming & Ling. There'll also be the usual 24 precision "Aqua Dears" and same number of stage "Aqua Darlings."

6 Detroiters Kick In

Detroit, July 2.

Half a dozen Detroiters, only one a pro, are backing to the tune of $140,000 "Aqua Follies of 1957," dated for Aug. 19-31 at Belle Isle, playspot in middle of the Detroit River.

Rental of City of Detroit pool on island, costing $5,000, has been paid by group composed of Bill Dennis, board of commerce; Nat Miller, general manager Service Parking Corp.; Jack Frost and Mac MacGiverin, electrical contractors; Ed Knight, sound reproduction biz, and Al Rice, theatreman.

CAFE CRISIS IN SALARY SPIRAL?

By JOE COHEN

The nitery field is passing through a crisis, resulting from an unbridled raising of salaries to levels beyond even those of Las Vegas and Miami Beach spots. Talent agencies as well as operators are voicing the fear that the salaries being hurled around by large-seaters may force a general upbeating of stipends and thus further narrow down the number of cafes, raise menu prices and make availability of names even scarcer.

The agencies fear that under present tax laws a name can only play a specified number of cafe dates. With higher salaries, that amount will dwindle considerably among the higher echelon of names.

The latest and probably the most alarming entry in the high salary sweeps is Ben Maksik, operator of the Town & Country Club, Brooklyn. He has lined up a schedule for next year that includes Jerry Lewis, Sept. 9; Ritz Bros., Sept. 27; Alan Gale and the Celebrity Club Revue, Oct. 14; Victor Borge, Nov. 15; Johnnie Ray and Jean Carroll, Dec. 3; Sophie Tucker, Jan. 24; Harry Belafonte, March 21; Tony Martin, May 9, and Tony Bennett, June 6. Other deals are in the works.

It's been Maksik's problem to get topliners to hit the remote reaches of his Brooklyn location and to fill the 1,750 seats therein. Under normal salary conditions, Maksik would be unable to overcome the traditional playing values of Manhattan's Copacabana and Latin Quarter, and thus has had to take the rubber bands off his roll and

Lena's Horne of Plenty; Cracks L.A. Grove Mark

Los Angeles, July 2.

Highest net profit ever achieved in the room has been racked up by Lena Horne in the first two weeks of her four-and-a-half-week stand at the Cocoanut Grove. She has been playing to virtual capacity audiences nightly.

In addition to the record number of covers, Miss Horne has attracted a heavy spending audience. As a result, according to entertainment director Gus Lampe, net profit on the run thus far is 38% ahead of the mark set by former record holder, Harry Belafonte.

Palace Dropping Vaude—Again; Eyeing Straight 'Big Film' Policy

Jersey Stage Coach Liquor Dimout for Strip Displays

License of the Stage Coach Inn, S. Hackensack, N. J., was lifted for 15 days by the N. J. Alcoholic Beverage Commission, starting Sunday (30). Suspension came as a result of a charge of permitting a "lewd and immoral" act at the spot last February. Sherry Britton was on the bill at that time.

Owners pleaded "no defense."

Pierre's Cotillion Pondering Policy On Acts in B.O. Dip

Talks are now going on by executives of the Hotel Pierre, N. Y., to determine whether there will be a talent policy in the Cotillion Room. Decision is expected to be made this week since any delay may automatically mean that names will have to be dropped on the basis that most hotels are grabbing up what headliners become available.

Reason for the indecision lies in the fact that earnings in the room dropped considerably last year. There were a few performers, notably Celeste Holm and Lilo, who made money for the house. Otherwise, profits were down.

Presently, the Cotillion Room is operating through the summer with only an orchestral policy. Whether this will be continued into the fall without name act lures is one of the subjects up for discussion.

The removal of the Pierre from the talent ranks would break an important link in the N. Y. hotel room circuit. The Cotillion is regarded as a prestige booking, along with the Persian Room of the Plaza, Empire Room of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria and the Maisonette of the St. Regis. Because of its prestige, the Pierre was able to get some of the top names to go in at prices less than that which they obtained in other cafe situations.

Stanley Melba has booked the house some years, with most of the seasons being regarded as highly successful.

The Palace Theatre is planning to drop vaudeville. The last bastion of pure vaude on Broadway and probably in the U. S., the house last week posted a two-week notice for band, stagehands and acts, to take effect week of July 11. Business has been off for some time at the house, and although it hasn't taken any severe losses and may have even come out slightly ahead on the vaude deal, the Palace may make a bid for taller coin by going after big pictures, and possibly making the house available for legit shows.

Sol Afl Schwartz, RKO Theatres president, states that the probabilities are that the Palace will continue with its present policy, but notice was put up as a protective measure. "It's not our intention to close the theatre," he said. He explained that the procedure of putting up a notice was normal so that the house would be in position to move in should anything come along.

The danger with this kind of procedure, however, lies in the fact that musicians and stage crews start to disappear, and should the theatre continue sometimes the backstage and pit quality deteriorates.

The Palace presently has a commitment with Jerry Lewis to play there around Christmas time. But nothing has been pactcd for that deal. It's believed that the house will go in for two-a-dayers as the names become available.

Nothing definite is set for the Palace. The house may continue from week-to-week even beyond the present established deadline. In that event, the notice will remain posted so that the talent can be dropped at a given moment. Delay in getting a picture that can launch a straight film policy, or availability of talent that might mean an added measure of income for the Palace, may cause a temporary continuation of four-a-day.

The Palace has been handicapped by the fact that it's been on a comparatively low budget which rarely went over $4,000 for eight acts. It was impossible to get names at these prices, except some oldtimers who drew the social security set. Booker Dan Friendly is regarded in the trade as having been instrumental in getting acts that would ordinarily cost more than the allotted budget. The Palace had been regarded as a showcase from which acts were booked on vaudeo shows and went to other N. Y. situations such as Radio City Music Hall and the Roxy. The theatre was also an aid in showcasing talent for local bonifaces and bookers.

The Palace during its vaude tenure was also instrumental, during its two-a-day showings, in launching the return of Judy Garland to American audiences. It also preemed Jerry Lewis, and provided Danny Kaye with a rostrum for a long run.

House opened during its latterday revival on May 19, 1949. Its latest vaude run will be a month or so over eight years.

New England Up in the Clouds

Rhode Island Giving Gladhand to Rainmaker, But In Mass. Resorts and State Laws Are Dampers

Boston, July 2.

Al fresco show biz, which has been having a bonanza because of an almost month-long drought and heatwave in New England, is threatened by artificial rainmaking, but Massachusetts outdoor amusement interests need not worry because the state's complex laws regarding artificial cloud-seeding.

Rhode Island has already negotiated for the services of a rainmaker, and Prof. Wallace E. Howell of Lexington, Mass., a pro rainmaker, has presented his pitch to John L. Rego, R. I. director of agriculture and conservation. Only a greenlight from the R. I. attorney general, expected hourly, is needed to start the cloudseeding.

However in Mass., where officials of the Brockton Fair, Eastern States Exposition, and operators of lake resort areas, amusement parks, strawhatters, summer arts festivals and concerts would certainly voice objections to rainmaking, the meetings and hearings necessary to get a rainmaking project started would take so much time that a decision either way would be reached far too late to benefit anyone.

To get an artificial rainmaking project started in this state, an individual or interested group would have to make formal application to the Weather Amendment Board, made up of the commissioners of agriculture, public health and conservation. The board would then have to call for a public hearing, with representation also by the Water Resources Commission and the Industrial Division of the State Dept. of Commerce.

At such an open public hearing, anyone or any group could appear in opposition to the rainmaking project. This would take so much time that the drought would either have done its damage, normal rain would have relieved the situation, or a decision either way would be too late.

Massachusetts is not too hipped on artificial rainmaking anyway, it seems. Back in 1952, the Worcester County Farmers Field Day wanted to stage an experimental rainmaking project to see what the results might be. But the Weather Amendment Board said no, that such an experiment was not considered justified.

KY.'S BEVHILLS PACTS NAMES TO YEAR'S END

The Beverly Hills Country Club, Newport, Ky., has lined up enough shows to last the balance of the year. Inn is now starting to book into 1958. In some instances, secondary acts are still to be set. However, the headliners have been pacted solidly.

Following the July 5 session with Jane Froman and Georgie Kaye, Rusty Draper is set for July 19; Andrews Sisters, Aug. 2; Steve Lawrence and Gene Baylos, Aug. 16; Johnny Puleo, Aug. 30; Novelites and Carmel Quinn, Sept. 13; Don Cornell, Sept. 27; Gloria De Haven and Al Bernie, Oct. 11; Ted Lewis, Oct. 25; Ben Blue, Nov. 8; Gunty and Eydie Gorme, Nov. 22; Nelson Eddy, Dec. 6; and Olson & Johnson, Dec. 20.

Salisbury Beach's 'Great Conversion' In Dry '57; Liquor-to-Lobster, Etc.

Salisbury Beach, Mass., July 2.

"No booze" policy here has switched some nitery spots from cafe society to teenage jukebox softdrink recreation centers, made arcades and skill game resorts out of others and converted former bars into souvenir, knick-knack and religious articles salesrooms.

What happens to a lush beach spot with 44 liquor places when curfew strikes is aptly illustrated by the signs now up on former hot spots. "Gift Shop," "Live Lobsters," "Fish 'n' Chips," "Chinese Food."

Salisbury's dry vote in the last election forced the nitery ops to switch to new businesses or pull out. They've decided to fight it out this season, hoping for a revival of liquor next year, and have set up a plan for a seven-man liquor commission for which they'll ask legislative authority.

Meantime, Dennis Mulcahy's once brightly lit seven nights a week 1,200-seater with some of the biggest names in show biz is now a weekend only cafe-type dancery. Here with the McGuire Sisters, Frankie Laine, Patti Page, Johnnie Ray, Sammy Davis Jr., Tony Bennett, Teresa Brewer, and other such names would ordinarily be skedded, Georgie Kaye and a 14-piece dance orch plays while the customers sip on softdrinks. Last season, the McGuires broke the Frolics attendance record with 16,000 paid admissions for a week's stint. This year things are much different and the club's Sidewalk Cafe is now a Skee-ball.

Jenny's nitery, once a showcase for top burlesque artists, is now an amusement arcade. Eddie Mogab's intimer is in the fish, chips and lobster biz. Another former night spot is a jukebox recreation center for teeners. Joe O'Shea's Oasis is now a Chinese beanery.

Charlie Gamanick, last year a night club op, now runs a Kiddyland where moppets ride with a popcorn kick. McKenzie's package store is now a meat market. Several spots are shuttered for the time being, and the beach front has for the first time empty stores.

Ops are concentrating on the plan for next year. A group of citizens will petition the State Legislature for authority to set up a seven-man commission to handle the liquor biz if it is revived. The commission would award licences and reports are that not 30% of the number operating last season would be permitted. The townspeople can vote on liquor in the state election next November.

GRANADA FESTIVAL'S ROSTER OF VIRTUOSI

Granada, July 2.

In a setting of Moorish splendor, Granada's International Dance and Music Festival bowed in here for its sixth successive year. Longhair music and ballet acts take place within or adjacent to colorful world wonder Alhambra and festival has become a serious turismo rival to Venice, Aix-En-Provence, Lucerne, Bordeaux, Florence and other roofless highbrow meeting grounds.

Featured soloists this year are Jose Iturbi, Wilhelm Kempff, Victoria de Los Angeles, Alfredo Campoli (violin) and Gaspar Cassado (cello). Opening all-Beethoven concert onstaged Kempff as piano soloist with the Spanish National Orchestra under the baton of Ataulfo Argenta. Festival will give first world reading of top Spanish composer Cristobal Halfter's "Two Movements for Kettle-Drums and String Orchestra."

The dance section opens June 28 with the Grand Ballet de l'Opera de Paris in the Generalife Gardens. Group toeing the line includes Liane Dayde, Marjorie Tallchief, Claude Bessy, Renault, Van Dijk and Skibine.

In Face of 1,500 Not in Union, AFM Undisposed To Take a 50% Cut

Minneapolis, July 2.

Musicians' union here has under advisement a request from the board of the Aquatennial, annual summer mardi gras, that the celebration be permitted to reduce the number of union musicians employed to play at the stadium (before each of the two parades) from 40 to 20. The cost to the Aquatennial would be reduced from $800 to $400.

Initial reaction of union officials was that the number of musicians should be increased rather than cut. They pointed out that the union is contributing to the celebration by permitting 1,500 non-union musicians to participate in the parades and some other events. Out of 1,800 Minneapolis Muscians' union members, only 10% are employed at their trade, the officials also said.

As a compromise, an Aquatennial board member suggested that the number of musicians be left at 40 and the union make a $200 contribution to the celebration.

It's now regarded as too late to get the Flushing Meadows project started on anything else, and for the first time in 15 years, there will be an entertainment blackout there. Site had been operated by Elliot Murphy who relinquished the spot this year. Billy Rose was the original operator having been the first tenant of the amphitheatre when his "Aquacade" was part of the N.Y. World Fair in 1939-40.

Show that been booked by Hamid included the Mariners, Russ Morgan orch, Will Mahoney, Robert Lamouret, Gae Foster line (24) and assorted divers and clowns. Hamid declared that he notified Park Commissioner Robert A. Moses on Friday (28) that he would not be able to operate, citing lack of cooperation by the various unions.

Local 802's View

Typical of union response to Hamid's accusation of hampering the project was the reply by Al Manuti, president of Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians.

He said: "Hamid would operate with a piano player if we let him. We had 25 men on that job last year. We have 36 men at Jones Beach and 27 men in Central Park. We gave Hamid a break to see how it goes the first year.

"Why does every producer think he's going to lose his shirt He comes to us asking for concessions immediately. If he tried and lost, then he could ask for concessions, but first we want to see how it goes."

Rudy Karnolt of the United Scenic Artists said that Hamid is trying to avoid union conditions. He claimed that Hamid wanted to come in with non-union scenery which was built for the road. The union demanded that he hire designers, as Murphy did. However, Karnolt said that he and Hamid made some compromise agreement, which he understood was satisfactory. He declined to give terms of the compromise "because the membership would knock my brains in." He also said that Hamid has never been in the theatre and he's trying to bring "carnival" conditions into New York. He added that Hamid must have known he couldn't open, for reasons best known to himself.

THE 'IF' ENDS THE DEAL

Max Winters Passes Up Elvis Presley Booking

Minneapolis, July 2.

Local promoter Max Winters agreed to Elvis Presley's demand for a $25,000 guarantee for a single appearance here during the Aquatennial, local annual summer mardi gras, this month.

But when Presley also stipulated that the engagement would be contingent upon Winters lining up another such booking in the area, the latter found himself unable to meet the requirement and bowed out.

offer flattering terms to headliners potent enough to draw kingsized grosses.

Maksik Vs. The Copa

Maksik has upped salaries of several performers who played these midtowneries. Tony Martin, who played the Copa at about $8,500, has been snagged by the T&C. Salary was announced by spokesmen for Martin at $25,000 for a five-year deal. Actually, deal calls for coin that's just about half or $12,500. Johnnie Ray was taken out of the Hotel Waldorf-Astoria for an increase, and Jerry Lewis, originally scheduled for the Copa, was snatched away by an offer said to be as high as $40,000, which would include the surrounding show.

On the other hand, some agencies are advising clients to hit the midtowners for purposes of prestige, and ease of working conditions. For example, Milton Berle is believed likely to sign with the Copacabana for a December stand for three weeks. Berle last played the T&C for $22,500 with show included.

Curiously enough, the Maksik excursion into stratosphere salaries comes at a time when Las Vegas hotels are saying "I pass" at some of the high fees being asked by agencies and acts. It's more difficult to get a sizeable raise in Las Vegas than at any time in the history of the greenfelt country.

The Florida Situation

Florida prices might have been stabilized this year, but they are rising in small degrees because of activity by the Americana Hotel which is trying to line up its winter schedule and outbidding its neighbors for acts that have been faves in the resort.

Cafe operators are making no secret of their fears of the effects of the Town & Country's move into the economic stratosphere. They point out that the T & C may be skating on thin ice with its high show and operation costs, from the view that several rainy weekends could wipe Maksik out. The gambling is for high stakes; he could come out with a bundle if every condition works out in his favor.

However, their fear lies in the fact that sooner or later the established names must hanker to go over where the higher chips are available, prestige or no, even if barnlike proportions hamper their efficacy.

Star-Making Idea

One consequence, they say, will be the necessity of having to build their own headliners. Jules Podell, Copacabana operator, has already started on this step. His recent bookings reflect that trend. The bill with Buddy Hackett and Ella Fitzgerald, which ended last week (26), resulted in two headline bookings. Hackett will head the show in October and again in May, while Miss Fitzgerald will go in June 5. Myron Cohen and Roberta Sherwood, who were paired, are now deemed sufficiently strong to head their own spots. Sue Carson and the Sportsmen, on the present show, may wind up as headliners in time.

In addition, Podell has snaggled Eartha Kitt off the hotel circuit for a fling at the Copa, March 6; Martha Raye is tentatively set, Nat King Cole and Jimmy Durante are committed to the Copa. In addition, the ever-faithful Joe E. Lewis plays the spot for a six-week stand.

Lou Walters of the Latin Quarter has been getting novelties from Europe, and has been getting headliners when available at prices he can afford to pay. Walters isn't going in for competitive bidding at this stage of the game.

The building of headliners, bonifaces says, has long been delayed. A situation of this kind creates a crisis which might have been averted had they gone in for experimental bookings to a greater degree in the past. By creating their own stars, the bonifaces of the smaller capacity spots hope to keep their prices in line.

Of course, the nitery owners who build headliners are not certain of retaining them. However, they feel that it is healthier for the industry to create than to outbid. Another factor is the ability of the established smaller-capacity spots to undersell their product. The Copa, for example, during the tenure of Frank Sinatra retained its $5 minimum, respite the fact that no one would have balked at a bottom price double that which was charged. Both that spot and the Latin Quarter have considerably lower menu tarrifs than that which prevails at the T & C. However, the latter spot must maintain a price structure which can support the higher salaries Maksik is forced to shell out.

The critical period in all the cafes will come next season. The talent agencies are moving cautiously, even though many nitery owners, especially those in a highly competitive situation such as Wildwood, N.J., are offering fabulous prices.

Although a lot of the blame for the higher price graph, is now being shifted to bonifaces, the percenters do admit that they've given the situation a nudge in the past, but generally are fearful of taking credit for the latest inflationary trend since many privately admit it's most likely to turn out badly for the industry.

'Holiday on Ice' Runs 3 Weeks in Mex City

Mexico City, June 25.

"Holiday on Ice" did its usual boffo biz here, with its twoweek booking at the Arena Mexico, starting last month extended an additional week. Show of 125, headed by Arnold Skoda and Kay Stravensa, which Hal Stevens managed, was given a big new bally.

Show, which was impressarioed in Latin America by Joaquin Guerra, local promoter, ended its year's tour here. Company went back to U.S. and will open the 1957-58 in Minot, N.D.

Chicagoland Fair Spreads Exhibits And Acts for Under-a-Buck Fortnight

By DAVE LEVADI

Chicago, July 2.

As trade centre and manufacturing mecca for the midwest, Chicago has been able to capitalize on its industries and lakefront scenery for years with trade and commerce fairs. These have shaped as this city's chief attraction for summer tourists.

The current Chicagoland Fair runs only from June 29 through July 15 and makes little comparison with the scope of past summerlong industrial fairs sponsored by representatives of the automobile and railroad industries along vast expanses of the Outer Drive area. But even a turnout here of several hundred thousand is expected to prove profitable to exhibitors and promoters, according to the sponsoring Chicago Assn. of Commerce & Industry.

Visitors pay their 90c. at the gate and pass through either of two halfmile aisles lined with the exhibits of over 250 local and national industrial operations, vending outfits, transportation services, publishing establishments and other commercial enterprises, many of which are set up to pay their own way through the retailing of merchandise. Not overly impressive are the much heralded displays of the town's educational and cultural facilities, giving wall space and nominal recognition to one or two schools and listing the museums, theatres, etc. At the far end of the Pier the foot-weary can take their choice of the elaborate eating establishment set up under the auspices of the Palmer House Hotel or seat themselves at either of several entertainment centres.

90-Cent Umbrella

All shows at the fair are covered by the 90c. admission. Included are concerts by Jack Russell's 35-piece band under Leo Henning, the Ed & Wilma Ice Show with a competent cast of 11 doing four 40-minute shows a day, and Tommy Bartlett's Water Ski Thrill Show including skiers, boatmen and an assortment of airborne acrobatics assembled from Bartlett's Wisconsin Dells home base and from Florida. Bartlett also runs his troupe of 18 on a strenuous four-a-day schedule.

The only other regularly seheduled act is More's Puppets, squeezed into empty spaces on the program and providing bally material to encourage smallfry attendance. Fireworks compete with the evening acts at the lakefront and special events and guest appearances fill in the rest of the bill.

In an affair of this sort, an overlapping of events is necessary to avoid too heavy a concentration of traffic at any one point and to capture the excitement of the crowd. The whole setup here is well-designed to allow viewers clear sight of the shows despite the continous throngs of strollers. For performers, things are not as easy as in a hotel dining foom or nitery where one doesn't have to compete with diversions in the crowd or shows nearby. For this reason, more space should save been spared from the exhibits for more commodious performing areas.

Hardly a newspaper, tv station or radio outlet here has failed to give at least some mention to the fair.

A preview show, June 28, brought a full pier despite early afternoon rains. Resultant word-of-mouth gives indications of a busy two weeks.

Blackpool Park Boss Seeks Ideas in U.S.

Blackpool, Eng., July 2.

Leonard Thompson, chairman of Blackpool Pleasure Beach, is currently touring the U. S. looking for new ideas. He will visit N. Y., Chicago, Philadelphia, New Orleans and California. He also will call in on Disneyland in Hollywood.

According to C. E. Burrell, Pleasure Beach secretary, the Americans have always been ahead in the amusement park field.

"Most of our equipment came from America in pre-war days," he said. "The dollar situation being what it is, the only thing you can do now is to get ideas and see if you can get similar equipment in more accessible places, such as England or Europe."

Secombe Eyes U.S. Trip

Glasgow, July 2.

Harry Secombe, English comedian scoring at Empire Theatre here in revue "Rockin' The Town," under Bernard Delfont banner, is mulling a look-see trip to U. S. in November.

Zany-style comedian is set for "Puss in Boots" pantomime at Coventry Theatre in December. He will play another summer season at the London Palladium in late spring of 1958. His radio series "The Goon Show" tees off again in September.

Curfew in Wildwood Extended; Spots Busy With Talent Bookings

Wildwood, N. J., July 2.

With the blessing of the city solons, Wildwood night clubs will rock almost all the way round the clock this summer. An extra half-hour of live music time has been tacked on each night's performance. Floorshows and music can now extend until 2.30 a.m. nightly. On the eve of a holiday, such as July Fourth and Labor Day, the music can continue until 3:30 a.m.

Turc Duncan begins his 27th year of promoting wrestling in Wildwood Convention Hall pier with ballet-dancer-turned-wrestler Ricki Starr featured.

Philadelphia's leading disk jockeys are summering in Wildwood. Dick Clark of WFIL-TV "Bandstand" is in for nightly appearances at Hunt's Starlight ballroom on the boardwalk, along with disk talent. Joe Grady and Ed Hurst of WPFH are appearing with record hops and talent at the Wildwood roller rink.

Mrs. Louisa Booth, plans to step far afield from her previous shows in the big Chateau Monterey. She will present original musical productions. A cast of 14 are appearing in a show produced by Victor Manfred, with book and lyrics by Roy Freeman and original music by Stan Applebaum. Show conductor is Philip Raskind.

Oscar Garrigues is still attempting to fill four open weeks at his Manor Hotel Supper Club. These are July 5, 19, 26, and Aug. 3. Joni James is current with Tony Martin coming in July 12 for a week. Jerry Lewis will be in for two weeks starting Aug. 9 and Liberace starts Aug. 23.

Sea Isle Casino is dickering Vaughn Monroe and still has open weeks for top talent. Billy Ford & His Thunderbirds and Walt Bruno's quintet are house combos at Ben and Jack Martin's Mardi Gras club with rock 'n' roll headliners slated to augment the show. Hotel Blackstone Emerald Show Bar is going for the big beat with the Nite-Trons, featuring Jet Lorring and Al Nit and the Dyna-matics. Three Guys & a Doll with Hank Ventura have been tapped for the hot weather showcasing at Bill McHale's Mocambo.

Louis Dacri's orch has opened the ballroom of the Wildwood Crest pier and will appear there nightly until mid-September. Everett Murray is in his 17th year as m.c. at the big oceanfront centre.

Bud and Dave Moore have opened their new Inlet club in the Anglesea section, switching from rock 'n' roll to Chinese talent, featuring Indie Kino with the Two Gents. The old Inlet club, an island landmark since 1912, was destroyed by fire in midwinter. The spot achieved a measure of fame when a Morristown, N. J., talent scout first saw Bonnie Baker, of "Oh, Johnny" fame, singing there as a weekend fill-in act.

Mickey Shaughnessy will appear from July 8 to 21 at Eddie Suez's Club Avalon. Shaughnessy got his first film break when a scout saw him perform on the Club Avalon stage. Haller & Haydon are the current comics at the Avalon. Coming in to fill the comic slot after Shaughnessy will be Ronnie Sterling and Billy Kelly. Singer Charlie Gracie opens for two frames on July 22, followed by singer Dick Lee for four weeks starting Aug. 4. Alis Lesley, the "female Elvis Presley," is currently headlining until July 21.

Lower Basin Street As Montmartre-in-N.Y. For The Bohemian Jazz Buffs

The kinship between New York's Greenwich Village and Paris' Montmartre is the reason for the mushrooming jazz club operation below 14th St. That's the opinion of Ralph Watkins, who preemed his Lower Basin Street (in association with Bill Faden) just below Sheridan Square last Wednesday (26).

"The eastside spenders," he explained, "would rather come down to a club in the Village than patronize a westside operation." (Watkins had been running Basin Street on West 51st St. for the past several years until the building was razed.) "It's important for the artists, too," he added, "because they like to know that they're playing in spots where the audience is receptive. And the Village supplies that kind of audience.

As far as the analogy to Paris' Montmartre, Watkins believes that the Village's nightlife diversity, which includes stripperies, intellectual hangouts and foreign-styled restaurants, makes it a perfect spot for an on-the-town spree which can't help but pull traffic into the jazz clubs.

Despite his bullish attitude on jazz in the Village, current Lower Basin Street operation is a test case. Room reverts back to an off-Broadway theatre group Sept. 14. If summer biz indicates that his thinking on jazz and the Village is correct, Watkins already has a location in mind for a place to set up a permanent shop.

He admits that he'll get a better indication of Lower Basin Street's potential after the run of his strong kickoff headliner, Dave Brubeck. Already set for gigs during the summer are Phineas Newborn and George Shearing.

Opening show, which pulled a turnaway crowd, spotlighted Brubeck's quartet (piano, bass, drums, sax) which alternated with pianist Jutta Hipp. Miss Hipp, who has an imaginative keyboard touch, soloed the first few sets but was virtually lost in the big room. Management planned to bring in a bass and drums assist to give her turn more depth. For the opening night hipsters, Brubeck did no wrong. He had 'em virtually eating out of every riff.

Tab for the room is $1.50 for admission (bullpen supplied) and a $2.50 minimum at the tables.

'Variety' London Office Manager's Innocent-Eye View of Vegas

By HAROLD MYERS

London, July 2.

To a Londoner whose conception of gambling had been conditioned by the sedate atmosphere of the Monte Carlo Casino, and whose night-life diet had been largely restricted to single act presentations, his recent first time look at Las Vegas induced a reaction almost as startling as psychiatric shock treatment.

The Nevada desert stopover was made at the tailend of a transcontinental trip across the United States and was, to this showbiz reporter, easily the show business highlight of a tour overloaded with highlights. It was, to paraphrase the title of a Broadway comedy, like a visit to a small, but fabulously prosperous and exciting planet.

The Las Vegas Strip, easily the most synthetic development of the century, has also developed into the greatest talent showcase in the English speaking world. The names seen in lights on any one day would be more than enough to keep the London Palladium at capacity level the year round. And from a presentation point of view, the shows had a greater glitter and more lavish production qualities than many West End theatres; particularly so in the new and lush Tropicana, where the apron stage half-circled the auditorium to give a highly decorative quality.

This byliner, who never became accustomed to the high cost of eating in the States, was particularly impressed with the comparatively low charges prevailing through the desert resort, though not for philanthropic reasons he realizes. Accommodation in the lush hotels was substantially below the rates in either New York or Hollywood; and the inclusive prices for a meal and toprate show compared favorably with the modest London charges.

Where else, for example, would it be necessary to have an entire supporting company to appear with Lena Horne? In London last year she headlined at the Savoy as a solo attraction for a month, and there was turn-away biz every night. At the Sands, however, she was a headliner with big name talent in support and an extravagant production as an overall showcase.

Along the Strip there was Joe E. Lewis at the top of the bill, but, once more, an expensive lineup to provide the extra attraction, including the internationally publicized stripper, Lili St. Cyr. Top calibre talent have, indeed, become commonplace among the Vegas resort hotels, to a degree that would overwhelm audiences in any other part of the world.

But in Vegas anything below fabulous would be doomed to failure. That's the overworked adjective that has to be applied to every facet of the Strip and is more true there than anywhere else in the U. S. That's particularly true of the modus vivendi of even the most lush hotel; everything is designed to force the visitor from the hotel bedroom straight into the gaming room. There, the inevitable odds of the laws of chance adjust the bargains elsewhere.

Baker Sisters Split

Revere Beach, Mass., July 2.

The Baker Sisters, McCoy sister act of singing comediennes current at the Revere Frolic through Saturday (6), are breaking up with Thelma retiring while Bobbi will break in a new partner and continue with the act. Thelma, wife of Gene Gendrome, owner of Lucky Pierre's restaurant in New York, leaves the act at Saturday closer to become a housewife.

Bobbi will break in new partner, Fran Burr, on a six-week USO tour to Korea. Act will continue to be billed as the Baker Sisters.

Patti Page Cancels Mich. and Ind. Fairs; Det. Sets Big Bills

Detroit, July 2.

Patti Page, who earlier had agreed to sing at both the Michigan and the Indiana State Fairs, has decided to cancel these appearances.

The Michigan State Fair now has set the following performers for the 6,500-seat Coliseum: Headliners for the first four-day weekend, Aug. 20-Sept. 2, Johnnie Ray, Eydie Gorme and Bill Haley & His Comets; for the Sept. 6-8 session, Guy Mitchell, Georgia Gibbs, the Fontane Sisters and the Harmonicats.

The following acts will perform both weekends: Rhythm Kings, the Tyrones, Billy Ward & His Dominoes, the Hilltoppers and Sammy Shore. Roy Tracy will be emcee.

The grandstand show will present "Movieland Animal Stars" featuring Rin Tin Tin and Lt. Rip Masters (James Brown) and Rusty (Lee Aaker) for eight days, plus Leo Carrillo for Sept. 3-5 only.

Torme's 2d Brit. Tour

London, July 2.

Mel Torme opens his second British vaude tour July 22. He'll take in Bristol, Edinburgh, Manchester, Birmingham, Newcastle, Glasgow and London. The tour will last approximately nine weeks.

Torme is also expected to appear in two commercial tv shows, Associated-TeleVision's "Sunday Night At Blackpool" and "Saturday Spectacular."

The "Cotton Club Revue", which started at the Cotton Club (ex-Beachcomber), Miami Beach, has been signed for the Theatre Under the Stars in Central Park, N. Y. Show goes in July 8 for one week and options, after its four-day run at the Carter Barron Amphitheatre, Washington.

There had been a possibility of "Cotton Club Revue" going into the Palace or Loew's State, with latter deal more likely. However, it's felt that following its showcasing under legit auspices, it could still be utilized in a vaude house.

The all-Negro show comes into New York at a time when the Michael Grace operation in the Central Park was conceded to be in great difficulty because of the brutal reception accorded its present occupant, "Rosalie." Grace was faced with the prospect of getting a readymade stock company or closing. However, in the legit field, large traveling companies are few. Consequently, when the Cotton Club, which will have about 50 performers onstage, turned up, deal was made quickly.

In "Cotton Club Revue" will be Cab Calloway, Lonnie Sattin, Norma Miller Dancers, George Kirby and others. General Amusement Corp. agented the deal with Jack Bertell acting as special rep for the show.

The show was the surprise cafe click of Miami Beach last season and racked up tremendous grosses. It followed with a run at the Royal Nevada, Las Vegas, where business was mixed.

MAJOR PITT CAFES GO WEEKEND FOR SUMMER

Pittsburgh, July 2.

Warm weather is sending two of the town's top niteries into weekend operation over the summer. Pair are the Twin Coaches, district's biggest cafe with seating capacity of 1,200, and the Copa, in heart of Golden Triangle. Latter will undergo an extensive remodeling job during the shutdown.

Only deviation from the July-August policy at Coaches will come in August when Andrews Sisters play a nine-day stand. Copa has inked a lineup of names for its weekends, including Denise Darcel, Count Basie, Tommy Leonetti and Crew Cuts. Woody Herman & The Herd have been set for a single-nighter July 10.

With Copa shuttering weeknights, that'll leave only the New Nixon operating downtown.

Outdoor Jazz Circuit As Campus Pinchhitter

Hollywood, July 2.

New "outdoor jazz concert" circuit has been put together by vet promoter Van Tomkins for the summer season when he is unable to book his campus dates. Wheel starts with four cities, which may be expanded within the next few weeks.

First of the concerts will be staged tomorrow (Wed.) night at the San Bernardino City Park, to be followed by dates at Laguna, Bakersfield College and Santa Barbara. Initial package consists of Anita O'Day, Bud Shank group and the Pete Jolly Trio. Tomkins books the acts on a full-week basis, rents the outdoor locations on his own and promotes the bashes in association with local deejays.

Calypso Joe (Matons) Eyeing Waikiki Site

Honolulu, July 2.

Calypso Joe's, offbeat nitery in downtown Honolulu, has been shuttered and Bill Matons, better known as Calypso Joe, is looking for a location closer to Waikiki.

Meanwhile, Lord Sylvester, hailed in advertisements as "Honolulu's first authentic calypso singer," has opened at the Waikiki Rathskeller. Room's management hopes he'll be able to attract the profitable repeat biz chalked up by folksinger Stan Wilson for several months in the same basement room.

Huge Load of Nitery Talent on Tap As Atlantic City Tees Off 'In Full'

By JOE WALKER

Atlantic City, July 2.

The 10-week summer season gets off here this week when most night clubs and airconditioned grilles in the boardwalk hotels open with seasonal talent to compete for the mighty dollar.

Again some of the top names in show biz are booked for some part of the 10 weeks to culminate with the No. 1 resort event, the Miss America Pageant, which starts the Tuesday after Labor day.

Steel Pier, George Hamid's huge boardwalk spot, brings in Tony Bennett, Frankie Laine, the Mills Bros., Frank Parker, etc., plus big name bands for dancing on the pier's end.

Hamid's Jazz Bill

Into Hamid's Boardwalk Warner, which seats 4,200 and operates mostly as a summer picture house, comes a jazz extravaganza July 9-15 featuring Louis Armstrong, Ella Fitzgerald and Lionel Hampton—a bit of something new on the Boardwalks.

Paul (Skinny) D'Amato, major importer of top talent here, has completed his 500 Club bookings for the season with Frank Sinatra again due in over the Labor Day weekend while Jerry Lewis will be here the week of Aug. 1. Liberace, in his first nitery appearance at the resort, appears the week of July 25. Previously booked were Nat King Cole and Sammy Davis Jr., with Tony Martin due to get things underway as the club swings into summer routine July 6.

Cotton Club, sepia spot which has operated here for years, gets into the bigtime by booking Count Basie and Duke Ellington plus Lionel Hampton as its top attractions.

Arthur Lee Simpkins, Clyde McPhatter, Louis Jordan and the Billy Williams Quartet are the big seasonal attractions at Club Harlem, for years the leading sepia spot here.

'Ice Capades' at Hall

John Harris again brings his "Ice Capades" to the Convention Hall for a six-week stand the last two weeks in July and through August.

On the boardwalk, the large hotels are, as usual, bringing in near-top talent in their bids with other resort attractions for the visitor's dollar.

Lord Lance & His Calypsonians plus the resort's Pedro Albani & His Islanders opened Friday (28) night in the Ritz-Carlton's new Calypso Carousel room. Featured is Jesse Barber.

Submarine Room of Hotel Traymore had Larry Wilde and the Paulette Sisters with Joe Stern's orch over the weekend.

Noro Morales with his piano and Latin Rhythms come in tomorrow (Wed.). Stern band is fixture for season.

Seaside Hotel's Surf 'N' Sand Room is presenting the Jules Lavan Trio featuring Anita Carter.

President's Calypso

President Hotel opens season in its big Round-the-World Room tomorrow night with the Bobby Roberts orch and Lady Sheree & Her Calypso Trinidaires, plus Mambo Hy and Jill with a Latin-American dance contest a feature each Friday night.

Shelburne presents Herbert Curbelo and his Latin-American orch featuring Isabel Canalas, vocalist, in its Boardwalk Lounge for the season.

Brighton offers its Punch Bowl with the Four Tones.

Cotton Club started its season yesterday (Mon.) with the Miles Davis quintet and the Hampton Hawes trio. Talent for the rest of season includes Dizzy Gillespie, the American Jazz Quartet, July 8-14; Count Basie, George Shearing Quintet, Julian "Cannonball" Adderley Quintet, July 15-21; Billy Holiday, Max Roach Quintet, July 22-28; Duke Ellington band, Carmen McCrae trio, Horace Silver All-Stars, July 29-Aug. 4; Bud Powell Trio, Phineas Newborn Trio, Aug. 5-11; Lionel Hampton's band, American Jazz Quartet, Aug. 12-25; Al Hibbler, Jimmy Smith Organ trio, Aug. 26-Sept. 2.

Paradise, sepia spot, advertised as oldest night club in America, gets underway tonight with Olivette Miller and Bert Gibon presenting "Highlites," a salute to Miller & Lyles. The Swamp, which heretofore has been the Dude Ranch, on the uptown boardwalk, also gets started tonight with Billy Duke & His Dukes plus the Tune Timers and Dia Blito. Harlem, big colored cafe, swung into action a week early with Lon Bibeau Fontaine presenting the Timmie Rogers Show.

Jockey, Erin, Etc.

The Jockey Club off the resort's main stem in mid-city got going on its 25th year Friday with Jockey Hyatt offering Danny Windsor and Billy Lee, Guy Marks, Betty Logan, Alverta, Kathy Denniss, Pau August, plus the Harry Sclafford orch.

The Erin Cafe in mid-city near the boardwalk opened with Johnny (Rubberface) Frisco as emcee and the O'Connor Twins, Adele Young Dancers, Flame Moore and Don Shelley, Charlie Francis and Colleen O'Grady.

On the uptown boardwalk Ben Coty, for many years emcee at the Dude Ranch, opened his own Theatrical bar featuring Beryl Booker and Slam Stewart. Hialeah, big spot on main street in mid-city, has brought back Bob O'Neill who has been featured there for many years, plus the Victors.

In the Doman Club which operated for years as the Nomad, the Lamplighters with Bobbie Parker, Flamingo and Mike Pedicine and his band open for the season tonight.

Garden Pier ocean ampitheatre, operated by the city, opened its summer season with concerts by the Atlantic City Festival Orchestra July 1-2. The Naupauer Accordion Symphony with a patriotic program by the Atlantic County American Legion is planned for July 4. Pier features the Lan-Chester Chorus of 100 voices from Lancaster - Chester counties of Pennsylvania Friday (5) and will have entertainmen every night but Saturday throughout the season. Pier is cuffo.

C&W Bash in Dallas

Dallas, July 2.

Stars of the "Grand Ole Opry," "Ozark Jubilee" and Louisiana Hayride" will pool their talents for one of the biggest country western shows ever presented here in the special July 4 night program in the Dallas Sportatorium.

Headliners will be Kitty Wells, Johnny & Jack; the Tennessee Mountain Boys and comedian Pete Scudder, all from "Grand Ole Opry"; Johnny Horton from "Louisiana Hayride," the Marksmen Quartet from the "Ozark Jubilee" show and the Plainsman Quartet from local radio.

Bandleader Johnny Long Felled by Smoky Blaze In Atlanta Hotel Room

Atlanta, July 2.

Orch leader Johnny Long narrowly escaped death in his hotel room here in the pre-dawn hours last Wednesday (26) when he was overcome by smoke. Long was found unconscious, overcome by smoke and lying on his bed, by a member of his band, Arthur Kasher Jr., who drives the bus in which the Long orch travels.

Police were told Kasher found Long in a smoke-filled room at the Peachtree Manor Hotel shortly before 4 a. m.

"Apparently I dropped off to sleep while smoking a cigaret," Long said. "I woke up and found the bed on fire and the room filled with smoke."

After discovering the fire, the bandleader said he notified the hotel desk. A hotel porter investigated, smelled smoke and then sounded the alarm. Kasher, who lives at Somerset, Mass., said he ran to the second floor after learning that there was a fire in the hotel. "I found Mr. Long unconscious on the bed," he said.

Long was given emergency treatment at Henry General Hospital for smoke inhalation. He also received a couple of minor burns on his leg.

After he was dismissed from the hospital he appeared before Municipal Court Judge James Webb to answer a charge of violating the fire ordinance. Atlanta laws are strict about causing fires in hotels because more than 120 died in a fire that gutted downtown Winecoff Hotel here not too long ago. Judge Webb, however, dismissed charges against the maestro, whose "Shantytown" has sold more than 1,000,000 records, with the admonition, "Be more careful."

Long was breaking his jump here while en route to an appearance at Fort Benning in Columbus, Ga.

Saranac Lake

By Happy Benway

Saranac Lake, July 2.

Benny Fields, the Oklahoma cowboy entertainer, takes time out to put on pantomime acts here that are relished by the ailing gang.

Arthur J. Slattery, chairman of "We The Patients," got surprise visit from Elizabeth Douglas McMahon who will summer here and open a studio teaching algebra, English and Latin. She's a graduate of our downtown actors colony.

Jean (Stuart) West, ex-NVA-ite recently connected with the main office of the Will Rogers hospital staff and who was taken seriously ill, is now taking a daily walk.

Benny Ressler, whose progress here is of special mention, is the president of the Shamus Club which provides milk and cookies to the kiddies at the William Morris Playgrounds Memorial Park. He bought a merry-go-round for the opening of the park yesterday (Mon.).

Thurman Sims, staffer at Proctor's Theatre, Yonkers N. Y., who graduated here in class of 1953, was in for a general checkup and went back to work with a clean bill of health.

Joseph (IATSE) Leonard off to Norfolk, Va., for an extended furlough following fine progress.

Jack Danzi, outdoor showman and husband of Muriel (Eddy Sisters) Danzi (she made the grade here), is now connected with our maintenance dept., with his family camping at Lake Flower for balance of the summer.

Write to those who are ill.

Harry Belafonte in "An Evening With Belafonte" plays Exhibition Forum, Vancouver, July 11, at $4.75 top.

Inside Stuff—Vaudeville

Lou Walters Enterprises, headed by Cass Franklin, has been notified to name an arbitrator to represent them in the proceedings brought by the American Guild of Variety Artists to revoke their club-date producer franchise. Union says the action is a punishment for acting illegally as agents. Union rules forbid nitery owners to act as percenters.

Longrun booking honor in Hawaii goes to Louise Akea Silva who heads the Royal Hawaiian Glee Club. She's been a starring attraction at the weekly Kodak Hula Show for the past 20 years, playing to about 100,000 tourists per year. Shutterbugs take between 4,000 and 5,000 photos plus 20,000 feet of motion film at each of the weekly sessions. It's a free show, sponsored for obvious reasons by a camera shop.

Veteran brother-sister cafe and vaude dance team of Jean & Walter Brown is permanently dissolved now with Jean Brown's entry into the dance studio field. She has bought an interest and become a partner in the Howard Dance Studio in McKeesport, Pa., the Brown's hometown. Miss Brown has been unofficially retired for the last couple of years since her brother went to work in Pittsburgh's Joe Hiller booking agency. He's permanently connected with that office.

The American Guild of Variety Artists last week awarded a plaque to Robert C. Rothafel, managing director of the Roxy Theatre, N.Y., in recognition of "meritorious service in bringing back stage presentations and in the commendation of efforts to encourage and foster live talent in the variety field."

The Minneapolis Star-Tribune newspapers again will sponsor the Aquatennial Queen coronation show, comprising vaudeville, music and pageantry, as one of the events of the Aquatennial, annual summer mardi gras, July 26. On this occasion, however, the show will be staged indoors at the Auditorium instead of in the municipal stadium. Headliner will be tv's Fran Allison. Among other participants will be Minneapolis songwriter Sid Lippman, now a New York resident; the U.S. Marine Corps band, the Keeler (Miss.) Air Force choir, the local Doc Evans Dixieland band, 15 visiting queens and Star and Tribune columnists Cedric Adams and George Grim.

Copacabana, N. Y.

Jules Podell presentation with The Sportsmen (4), Sue Carson, Landre & Verna, Tom Rockford, Marilyn Cooper, Jeff Bolton, Mike Durso & Frank Marti orchs; line routined by Doug Coudy; costumes, Sal Anthony; music & lyrics, Durso, Mel Mitchell, Marvin Kahn; $5.50 minimum.

Summertime is the season for experimentation at the Copa, and this bill results in a payoff with the Sportsmen, Sue Carson and Landre & Verna contributing to a well-rounded bill that should keep most customers happy. Layout, incidentally, is one that leans heavily on variety. It's been a long time since the Copa has had one of the standard ballroom teams in the room, and Landre & Verna present a pretty picture indeed with a graceful line of terps and good overhead lifts. A ballroom team comes off almost as a novelty in these precincts.

In Miss Carson, Jules Podell has booked a personality who can develop ultimately into a draw. She's pert and personable with a clever line of material. Miss Carson has been in New York on a couple of previous occasions, but in this big-time bow, she impresses as a comer. Her bits include a song on the cleverness of men and the various methods of overcoming femme resistance. There's also a spot of impressions that come over excellently. She gets her yocks and she registers strongly in every direction. However, her previous notices indicate that she's been doing this act for some years. Should she emerge as a Copa steady instead of someone merely passing through, an enlargement of her catalog seems mandatory. She has the innate ability to reach higher brackets.

In the Sportsmen, the Copa has a solid singing group which gets top returns in a comparatively long stint. The group hit interest immediately with a recital of personal history and thence into a series of novelties, with only a passing mention of Jack Benny on whose show they attained national eminence. Their novelties cover a wide variety of subjects including spoofs of Texans, Mexicans, and a well written and sung treatise on Las Vegas. The results are high.

Production aides include the song and dance work by Tom Rockford, Marilyn Cooper and Jeff Bolton of course, the Doug Coudy-routined line. The Mike Durso orch, per usual, supplies snappy musical background and Frank Marti Latins it up for the relief. The music and lyrics by Durso, Mel Mitchell and Marvin Kahn are another plus. Jose.

Chicago, June 25.

Jack E. Leonard returns to the Windy City appropriately trimmed of poundage for his opening at the vestpocket Black Orchid. His act knits right into the windup of thrush Pat Morrissey's pipings for a solid show without letdown.

Leonard surprises the house shortly after Miss Morrissey leaves the platform by striding among the tables under a Panama hat and heaving wisecracks at the house. After his belated formal intro on the stage, he continues his string of quips directed at former employers, the band and any identifiable personages in the house. He managed to get a heavy response opening night. The vet comic scores heavy with his burlesques of phony stage mannerisms and trickery.

Platinum-topped Miss Morrissey is the savviest of the Orchid's recent femme pipers. She manages best with swingy numbers like "Lover Man" and "Goody, Goody." A special material bit, "Weak for the Man," fares less well with a crowd that expects the piano-caressing, full-throated song belting that gets Miss Morrissey her best response even if overworked through her 35 minutes at the mike. Credit for singer's success with her jazz numbers is in part due to her 88er Harry Slottag. Backing from the Joe Parnello Trio is also adept. Sally Blair takes over July 15. Leva.

El Rancho, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, June 25.

Sophie Tucker, John Carroll, Kay Brown, Renee Molnar Dancers (9), Dick Rice Orch (12); $2 minimum.

Sophie Tucker socks across a bagful of brandnew material in her return to the Opera House, which rewarded her a noisy ovation on opening night. She gets her biggest yock of the evening with "Calypso Soph," a number in which she wears dazzling gold jersey pants and spectacular headgear, an outfit she describes as "one that cost me $1,500 for a laugh." Other fresh numbers which make this probably the best act she's ever done here, include "I'm Song-Happy Sophie," "Why Go To Havana?" and "Entertaining Papa," latter being a bluish bit about a gentleman named Irving. Miss Tucker's vet accompanist, Ted Shapiro, scores as a comedian when he fills in with three minutes of dialog during one of her costume changes.

John Carroll is on bill, sharing a skit with Kay Brown, who portrays a teenager trying to convert him to rock 'n' roll. Carroll's powerful pipes boom "This Could Be The Night," "Around The World in 80 Days" and assorted songology to serve as a perfect balance for the chirping of Miss Brown. Pair make a delightful team as they sing "September Song" in the square and hep versions, and engage in some funny chatter exchange. Special bow should go to the talented Jeff Lewis, pianist who wrote skit, did arrangements, and conducted orch. Eddie Fox staged the clever number.

The Renee Molnar Dancers (9) add electricity to the festivities, which are skedded for four weeks. Dick Rice orch backs the package with appropriate flair. Duke.

Riverside, Reno

Reno, June 25.

Jimmy Durante with Eddie Jackson, Sonny King, Jackie Barnett, Amazing Monohans (3), Riverside Starlets, Bill Clifford Orch; $2 minimum.

There's a new spark in the Durante show caused by a collection of talent which is used sparingly but spread all the way through. And while Durante gives each performer plenty of opportunity to shine, the Schnoz still focuses most attention with his disgust, anger, and bull-whip commands.

A continuous barrage of songs, interrupted by his chastising of the orchestra, wandering customers and groups of waiters, is interspersed with his standard gags but the reception has never been finer for him.

The addition of Sonny King as a kind of straight man is good and King works in well with the Durante brand of fun. King is originally introed as a single singing a couple of songs. This could be eliminated. The show is already running overlong. But cowering before Durante and getting carried away with his songs is one of show's high points.

Ben Wrigley is another brief but hilarious addition, with his exaggerated walking and dancing. Durante's writer, Jackie Barnett, makes another brief but enjoyable appearance, singing a couple of songs Durante has turned down.

These three, plus the still crowd-pleasing Eddie Jackson, make for Durante's most continuously enjoyable show in a long time.

The Riverside Starlets are worked in with the Durante routines, too. The "All Girl Band" is especially outstanding and as usual the George Moro Line is sensational. In their opener they are almost too much to follow with an exciting rock 'n' roll session.

To add to the fast moving show, the Amazing Monohans couldn't be more aptly named. They even look great in their mistakes. The two youngsters spin and somersault fearlessly on the feet of the juggler. An exciting, entertaining trio.

Bill Clifford's band somehow keeps pace with the unpredictable Durante and falls into the "traps" with gusto. Mark.

The Seville, L. A.

Los Angeles, June 25.

Loray White, Lester Horton Dancers (6), El Escobar Orch (6); two-drink minimum.

Current entry celebrates this Santa Monica Blvd. boite's first anniversary. A lively ensemble of dancing and singing, show fits into the present trend of Latuning.

Tagged "Caribbean Cruise," the Lester Horton Dancers and Loray White are topbilled. Sepia thrush sandwiches her numbers with the six terpsters, setting the travel scene with an opening "Let's Get Away From It All," and scoring with "Black Coffee" and "Love."

Dancers are on for four fast numbers, bizarre costumes adding to the colorful effect. Opener is a rhythmic fire dance which catches the Caribbean mood. Balance are exotic in style, staged by Roland Dupree.

El Escobar orch lends slick backing for entertainment as well as providing the beat for cha cha cha dance crowd. Whit.

Mocambo, Hollywood

When the late hours pack in with pros and the high spenders line the walls and adorn the tables, it's an infallible sign that the reason for it all is someone out of a special mould. This, then, would glove-fit the magical talent of Billy Daniels, who has been around the Strip as often as any idol of the saloonatics. For just short of an hour he regaled the sitters and tipplers with his own unique brand of musical exercise topped off with "That Old Black Magic," which not even he could follow. It was a $10 opening Thursday night and from the storm of applause no one regretted the outlay.

Daniels has achieved a distinctive style that many have tried to copy but could merely imitate. Most of his numbers have the familiar ring and he wisely avoids special materials. Only the "Masculine Touch" has an air of newness and his toying with it makes it an especial delight. It's his selling as much as his singing that has won him such high favor in the clubs. Whether it's a zephyry whisper or belting foray into a high, ear-cupping register, he takes it snugly in stride. The gesture, the smile and sway give his rhythms the added touch of the consummate entertainer. The auditors shouted for and got "Yiddishe Mama," plaintively folksy and turned to a golden brown.

While Daniels is the main draw and deservedly, not to be dismissed as mere accompanist and arranger is Benny Payne, whose duets with the bossman are gems of matched harmony. He has a spot of his own and comes off as well as Daniels, which indeed is not faint praise.

Paul Hebert's crew on the stand gives musicianly backstopping, no sinecure considering the Daniels styling. On deck is Edith Piaf, coming up July 19, giving the Mo a pair of solid attractions for the floating population. Helm.

Viennese Lantern, N. Y.

Rita Dimitri, Yasuko, Ernest Schoen Orch; $3.50 minimum.

Max Loew's Alt Wien hideaway has gone far from its native heath in securing the current bill. Although the customers of this spot are accustomed to international bookings, the current combination of a Greek chanteuse and a Japanese singer is far-reaching even for this audience, However, the entertainment results are in keeping with the high standards of this spot.

Miss Dimitri, with a previous N.Y. cafe history at Le Ruban Bleu, who essayed the role of La Mome Pistache in the touring company of "Can-Can," furnishes an interesting grouping of songs. Some of them need a stronger projection, but generally, she makes out exceedingly well in this intimery. Her tunes embrace those displaying the Franco-Hellenic ancestry which includes a French medley, "Misirlou"" and a batch of numbers from "Can-Can." She makes a good appearance here with well-stacked architecture and gets an appreciative mitting.

The wandering strings headed by Ernest Schoen take some picturesque tours of the Loew hospice. The orch's tunes are international in scope and give a further note of intimacy to this room. Yasuko is further described under New Acts. Jose.

Blinstrub's, Boston

Boston, June 25.

Russell Arms, Conn & Mann, Maxwells (2), Dalton & Bailey (3), Moro Landis Line (10), Michael Gaylord Orch (10), Lou Weir; $2.50 minimum.

Russell Arms exudes personality in all departments — piping, chatter and aud participation bits —heading the final layout of the season at Blinstrub's 1,700-seater. The Era label and "Hit Parade" singer has to take three encores to satisfy Blinstrub denizens. Opening with "I'm Walkin'," he segues to "Evangeline" for nice rounds, goes to a salute to Jimmy Dorsey with "So Rare" and puts over a tour de force "Hit Parade Story of 1957" telling a story using practically all the year's song titles. Clever gimmick nets him a big round.

He takes "Singing The Blues" for a ride, goes into the aud singing and smooching with femmes, and is back onstage with "Dark Moon" ballad to big mitting, Yanking off his bowtie and draping his coat over shoulders, he gets off a howling Elvis Presley "Heartbreak Hotel" impresh and winds up to clinch solid with his hit disk, "Cinco Robles."

Conn & Mann, pair of clever tap terpers crew cutted and dress suited, open the show with a deadpan tap routine to weird music breaking out into wild abandon and then back to the deadpan. They take mike for choruses of "I Could Have a Ball," do some split bit terp carbons of Jose Greco and don tophats for "Tea for Two," clinching with a Chaplin walk tap for nice palm whacking.

Maxwells, formerly with "Ice Capades," transfer their zany nut costume acro act from skates to stage, doing lifts in slow motion style. Crowd pleaser is a one-hand stand on partner's head. Understander balances six colored wicker blocks on his soles while partner climbs up to top taking a straight down and roll over for clincher.

Dalton & Bailey is standout aerial with femme plant in aud who comes on to essay the trapeze in street clothes for big aud laughs. She swings on the trapeze up the ceiling of the room with socko breaks for heavy rounds. Two femme partners open with slick tricks and style while third of trio goes through her dizzying trap routine. Guy.

Lake Club, Spgfld., Ill.

Springfield, Ill., June 25.

Jeannette Star, Ray Comier, The Balladines (2), Miriam Sage Dancers (6), Buddy Kirk Orch (8); $1.20 admission after 8 p.m.

In keeping with Springfield's Capitennial celebration (June 30-July 6) the 125-year-old city's foremost nitery is offering the "Capitennial Follies," a revue with gay '90s overtures.

Acts performing in olio-fashion are woven into a gaslight era theme punctuated with audience participation a la community singing, square dancing and other period effects. Even the waitresses, bartenders and busboys are in costume commemorating the bygone days of Lincoln land.

Topping the bill is songstress-comedienne Jeanette Star, a junior red hot mama who places her weight at 280. Her opener, "I'm Fat, So What?," sets the mood for her jolly renditions. She asks for laughter with visual gimmicks, but seldom in the lyrics of her songs. Mostly, she belts in a straight manner such tunes as "Nobody's Sweetheart Now," "Smack Dab in the Middle" and "Make Me A Pallet on the Floor." The latter is the Ethel Waters blues version, not Blind Boone's ragtime ditty.

Ray Comier, billed as the "Harmo-Maniac," uses his horizontal saxophone to nostalgic effect with "Peg 'O My Heart," "Darktown Strutters' Ball" and other early era melodies. He has no trouble winning encores, one of which at show caught was variations on a strain by W. C. Handy called "South St. Louis Blues."

The Balladines, European dance duo, open the layout with an Americanized can-can in Continental costumes which fit in snugly with the Capitennial capers. The boy-girl team turns to more serious terping in "An American in Paris" sequence featuring some acrobatic tossups that are high for the Lake Club's low ceiling. For a finale, the pair executes a spirited Charleston—spirited in that it has more aerial derring-do than associated with the Roaring '20s version. Wayn.

Statler Hotel, L. A.

Los Angeles, July 2.

Carl Ravazza, Chop Chop & Charlene, Eddy Bergman Orch (11); $2-2.50 cover.

Carl Ravazza's current three-week stint in the Statler Hotel Terrace Room will find favor with both the rounders and out-of-towners frequenting this supper club. At Thursday's (27) opener, singer, who makes his entrance via the rear of the room singing an original "welcome to the show" tune, held tablers in tow throughout his 45 minutes on mike. Repertoire, which utilizes his particular voice quality to best advantage, is comprised of a variety of tunes that range from ballads to specialty songs.

Ravazza's voice, although good, is not the best around; his sense of showmanship, however, is tough to beat. Ravazza scores best by the way he puts over a song; also in knowing just what to say in between numbers, especially to the femmes who seem particularly captivated by the guy.

Chop Chop & Charlene, a Chinese magician and his pretty assistant, continue to prove that "the hand is quicker than the eye." The vet magico also scores with a variety of tricks that though oft seen, continues to mystify. Kafa.

B'ch Club, Wildw'd, N.J.

Wildwood, N.J., June 28.

Ketty Lester, Ronnie Eastman, Danii & Genii Prior, Penny Parker, Barbara Bowman, Bob Lapkin Skyliners (3), Charlie Spivak Orch (17); no cover or minimum.

Ketty Lester, a bright newcomer, draws the opening assignment in this new 3,100-seat palace of pleasure in exotic black and red decor. Well-groomed and strikingly gowned, she projects a varied assortment of seven songs to the most distant corner.

Miss Lester is theatrically exciting and rhythmically uplifting. Although a trifle nervous in the Madison Square Garden-like spaciousness of this after-dark spot, her vitality and throaty projection attracted generous applause from opening night ringsiders.

She intros with "Little Girl From Little Rock," segues into a torchy "Let Me Love You" and "I Love to Love." One of her best numbers follows, a ragtime-styled "Play Mr. Bailey." This number nets plenty of favorable reaction. She changes pace for "I Get a Kick Out of You," followed by "He Flipped" and "Nobody's Chasing Me." Her slick training by manager Dorothy Shay and winning patter indicate a future headliner.

Comic Ronnie Eastman offers clever pantomime routines to a taped accompaniment. Spirited Danii & Genii Prior give zest and freshness to the dance department.

Charlie Spivak orch continues to do its top-rank job of providing the danciest music and is admirably conducted for the showbacking. Math.

Statler-Hilton, Dallas

Dallas, June 28.

Blackburn Twins with Jerry Collins, Bob Cross Orch (12); $2-2.50 cover.

Identical male duo has been around the nitery circuit long enough to know the score. Pair, a big hit two years ago in another room, keeps the customers on this return date and it augurs a neat b.o. for the fortnight.

Opening (27) found the Blackburn Twins taking the tablers in hand easily with a fast opening vocal, "Let's Get the Show On the Road," and they kept the rapport with the trademarked mirror routine. Comic addition, Jerry Collins, abets the 45-minute show with his terp bits and gags. Sesh gets a little overdone on the third-sex theme, until the talents get together for some fancy hoofing and top throwaway lines for a begoff. Trio melds all the way for a good showcasing.

Top assist comes from the Bob Cross band, which also packs the large floor for leather-pushing turns. Trio winds July 10, with Gogi Grant due July 11 for two frames. Bark.

Frolic, Revere B'ch

Revere, Mass., June 27.

Baker Sisters, Tommy Wonder & Margaret, Buddy Thomas Line (12), Cliff Natale Orch (5); $2.50 minimum.

Zany Baker Sisters got off a polished funfest in Mike Della Russo and Jimmy Cella's seaside 400-seater in their swan song as a sister act. At close of this stint (6), Thelma leaves the act and Bobbi breaks in a new partner on six-week USO tour to Korea. The two funmakers get big aud reaction here from walkon and fracture with Jimmy Durante and Helen Traubel impresh. Thelma has a boff Roberta Sherwood carbon and Bobbi scores in a whacky Elvis Presley routine and a nicely etched Pearl Bailey impresh. They nab heavy mitting with a nostalgic vaude turn, "Me and My Shadow." The singing comediennes nabbed two encores and were off way ahead.

Tommy Wonder & Margaret, recently at Blinstrub's in Boston where they broke in a new act, are sock in 10-minutes of fancy terping and a novel bit by Wonder with femme dummy. Buddy Thomas stages a slick capsule revue with production piper Bob Warren and platinum-topped Jean Thomas singing their way through aud to stage with "Meet The People." With line of nine femmes and three lads in dance numbers in groups using both stage and top-stage levels, Warren & Thomas duet for big mitting and Warren takes a spot for big voiced rendering of "Granada." Thomas uses all his people on stage all through with handsome costuming and slick choreography.

Cliff Natale batons the show with a crisp beat. This layout exits Saturday (6). Jerry Vale and new show open Sunday (7). Guy.

most got to get them SRO to be assured of coming out in the black."

The high cost of jazz talent (some club owners admit that they'd like to book the big names but can't afford them) is minimizing job opportunities and may eventually dissipate all the forward steps that jazz has taken in the past few years.

Another aspect of the high cost of jazz, according to Friedman, is that it leaves no room for showcasing new talent. "A promoter has to shell out so much for the marquee attractions," he says, "that there's nothing left in the budget for him to take on and develop newcomers to the jazz field."

No Chance For Newcomers

Unlike other areas of show business, he adds, the jazz stars have no feeling for their own art to help newcomers. In fact, he states, "the top names are virtually locking out the newcomers."

Upbeat of sales in the jazz album market also is a contributing factor to the falloff of jazz in-person presentations. The jazz buffs with hi-fi sets don't have to lay out $4 for a session they can hear better at home. "Only way out of this situation," says Friedman, "is for the jazzsters to do something different onstage than they do for the groove."

Another problem confronting jazz promoters is the lack of professional savvy among the jazzsters. According to Friedman, who produced last summer's Randall's Island (N.Y.) festival and several concerts at New York's Carnegie Hall, "you can't get them to rehearse and you can't keep their friends and hangers-on from swamping the backstage area and disrupting the proceedings. In addition, he says, they've become a bunch of prima donnas who are too particular about how they're billed, whom they follow and whom they play with.

"If they don't straighten out their prices, and bring some efficiency and business-like manner to jazz presentations, they're going to blow the whole bit," is Friedman's sum-up.

Stratford Fest

shoppe, Heimrich's, run by one John Ward, former cop, attached to the Royal Mounties. He sells locusts, Grecian honey, kangaroo-tail soup, Mexican fried worms, truffles and fiddleheads—and ships 3,000 baskets of food to such outposts as Hollywood, London and N.Y. All this from a onetime strictly meat-and-potato Ontario switching centre.

Duke Ellington has dedicated his suite of Shakespeare sketches to the burg and will play it here Sept. 5. Critics Brooks Atkinson and Walter Kerr of N.Y. Times and Herald Tribune have visited Stratford and critic Claudia Cassidy of the Chicago Tribune has asked for opening-night seats.

Festival will have Christopher Plummer, Siobhan McKenna, Douglas Campbell and Frances Hyland, opening July 1, with "Hamlet," "Twelfth Night" follows next day and two plays alternate till mid-September. They're directed respectively by Michael Langham and Tyrone Guthrie—in whose honor Queen St. North has become Guthrie Ave. Stratford citizens have put up $253,000, in straight gifts, to support the festival started by localite Tom Patterson, onetime editor of Civic Administration, a Maclean-Hunter trade mag.

New Acts

THE MODERNAIRES (5)
45 Minutes
Eddys', Kansas City

A long-pending date is being filled by the Modernaires in the plush Eddy Brothers' room for fortnight to July 11. A date here four or five years ago was cancelled by the group with the understanding they would make it up later, and this is it. The booking also serves for the break-in of their new act, which they will use for some time on personal appearance, especially after Aug. 30 when the Bob Crosby show goes off tv. Troupe has been prepping for this interlude for several weeks. They follow with a couple of one-nighters in Salt Lake City and then back to the Crosby show to the finis.

It's easily evident that much has gone into preparation of this turn, and the 45 minutes turn out to be fine musical entertainment. They have some new choreography by Ray Malone, some special songs by Mort Green and Kirby Stone, and a raft of material from their own Fran Scott and Hal Dickinson.

The qualities for which they have become distinguished are all there with Paula Kelly as the femme voice and Dickinson, Scott, Johnny Drake and Dick Cathcart rounding out the group. Their opening session includes a vocal intro, "The Customer's Always Right,", "Around the World" and "Little Darling," before a special bit, "Good for Nothing," showing off Cathcart's trumpet work. Four men take to a barbershop session for "You Tell Me Your Dreams" and "Four Walls," leading into "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot." Miss Kelly rejoins them for a long list headed by a comedy entry, "I Can't Carry a Tune," some instrumental work on saxes with "All Shook Up," and the authentic Dorsey arrangement of "So Rare," a dandy bit of doing. The gal and Dickinson have a lighter moment with a novelty, "Go To Sleep," the whole crew joins in for their Coral version of "Calypso Melody," and then a medley of tunes with which they were associated in the Glenn Miller days is reeled off to great customer satisfaction. Closer is an excerpt from their forthcoming Coral album, "Making Whoopee," and a special finale.

No doubt about the Modernaires being a top vocal group and the audience responds accordingly.

GORMAN SISTERS
Songs
10 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

Sister duo has a cute angle in that one of them is a 6-year-old; the other is a teenager. The moppet, who comes onstage after the first number, has a savvy songselling manner that, at the time, doesn't offend by being too studied. The child has appeal and also adds some good harmony to the vocals.

The older girl handles the main vocalizing part and delivers in the contemporary style. The pipes may not be too finished, but the beat and the feeling are there. She opens with "Great Day," and then is joined in by her sister for a workover of the oldie, "Them Thar Eyes," a rock 'n' roll item, "Eight O'Clock Date," and a calypso, "Hold 'Em Joe." They also get the inevitable plug in for their disk label, the Indie Arrow Records.

OLYMPIADES (3)
Acrobatic
10 Mins.
L'Olympia, Paris

Three gilded; muscled men do a well-manned living statue bit. From various poses they segue into deft hand-to-handing notable for its suppleness and ease.

Grace and dexterity make this oldie act still a probable good filler addition to any type of vaude setups stateside.

PATTI SHERON
Songs
16 Mins.
Fairmount Club, Ottawa

Patti Sheron is a well-stacked blond with clicko pipes and evident attention to arrangements to fit her style. She uses a single guitar backing for her stint at the Fairmount Club, working both in show and lounge, bandleader Gerry Burgess wielding the pick.

She could use better staging and savvy, but she has strong possibilities for nitery, video and disks, impact abetted by her use of jazz-tinted styling in most songs.

YASUKO

10 Mins.
Viennese Lantern, N.Y.

Yasuko, a petite Japanese import, is an interesting addition to the nitery marts. Like many Nipponese, she's of tiny stature and voice to match. However, her tones are colorful and she projects an interesting tune assortment.

Yasuko shows up best in songs having the authentic tone of her native country. While she does well in the synthetics, such as "Many Splendored Thing" there were a couple of items in her catalog that showed a fine basis for development. At present, she's for specialized situations in Continental rooms where an international set obtains. Her natve garb, mincing steps and retiring demeanor are in the tradition of the general conception of the Japannese femmes.

THREE REBERTES
Acro
10 Mins.
Palace, N.Y.

An Italian act which has played in U.S. circuses, the Three Rebertes are a fast and flashy tumbling turn which can fill any spot demanding acrobats. Three youngsters add a comedy touch to their routine, but they don't let the hoke slow up their stunts.

Working on a mat stretched across the stage, trio dish up a series of forward and backward flips and set it all off with some slapstick. For a neat closing bit, they do an eye-catching fall out of a triple handstand. Earn a big mitt for their efforts.

NORMAN & DEAN
Comedy, Songs
36 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

Format of the Norman & Dean comedy-chant stanza is basically the same as the Martin & Lewis layout: Norman chants and straights, Dean clowns. But other than its high quality, the stint has no further similarity to M&L, and the pair stays as far away from aping M&L as possible.

Harvey Norman has clicko pipes, works them to biggest impact and sells all tunes effectively. He's generous with sings and lifts the session throughout. Stanley Dean hangs his slick comedy equally on sight and sound and registers big in both, using brief impression bits plus a gag trumpet insert that exhibits okay music ability. Routine shows evidence of heavy training and intelligent construction.

In niteries for a year, duo shapes up as big for cafes and television, able to handle class slots with slickness and savvy.

LAUREANNE LE MAY Songs
14 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

Laureanne Le May, out of Quebec City, has all the physical necessities for a socko act, including a slick set of pipes, but she needs savvy and routining for niteries. She exhibits potential talent but her stint is weakened through lack of knowing what to do with what she's got, plus use of items that are wrong for her. For example, she works a drunk bit that seems out of place on a petite and pert blond looker.

With strong material and training, Miss Le May could be an okay possibility for the club circuits and, even as she is now, strategic camera and audio work could make her stint click on video.

RIVIERAS (2)
Apache
16 Mins.
Chaudiere, Ottawa

Although the Rivieras bill their stint as "Apache," it adds up more as an acro turn, with a switch. The gimmick is that the femme is the strong partner, tossing and spinning the heavy-set male like a feather throughout. Stanza opens with w.k. Apache overtones a la Lucienne & Ashour, another turn of similar genre, male slapping femme around the stage, but before long the gal gets fed up with the treatment and turns on husky male. Stanza has enough comedy to keep it moving and lively. Muscle-woman is a neat looker but proud of her biceps although she smacks customers who try to measure them (at her invitation).

It's an okay stint for niteries and television.

Palace, N. Y.

George Church & Dorene Kilmer, Nivellis, Rebertes (3), Gorman Sisters (2), Rigoletto Bros. & Co. (3), Roberto & Alicia, Eddie White, The Colleanos (2); Nick Francis House orch; "The Seventh Sin" (Metro), reviewed VARIETY, May 15, '57.

The current Palace bill hits the usual pace for these eight-acters, with a couple of neat turns adding the necessary hypo to an otherwise average layout.

Tops in this show are the Rigoletto Bros. & Co., the "Company" consisting of a well-stacked femme who assists in the magico stunts and contributes one novelty dance routine. The Rigolettos, a pair of vet troupers, in the No. 5 spot, hit with their sleight-of-hand stuff, which they do in a ribbing style, and their parody of an 1890 acro team. It's a rounded, pro act of far better-than-average calibre. Another magico turn, Nivellis, in the deuce, dish up a series of conventional disappearing stunts in a routining that's somewhat too slow.

Another fine turn is supplied by the Three Rebertes, an Italo acro team in the trey spot, and the Gorman Sisters, a vocal duo, which follows. Both are in New Acts. The rest of the bill is comprised of acts which have been around for some time and which have, for the most part, played this house before at one time or another.

George Church & Dorene Kilmer are a pair of smooth hoofers who work nicely in unison and then take off for some solo stepping. An okay warmer-upper. In the No. 6 slot, Roberto & Alicia come up with some Spanish-style stepping. A pair of goodlooking youngsters, they handle the flamenco idiom in fair style and then do a flashy medley of mambo and flamenco numbers.

Eddie White, a veteran comic whose youthful looks belie the few decades that he's been around the vaude circuits, handles the next-to-closing assignment. White is an oldfashioned style of performer, interspersing chatter amidst his songs with a broad style. He does a series of old, but still effective, in-law and dialect jokes and, to indicate how old this routine must be, White still retains a gag about the Roney-Plaza Hotel in Miami Beach.

For the finale, the Colleanos, a pair of tight-ropers and jugglers, perform a series of eye-catching stunts with one of the duo showing exceptional skill in doing some fancy hoop throwing while swaying on the tight wire.

Empire, Glasgow

Glasgow, June 26.

Bernard Delfont presentation, with Harry Secombe, Billie Anthony, Rudy Horn, Dior Dancers (4), Gimma Boys (6), Anne Lancaster, Max Russell, Joe Cornelius, Sherman Fisher Girls (12), George Mitchell Singers (4), Sid Williams Orch.

Harry Secombe, squat, corpulent comedy man with ultra-zany streak allied to standout operatic tenor pipes, is mainspring of this layout. A marquee name via radio and tv in the U.K., Secombe, a combo of Danny Kaye and Lou Costello, tickles the risibilities continuously, and scores in solo spots, sketches and in a final singing slotting, where he deserts comedy for serious vocalizing to solid palming.

He garners yocks along with stooges Joe Cornelius (ex-wrestler) and Max Russell in an item titled "The Top Graders." This is travesty of U.S. name singers' custom of enthusing over British audiences and taking repeated bows in exuberant transatlantic style; title of scene is also takeoff on the Lew & Leslie Grade tenpercentery. It adds up to solid yocks.

A "Male to Measure" sketch, with Secombe as gown-shop proprietor displaying and selling male models, is good for laughs, but needs a stronger tag. Ann Lancaster, as in other sketches, works with experience for zag-yocking. Femme stooge also wins palming in a "My Son" item with Secombe.

Billie Anthony, blonde chirper, keeps the layout bright with lively tunes such as "This Ole House" and (wearing a strawhat) "Carolina." She also gives out with "Mr. Wonderful," current fave of U.K. singers. Gal has lotsa pep but needs to polish up her intertune gabbing.

Rudy Horn, Continental juggler, is standout specialty balancing six breakable cups, six saucers, even a spoon and sugar lump all atop each other while himself balanced precariously on a unicycle. He exits to solid mitting.

Dior Dancers, three males and a brunet, offer thrilling adagio stint, the distaffer being tossed by males with grace and expert timing. Act is brand-new under training of longtime adagio performer Bob Ganjou, and will merit attention on U.S. bookings in November. Gimma Boys, five males and a gal, add to specialty strength of layout with high-speed acro and balancing act.

Sherman Fisher Girls are well-drilled line, and vocal backing is by the George Mitchell group. Showbacking is from augmented lineup under Sid Williams' baton. Gord.

Apollo, N. Y.

"Dr. Jive's" Rock 'n' Roll Show, with Velvours (5), Joan & Joy, Hemlocks (5), Charts (5), Donny Elbert, Bobbettes (5), Jesters (5), Charlie & Ray, Heartbeats (5), Anne Cole, Sensations (4), Roy Brown Combo (6; "Beast of Hollow Mountain" (UA).

Tipoff that a big holiday week is at hand is the deluge of rock 'n' roll shows that hit the in-person circuit. This July 4 holiday is virtually a duplicate of the Easter week spree with "Dr. Jive," whose square handle is Tommy Smalls, holing up at the Harlem flagship and Alan Freed taking over the Paramount Theatre on Times Square today (Wed.).

Worst thing about a rock 'n' roll display is the repetition of beat, style and performance. But that's what attracts the kids, so the Apollo should be in for another of "Dr. Jive's" hefty b.o. stands.

This time out he's traffic-managing a dozen acts with whom the kids are familiar through disk airings on his WWRL show. He limits them all to two numbers apiece and keeps 'em rolling on and off despite occasional squeals from the fans for encores.

For the uninitiated, it's difficult to tell the players without a scorecard. The lyrics are hard to distinguish, the five-man groups move alike and sometimes dress alike. (At least two of the quintets at opening show sported scarlet socks.)

For the record and in order of appearance with tunes listed parenthetically: The Velours, five-man combo, ("Where There Is A Will" and "Can I Come Over Tonight"); Joan & Joy, femme duo, ("My Lover Has Left Me" and "You're My Perscription"); Hemlocks, five-man combo led by juve Bobby Riviera ("Joy of Love" and "Cora Lee"); Charts, five-man combo ("Zoop Zoop" and "Deseree"); Donny Elbert, high-pitched crooner ("Hear My Plea" and "What Can I Do"); Bobettes, five teenage gals ("Look At The Stars" and "Mr. Lee"); Jesters, five boys ("So Strange" and "Love No One But You"); Charlie & Ray, swinging male duo ("Bye Bye Love" and "Sweet Thing"); Heartbeats, five-man combo ("I Won't Be The Fool Anymore" and "Everybody's Somebody's Fool"); Anne Cole, powerhouse thrush ("No Star Is Lost" and "I Wanna Love You So"); Sensations, three guys and a femme ("You Made Me Love You" and "Please Tell Him 'I Love Him' For Me"); Roy Brown's six-piece combo ("Barroom Blues" and "Party Doll").

Hippodrome, London

London, June 25.

Lonnie Donegan, Alma Cogan, (with Stan Foster), Canfield Smith, Estelle Sloan, Vic Hyde, George Holmes, Des O'Connor, Allan Kemble & Christine, Evers & Toni, Reg Cole Orch.

With the Palladium currently housing a new revue, the London Hippodrome becomes the West End's new vaudeville flagship. The initial bill, in for a month, is topped by British performers, but a trio of U. S. acts are prominently featured.

Lonnie Donegan, the headliner, is probably Britain's most popular exponent of skiffle music—but they depart from the traditional washboard instruments. The quartet comprises two guitars, bass and drums, with the star providing most of the racy vocals. The infectious quality of their beat permeates the audience, who spontaneously respond with a hand-clapping accompaniment to the better known items in the repertoire, among them "Cumberland Gap," "Don't You Rock Me Daddy-O," "Puttin' on the Agony" and "Gambling Man." An attempt at a complete style and pace switch, with a new blues number, "I'm Just a Rolling Stone" (penned by one of the quartet), achieves a dramatic quality, but doesn't make the sock impact of the other numbers.

Alma Cogan, who was in last year's Palladium revue and is known via disks and tv, is a vivacious warbler who is also best when handling tunes with a distinctive beat. She's fine when belting out such rhythm numbers as "Mexican Rock," "Banana Boat Song," "Dream Boat," "Love and Marriage," "You, Me and Us," etc. The customers are with her, cheering all the way. Ballads come over with sincerity, but are not her strongest point. However, she deserves full marks for a distinctive gown, which includes half a dozen colorful skirts — which are peeled off one by one.

Canfield Smith's w.k. ventriloquial act, with his dummy Snodgrass, continues to get big laughs. Estelle Sloan, featured in the last Palladium vaude bill, impresses with the charm, style and originality of her solo stepping act, in which her "syncopated clock" number is the highlight. Vic Hyde's one-man band, in which he winds by playing four horns simultaneously, retains its full popularity. His bouncing personality is part of the showmanship inherent in the act.

George Holmes, colored dancing acrobat with a deft style, adds fascination magico bits for good measure and sturdy audience response. Des O'Connor, a rising local comedian-vocalist, has considerable promise. He has an original style, a keen sense of humor and a pleasing delivery. He builds from a slow start to win hefty acclaim. Allan Kemble & Christine open the bill with their combination dancing and unicycling; and Evers & Toni open up after the intermission with an adroit display of contortionism. Reg Cole's orch gives adequate backgrounding. Myro.

Palace, Blackpool

Blackpool, Eng., July 2.

George & Alfred Black presentation, with Hylda Baker & Partner, Tanner Sisters (2), Odette Crystal, Boliana Ivanko Quartet, Martin Granger's Puppets, Impero Bros. (2), Sonny Roy, Janet Gray, George Mitchell Singers (4), Joan Davis Ballerinas (12), Arthur Logan Orch.

Minus gloss of other layouts at this summer show biz center, this George & Alfred Black presentation emerges as good regional fodder, aimed at yocks and tickling the risibilities of thousands of vacationers from the middle-class shelf. Hylda Baker, diminutive north-of-England comedienne, with new stature as result of tv empetus and previous headlining in the town, scores strongly with travesties of dowdy confidential femmes engaged in everyday conversation.

Femme, gabbing in earthy Lancashire accent, wins yocks from the very types she tilts at so richly. She works largely with a tall, deadpan male stooge garbed as a freakish femme who never smiles but, in her own catchphrase, "knows, y'know." Latter is delivered with fruity air of confidence, and is a byword locally.

Tanner Sisters, well-drilled twosome offer compact songalog that embraces calypso and hit tunes, opening with "Banana Boat Song" and following with local-flavored version of "Rock Island Line" and "Around The World." Gals also score with roundup of "You" songs.

Martin Granger, assisted by distaff partner, earns mitting for a "Circus on Strings" item, with his puppets engaging in trapoline and trapeze stints. The Boliana Ivanko Quartet, three males and a femme, present adagio routines against bright decor of a Valentine scena.

Odette Crystal, French thrush lavishly gowned, is featured in Venetian and sleigh-ride scenes, giving out strongly with numbers such as "Funiculi, Funicula," and making attractive picture-frame in a snow bit. Impero Bros., with gal assistant, do novel acro-balance, a head-to-head bit being done while each is upturned on champagne bottles. This Austrian duo rate vaude and tv attention.

Sonny Roy, with poorish make-up, is local comedian who gains good results despite n.s.g. fodder. Janet Gray is attractive soubret. Vocal backing is from the George Mitchell Singers, and Joan Davis offers useful line of chorines as well as devising musical numbers. Arthur Logan orch showbacks. Gord.

Russkys' London Vaudsky

London, June 25.

The formula for variety in Russia cannot be assessed by Western standards. This was clearly demonstrated by the Moscow State Variety Theatre which made its British bow at this suburban 2,600-seater. Acts which would never find their way into a vaude program this side of the Iron Curtain are major attractions on the bill, which is presented by the Educational Performances Society Ltd., an offshoot of the British Soviet Friendship Society.

Individually, each performer is a polished artist, but the balance of the bill suffers from a too strong slant on culture. Although half the acts could fit into a Western variety show, the time allotted to them is cut to the minimum to make room for folk singers, dancers and instrumentalists. Major fault with this show is a complete lack of tempo. Performers stroll onto the stage long after their introductory music has finished, and take as much time as they wish to get settled, which results in long periods of silence.

Artists like Sofia Mey and Igor Divov, with a remarkable puppet act, make up a lot of lost ground with a routine which bubbles over with humor. The puppets are life-like down to their finger joints, and they get by far the best hand of the show with a satire on concert hall singers. Twin brother acrobats Boris & Vladimir Voronin are a couple of topliners in their field, and go through a well controlled routine of balancing and tumbling. Nikolai Stalnoy produces a fair amount of comedy. Bent double and wearing two sets of boots and topcoats, he transforms himself into a couple of fighting urchins. Folk dancing by Larisa Brusitsina and Dimitri Khorkov is subdued. One novel entry comes from a trio of girls accompanying themselves on banduras, large multi-stringed instruments. They sing "Over The Sea To Skye" in English, which results in hefty mitts.

Alfred Van Dam and his orch adequately showcase the bill which is in for two weeks before moving to another nabe location and should attract fairly good b.o. from the curious. Bary.

Skouras to Tour

However, it was postponed when relations between the U.S. and Russia worsened. He said he had no specific plans to discuss motion pictures with the Reds, but added he was interested "in what they are doing technically and otherwise."

Possibility is seen that Skouras will make the trip in some official capacity as far as the American Government is concerned. Asked Monday whether he was going as a "private person," Skouras nodded assent. He said he could not talk with the Soviets re the purchase of American pix "since that's the domain of Eric Johnston." He and Johnston obviously have discussed the swing into Red territory.

However, said Skouras, "I've always said that I am against selling films to the Russians, or any other Communist government, unless they are sold just as they are in the United States. I don't believe in letting them select just what they want."

Russia to date has refused to buy Hollywood product. Moscow wants U.S. films, but on an exchange rather than a cash basis.

Skouras expects to be back home in late October or early November.

50 Silo Scripts

N.Y. Legit Takes to the Outdoors; 'Boat' at Jones Beach, 2 in the Park

By JESSE GROSS

New York is on an al fresco legit kick. Open air theatrical activity has spread from oceanside Jones Beach, L. I., to the city's Central Park and other borough greeneries. It's a movement that currently involves three separate productions, two commercial and the other a cuffo-admission project.

The highlight of the outdoor development is the opening of Central Park to legit production. This picturesque area has long been sought as a theatrical showcase. Last week it was the site of concurrent revivals of the operetta, "Rosalie," and Shakespeare's "Romeo and Juliet."

"Show Boat," at Jones Beach is a repeat of last year's stand at the waterfront Marine Amphitheatre, where summer legit has been a fixture for the past few years. The spread to the parks, however, was initiated last year at the East River Amphitheatre by the group currently responsible for the "Romeo and Juliet" production.

Of the revival trio, "Show Boat" and "Rosalie" are commercial ventures. The former is again being presented by Guy Lombardo, while the latter is the initial legittuner production of Michael P. Grace and Chris F. Anderson in a contemplated summer musical series at the park. "Romeo and Juliet," operating sans admission charge, played Central Park as the opener in a tour of parks in the city's other boroughs. It's being presented by Joseph Papp for the Shakespeare Workshop.

The Jones Beach entry is by far the most elaborate and appealing of the three productions. "Romeo and Juliet" is a satisfactory item and a credit to all concerned with the free-admission venture. "Rosalie," however, is another case entirely. It's an amateurish production.

The low-calibre of the operetta not only drew strong critical pans, but also cued the New York Post to do a special story on the "turkey," which "cast doubt about the whole future of show-business-in-the-park . . ." The production was slated to open June 24, but was rained out that night. However, prior to the downpour, Grace had wired the critice requesting they hold off reviewing the show until Wednesday night (26). It's understood the cast urged Grace to send the wires.

Most of the aislesitters turned up Tuesday (25) night, apparently working on the principle that if the show was open to the public it was therefore open for review also. The production had put in only a week's rehearsal prior to its preem and was obviously not ready to open when it did. However, beyond that, Stella Unger, billed as adaptor of the tuner's book, claims that the presentation does not have the remotest connection with what she wrote.

She says she could have gone to the Dramatists Guild and objected, but didn't because it would have tied up the operation. Henry Youngman, one of the show's headliners, was miffed because he didn't get the billing he claims was promised him. Both he and Miss Unger feel that the lack of ample rehearsal time was the major reason for the poor showing. The pair, however, also praise Grace's talent and enterprise.

As presented, the musical is a shamble. The book is a hodgepodge, the performances are ineffectual and the amplification system opening night was on the blink, causing the sound to vary violently in pitch. The choreography by Geoffrey Holder, who also dances in the production, is for the most part unrelated to the story, although it's okay on its own. The musical is scheduled to end a two-week run next Sunday (7). A night club show is set to follow (see separate story in Vaudeville section).

"Show Boat" and "Romeo and Juliet" both opened last Thursday (27) night. Reviewers attending the Jones Beach production were driven in hired limousines to Lombardo's East Point House eatery in Freeport, L. I., for dinner prior to the performance, and then back to the city after the show.

Coincidentally, "Show Boat" and "Rosalie" both preemed on Broadway during the 1927-28 season, the former, though, is the sturdier of the two. The book has more substance an dthe score more vitality as evidenced by such numbers as "Only Make Believe," "Ole Man River," "Can't Help Lovin' Dat Man," "Life Upon the Wicked Stage," "You Are Love" and "Bill."

The Jerome Kern, Oscar Hammerstein 2d-Edna Ferber tuner is well performed, both musically and dramatically. The physical production is colorful and imaginative, with the actual docking of the Cotton Blossom the crowning touch. It's a class offering.

Heading the cast are Andy Devine as Captain Andy, Helena Bliss as Julie, David Atkinson as Gaylord Ravenal, Gloria Hamilton as Magnolia, Helen Raymond as Parthy Ann, William C. Smith as Joe, Lou Wills Jr., as Frank, and Marie Foster, as Ellie. Except for Devine and Wills, who scores on the terping, they are all repeating roles they had in the production

Off-B'way Show

The Country Wife

Stephen Porter revival of two-act farce-comedy by William Wycherley. Features Frances Sternhagen, Arthur Malet, William Ball, Olive Dunbar, Leon Janney. Staged and designed by Porter; costumes, Althea Douglas. At Renata Theatre, N. Y., June 26, '57; $2.90 top.

Cast: William Ball, John Dodson, William Bogert, Stanley Jay, Olive Dunbar, Betty Rollin, James Goldsmith, Colgate Salsbury, Leon Janney, Arthur Malet, Joan Kugell, Frances Sternhagen, Joyce Ebert, Helga von Eiken, Joan Feldman.

A detached flippancy is the cream of the jest in "The Country Wife," but it's lacking in Stephen Porter's revival of William Wycherley's Restoration romp. To project the attitudes of the era, as written in this salty lark, the characters must be achieved with debonair ennui, and scandalous lines uttered with tranquil innocence.

The company at the Renata Theatre has a prosaic-ness that deprives much of "Wife" of its rollicking humor. Wycherley was reflecting, and commenting upon, contemporary manners and mores, particularly as lived by urban idlers, and a bawdy time they evidently had of it. But a suggestive line spoken with foreknowledge loses its savor, and apparent "actor awareness" can reduce a zesty double entendre to the stature of a mere joke.

Fortunately, as the bumpkin wife who is alertly over-eager to discover 17th century London's gaming ways, Frances Sternhagen has the needed airiness. She shows a lively interest in adventure as represented by men, and the scene in which she learns to write a love-letter, gamboling on the floor like a kitten, is the richest moment in the revival.

As her crabbedly jealous, middleaged husband, Mr. Pinchwife, Arthur Malet has more difficulty in finding the drollery, although the crusty character is drawn with compact energy. Joyce Ebert, as the country wife's more sophisticated yet more sedate sister, speaks and plays with befitting charm, and as the aptly named Mr. Sparkish, Leon Janney cavorts impishly about with blithe ignorance of female infidelity.

The revival has been produced, directed and designed by Stephen Porter. In his unit sets, he has set a capital tone for the production, his economical grey-hued scenery boasting a simple elegance, and Althea Douglas' costuming vividly complements the settings. Had Porter been able to induce a similar unaffected style in his company, Wycherley's caustic farce might brag more consistent sparkle.

Damn Yankees
(COLISEUM, LONDON)

London, June 26.

Elizabeth Seal has taken over the femme lead, Lola, in the London production of "Damn Yankees," succeeding Belita, who had to quit on doctors orders after only twelve-and-a-half weeks of the show's run. For Miss Seal it's the biggest break to date. She steps into the role with a seeming world of confidence, and adds new sparkle to the production.

Miss Seal, an unknown chorus dancer until she made a spectacular personal hit as the featured comedienne-hoofer, Gladys, in the London edition of "Pajama Game," recently clicked in a change-of-pace assignment, the dramatic role of the burlesque stripper in the Tennessee Williams' "Camino Real."

As the femme-fatale Lola, she not only impresses anew as a dancer, but handles the songs as if they were written for her. She's poised, peppy and winning, bolstering the baseball musical in places where Belita struck out because of her inadequacy as a singer. Numbers like "Whatever Lola Wants" and "A Little Brains, a Little Talent" are now audience-stampeders. Also a standout is "Who's Got the Pain," her song-and-dance number with Bob Stevenson.

Miss Seal's vitality has apparently infected the rest of the cast, and "Damn Yankees" now zings along entertainly. It could be the hypo to turn a moderate show into a hit.

Inside Stuff—Legit

Guy Lombardo, whose floating production of "Show Boat" opened Thursday night (27) for its second summer run at Jones Beach (N.Y.) Marine Theatre, was apparently determined to avoid the mixup over working press facilities that marked his initial sponsorship of the show last year. He served dinner for the reviewers this time at his own restaurant, East Point House, Freeport, L. I. Another switch was to have the press reps picked up at Sardi'e restaurant, N.Y. instead of at the Roosevelt Hotel, N.Y., as last year.

The kitch last summer was that when the reviewers arrived at Jones Beach in hired limousines, the municipally-owned restaurant, run on a concession basis by the Brass Rail management, was mobbed by bigwigs invited by Parks Commissioner Robert Moses. The food looked appetizing, but the newspaper men couldn't get served until they pulled rank on a couple of employees, who set up card tables and chairs.

The price of souvenir booklets for Broadway shows is now generally 75c. instead of 50c.. The 50% increase apparently reflects several factors, including higher publishing and distributing costs, a decreasing percentage buyers among theatregoers and the feeling among the souvenir booklet agents that there is almost as much sale at 75c as at 50c. The souvenir market is nothing like as profitable as it was a decade or more ago, but despite the recent price increase, business is fairly good.

Less Than Kind

London, June 28.

London Arts Theatre Committee presentation of three-act drama by Derek Monsey. Stars Diane Cilento, Catherine Lacey. Setting, John Piper; staging, Yvonne Mitchell. At Arts Theatre Club, London, June 27, '57; $1.75 top.

Mia	Diane Cilento
Lena	Catherine Lacey
Harold	Andre Morell
Michael	Jeremy Burnham
Giovanni	Andrew Ray
Melinda	Jane Jordan Rogers
Tommi	Joe Gibbons

This first play by dramatic critic Derek Monsey, directed by his wife Yvonne Mitchell, proves a poor prop for the talent of at least three members of the cast, Catherine Lacey, Diane Cilento and Andre Morell. Opening in a heatwave didn't improve audience reaction, which was unresponsive to the impressionistic study of adolescent love problems in modern Venice.

Over-possessive filial ties, resulting in neurotic offspring, is the keynote of the story which is painstakingly unravelled, rounded off with a protracted climax. The mother languishes in a decaying Venetian palace after her husband's death, smothering her two children with devotion. She tries to keep her daughter from returning to her American husband, but the girl is more swayed by the appeal of her young brother, who is also emotionally involved. Their unusually close ties would perhaps have seemed more plausible and less wholesome had they been twins.

Morell strolls in and out as an English lord of evil reputation, influencing the youth to the point of suicide and out-Cowarding Coward in his suave moralizing. Miss Cilento, in her first appearance since the breakdown that robbed her of the lead in the musical "Zuleika," plays a mixed-up girl who's uncertain whether to go back to a cheating husband or marry the nobleman's son. The role is a trial for any actress, and she comes through creditably.

Miss Lacey, always an artist, does excellent work as the vacillating mother. Andrew Ray is not sufficiently separated from his juvenile roles to give life and realism to the character of the son. The girl he has set his heart on is charmingly played by Jane Jordan Rogers, who radiates sympathetic understanding.

The Making of Moo

London, June 26.

English Stage Company presentation of three-act drama by Nigel Dennis. Staged by Tony Richardson. At Royal Court Theatre, London, June 25, '57; $1.75 top.

Frederick Compton	George Devine
Elizabeth Compton	Joan Plowright
Donald Blake	John Osborne
William	Martin Miller
Sergeant	Nicholas Brady
Fairbrother	John Moffatt
Willis	Stephen Jartnell
Mr. Fosdick	Robert Stephens
Walter	John Wood
Natives	Anthony Creighton, Robert Stephens
Constable	James Villiers

Continuing its policy of presenting mostly new and unorthodox plays, the English Stage Co.'s latest recruit to its repertoire is a satire on religious cults by Nigel Dennis. It's somewhat better than his previous opus, "Cards of Identity," which preemed here last year.

"The Making of Moo," which debunks the craze for new forms of fanatical worship, is written and put over in serio-comic style. As a novelty, it arouses interest, but could not be classed as good theatre, and is unlikely to hazard a separate solo production.

In an unspecified British colony, a constructional engineer who has remained on with his wife and secretary after a dam-building job is done, have a lavish temple in which they perform the mumbo jumbo of devilish pagan rites to a new god Moo. Their practices are even more bloodthirsty than the heathens. They slaughter visitors and use their blood for ceremonial services.

George Devine makes almost believable the gradual change from a solid working man to a high priest of ruthless dedication, ending as a doddering nonentity in a wheelchair. Joan Plowright, as his wife, has difficulty in keeping the mischievous glint from her eyes, and snatches all the humor that is going.

John Osborne contributes a polished performance as the musically inclined secretary and Martin Miller is a ripe, unconvinced old native. The story is made more macabre by the eerie background music. Tony Richardson has handled the tricky staging job.

La Casa de Los Siete Balcones
(House of Seven Balconies)

Buenos Aires, June 13.

Argentine Comedy Co. presentation of three-act drama by Alejandro Casona. Stars Luisa Vehil. Staged by Alejandro Casona; assistant, Juan Vehil; scenery, Gori Munoz; costumes, Vanina de War. At Liceo Theatre, Buenos Aires, April 17, '57; at 86c. top.

Amanda	Paquita Vehil
Don German	Francisco Lopez Silva
Rosina	Alicia Bellan
Uriel	Frank Nelson
Genevieve	Luisa Vehil
Ramon	Mario Lozano
Anton	Cayetano Biondo
Mother	Blanca Tapia
Grandfather	Pepe Castro
Alicia	Aurora Delmar

In these days of sophisticated problem plays, this poetic phantasy of Casona's seems anachronic, a period piece with its ghosts, sentimentality and dramatic suicide climax.

The production is notable mainly for beautiful performances by Luisa Vehil as a somewhat daffy spinster, Frank Nelson as her mute nephew and Paquita Vehil as an ambitious peasant girl who wants to be mistress of the House of Seven Balconies in nothern Spain.

The story concerns the decay of a noble family, whose last survivors are the mute boy and his simple aunt, who can communicate with each other without words. They live in mansion with the boy's dissipated, cruel peasant father, his evil mistress-housekeeper.

The feeble-minded aunt is cunning enough to guard the secret of a family treasure's hiding-place, the others live to find it and be rid of her. The lad lives in dreams with the spirits of his dead mother, grandfather and sister. The plotters finally trick the old lady into revealing her secret, but when they have her sent away to an asylum the youth commits suicide.

Notwithstanding fine acting, the story drags, despite good second-act suspense. Some phases of the production are creaky. For instance, the ghosts are solidly corporeal, and the sound effects are faulty. Although the play has already run beyond 75 performances, it is not a money-maker because of a big cast and the fact that it has only once or twice done capacity business.

N.Y. Legit's 'Playbill' Mag-Like Format

Advertisers After Sept. 30 Must Take Full Run, Not Pick Their Shows

The Playbill, official program for New York theatres, gets a new format and new policy, effective Sept. 30. The new management, which took over the publication about six months ago, aims to slant it more on the lines of a weekly feature magazine than formerly.

Playbill will have the same page size as before, but booklet will have the same number of pages for all shows during any given week, to a maximum of 68 and minimum of about 48 or so, depending on the ads. The management already has new binding machinery on order and will buy new printing equipment at a total cost of around $100,000.

An important policy change: advertisers will no longer be allowed to select certain shows for space, but will be required to take the entire week's run of the Playbill. The total annual circulation of the publication is said to be over 10,000,000, including a minimum of 215,000 weekly during the 39 weeks of October-through-June, and 130,000 a week during the July, August-September period.

Rates will be $1,200 per page, $600 for half-page and $335 quarter-page during the regular season and, respectively, $650, $325 and 185 during the summer. Bulk discounts will be up to 30% for 52 pages and frequency discounts will be up to 25% for 52 weeks.

Although the Playbill will continue to be stitched into a single booklet, there will be two sections. Excluding the four cover pages, the outside 32 pages (16

Shuberts Ask to Shift Goldman's Suit to N.Y. Action Seeks $3,125,000

Philadelphia, July 2.

The Shuberts moved last week in U.S. District Court here to have indie theatre owner William Goldman's $3,125,000 conspiracy suit against them transferred to New York. Harold E. Konn, counsel for the plaintiff, fought the bid to shift the case to Manhattan, and charged that dummy corporations operate the four local Shubert houses, the Locust, Forrest, Walnut and Shubert.

The attorney also accused defendents of ticket scalping, as part of their alleged local monopoly. They control the Penn Ticket Agency, he claimed, and have an "exclusive arrangement" with the Conway Agency. "Jacking up prices on good shows is souring the public on legitimate theatre," Konn declared.

Goldman's legit house, the Erlanger, can't get shows because the Shuberts control booking, production, tickets and theatres, Konn contended during the two-and-a-half hour argument on preliminary motions.

C. Russell Phillips, representing the defendant, Jacob J. Shubert, told the court that the lawsuit should be heard in New York, "where the Shuberts and their records are." The lawyer sought to remove the scalping phase of the suit, and to apply a statute of limitations on the alleged damages and keep the "sideshow" from opening here at all.

Judge William C. Kraft Jr., has taken the matter under advisement.

To Renovate N.Y.'s Alvin For Mid-Oct. Reopening

With "No Time for Sergeants" due to vacate the house Aug. 17, the Alvin Theatre, N. Y., will be renovated, with all new seats, plus repainting, recarpeting and perhaps a chemical air-conditioning system to replace the present machine using ice and blower-fans.

It's figured the work should be completed by about mid-October, in time to house one of the new season's productions. However, no booking is set thus far. Herman Bernstein is general manager of the theatre, which is owned by CBS.

'Hole' $35,104 in the Red On $85,000 Investment

"Hole in the Head" still had $35,104 to recoup as of June 1. For the ensuing two weeks the Arnold Schulman comedy-drama had an operating profit, but business slipped for the last fortnight. The Producers Theatre presentation is currently in its 19th week at the Plymouth Theatre, N.Y.

According to a June 1 audit, the Paul Douglas starrer lost $663 on a $19,537 gross for the final week in May. Other highlights of the accounting follow:

Original investment, $85,000.
Returned back, to date, $53,124.
Repaid to the backers, $20,000.
Undistributable assets, $26,000.
Balance available, $3,896.

Auto Union May Tour Legit Show

The United Automobile Workers may move into legit. The union, one of the largest in the country, is considering sponsoring a tour of "A Land Beyond the River," which ended a lengthy run at the Greenwich Mews Playhouse, N.Y., last Sunday (30). UAW reps have been conferring on the matter and it's understood they plan to allot $5,000 weekly to the project.

The union is reportedly looking for a theatre in Detroit for the initial booking of the Loften Mitchell play. The show would probably be sent to Chicago next and then tour the union's schools and camps. If the venture materializes, it's figured it'll get underway around mid-July. The cast of the off-Broadway production have been informed of the contemplated tour.

If the UAW project doesn't work out, it's possible that the show will be revived for a brief run at the Colonial Park Amphitheatre, N.Y., in August. The prospective entry of the Auto Workers into the legit field recalls another union venture into the theatre. That was the Ladies Garment Workers' production of its summer-camp revue, "Pins and Needles," first for the entertainment of union members and subsequently in 1937-38 for a long run on Broadway.

ALEC COPPEL PLAY SET FOR BROADWAY

"The Joshua Tree," a thriller by British novelist-playwright-scenarist Alec Coppel, will be produced on Broadway this fall by the Playwrights Co. The meller, with a Beverly Hills locale, will probably be staged by Reginald Denham. Three stars will be required, but have not been cast. Rehearsals are tentatively scheduled to start late in August.

Although Coppel has never been represented on Broadway, his "I Killed the Count" was a London success in 1937-38 and he has authored numerous novels, plays and screen treatments, the latter including "The Captain's Paradise."

Name New Theatre for Ex-Stude Julie Harris

Steamboat Springs, Col., July 2.

The Julie Harris Theatre, named for the Broadway star who was a student here some years ago, will open July 26 with a tryout of "A Bridge to the Collines Brules," by Charlotte Perry, based on the novel, "Wedding Dance," by Anne de Tourville. The playhouse is a new addition to the Perry-Mansfield School of the Theatre operated here by Miss Perry and Portia Mansfield.

Also due for presentation during the four-week season are premieres of two ballets, "Chrysalis," choreographed by Helen Tamiris to Music by Stavinsky, Aug. 2-3, and "Three Trees," choreographed by Jacqueline Cecil to music by Ravel, Copeland and Debussy, Aug. 10. Daniel Nagrin, husband of Miss Tamaris, will be guest lead in "Chrisalis."

Strictly Sustaining

The N. Y. Stock Exchange will not accept paid commercial announcements on its ticker tape. It has refused such a bid from the management of "Auntie Mame." According to Charles Klem, vice-president, "The Exchange has always limited the use of the stock ticker to reports of Exchange transactions, plus occasional civic and charitable notices and to announcements by the Exchange itself."

Arthur Cantor, pressagent for "Mame," as well as for "Long Day's Journey Into Night" and "Most Happy Fella," made the suggestion for purchase of legit-show plugs on the ticker tape in a letter to Keith Funston, Exchange president.

'Cat' Back as N.Y. Summer Twofer

"Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," currently playing a tour-ending engagement in Chicago, will probably be brought back to Broadway for a repeat stand on two-for-ones. The Tennessee Williams drama, with Marjorie Steele as star, would go into the Coronet or Morosco Theatre, starting July 15 or 22.

With the present cast and revised operating setup, it's figured that the Playwrights Co. production could break even at a weekly gross of about $12,000-$13,000. The idea is that with the anticipated business pickup in August, largely due to heavy convention bookings in New York, the Pulitzer and Critics Circle prize-winner of 1954-55 would be able to make additional profit after recouping the cost of transfer back to town and such other expenses as the necessary advertising splurge.

'Gang Way' Budget 300G; Authors Get 10% of Net; Stevens Repaid $13,075

"Gang Way," musical being produced by Robert E. Griffith & Harold S. Prince, is capitalized at $300,000, with no provision for overcall. The show, with book by Arthur Laurents, music by Leonard Bernstein and lyrics by Bernstein and Steve Sondheim, is currently in rehearsal under the direction of Jerome Robbins, and after a tryout tour is scheduled to open Dec. 26 at the Winter Garden Theatre, New York.

In addition to their weekly author royalties, Laurents, Bernstein and Sondheim will get 10% of the profits, after which the management and backers will split the remainder on a 50-50 basis. Sharing in the management end will be Roger L. Stevens, who previously held an option on the show. Stevens is also being reimbursed by the production for $13,075 paid by him as preliminary expense, including $5,500 advance to the authors and $5,000 fee to the designer.

The estimated production budget for the show includes $65,000 for scenery, $10,000 for properties, $55,000 for costumes, $20,000 for lighting, $11,000 advance for direction and choreography, $15,000 preliminary advertising, $20,000 for orchestrations, $19,000 rehearsal expense, $32,500 miscellaneous expense (including authors advances, legal fees, hauling, setting up, general and company manager salaries, office expense, payroll taxes, insurance, hospitalization, etc.), $20,000 for union bonds and $32,500 reserve.

"Gang Way" (the title is due to be changed) is the first Griffith and Prince production in which Frederick Brisson has not been partnered, and the first not staged and co-authored by George Abbott.

Hilltop Moving Back

Baltimore, July 2.

The Hilltop Theatre, currently in its 20th strawhat season, will move back next summer to its old location at nearby Lutherville, Md. However, it will occupy new quarters there.

The Don Swann Jr. strawhat was situated there before moving to its present spot at Emerson Farms, in Brooklandville, Md., northwest of here.

Court OK's McConnell Ban on Block Ticket Sales to Unlicensed Buyers

The purchase of New York legit tickets for resale or redistribution can be made only by licensed brokers. That's the crux of three recent N.Y. Supreme Court decisions in cases contesting the validity of a ruling by N.Y. City License Commissioner Bernard J O'Connell forbidding theatres from selling more than nine tickets to an unlicensed buyer.

The latest of the decisions was made last week by Justice Arthur Markewich in relation to an action brought against the License Dept. by Harry P. Chetkin, who operates the brokerage concession in the Bamberger department store in Newark, N.J. The jurist had previously ruled that theatre tour operations, also hit by the Commissioner's ban, were eligible for licensing provided separate offices were set up to handle the ticket phase of the operation.

The other ruling upholding the Commissioner's regulation was made by Justice Francis X. Conlon in an action brought by Sylvia Siegler, who operates Ticket Clubs of New Jersey, Inc., in Jersey city. Appeals are expected in some of these cases, but as it stands now, the Commissioner's rule holds.

Under the regulation, anyone purchasing 10 or more tickets to a Broadway show has to answer a questionaire stipulating the reason for the bulk buy. The theatres are also prohibited from selling any tickets to an unlicensed customer believed to be making the purchase for resale purposes.

The ruling automatically curtails out-of-town brokers and theatre party agents from acquiring tickets to N.Y. shows, since they're outside the jurisdiction of the N.Y. License Dept. However, there's a possibility that a plan may be worked out whereby the hinterland operations will be able to open offices in N.Y. and therefore obtain licenses.

Equity Sets Rep Rules; $100 Minimum Wage

A standard contract covering dramatic repertory groups has been set up by Actors Equity. It represents months of on-and-off discussion. Minimums have been set at $75 weekly for rehearsal and $100 weekly from the start of performances.

The pact is designed to cover operations "employing a permanent company of at least 12 players who shall be guaranteed at least six consecutive weeks at contractual salary. The object of such companies shall be the production of two or more plays which shall be alternately scheduled."

The union's repertory committee is now working on conditions for a contract to cover musical repertory groups.

'Journey' Nears $150,000 Profit

"Long Day's Journey Into Night" has thus far earned a gross profit of about $150,000, of which the backers' share represents almost 100% profit on their $80,000 investment. That's based on a June 1 audit, plus estimated subsequent earnings.

After a 34-week Broadway run, the posthumous Eugene O'Neil prize-winner shuttered last Saturday night (29) in order to play a five-day engagement beginning last night (Tues.) at the Paris Festival. Then it lays off until Aug. 19, when it resumes at the Helen Hayes Theatre, N. Y., with Fredric March and Florence Eldridge continuing as costars.

In recent months the Jose Quintero-Theodore Mann-Leigh Connell production has been earning around $6,000 a week at near-capacity attendance. The drama's continued popularity has been a surprise, as it had been figured a distinguished work but probably too heavy for general appeal.

Highlights of the June first accounting include the following:

Original investment (repaid), $80,000.

Total gross profit to date, $125,227.

Distributed profit, $79,000, split evenly between management and backers.

CARROLL BAKER BARN DATE HARRIED BY WB

Chicago, July 2.

Carroll Baker's differences with her film studio, Warner Bros., have flared up anew and now involve the unwitting Drury Lane Summer Theatre, where the actress is scheduled to open tonight (Tues.) in "Arms and the Man."

A telegram from WB's legal offices a few days ago warned the local strawhat management not to let Miss Baker appear in the play and ordered the star of "Baby Doll" to report to her studio at once. Film company's wire stated it would suffer "irreparable damages" if she appeared at Drury Lane.

Both the actress and the barn management have elected to ignore the wire, and "Arms" will open tonight as planned. Miss Baker says that her attorney, Alfred Rice, has advised her that she no longer is under contract to WB.

Jim Monos, operator of Drury Lane, said he had entered into contract with Miss Baker's agent, Music Corp. of America, for her services "in good faith and with no foreknowledge of her differences with the studio. The actress is also committed to appear in the play next week at the Strand Theatre, Long Branch, N.J.

Miss Baker's falling out with WB began several months ago, when she rejected the script for a film biog of Diana Barrymore. She has stated here that she does not desire to make any more "adults only" pix.

Julie Harris-Larry Harvey In 'The Country Wife' Due at Adelphi Nov. 15

"The Country Wife," William Wycherley's Restoration comedy, will be revived on Broadway this fall with Julie Harris and Laurence Harvey costarred. The show will be presented by Malcolm Wells & Daniel Blum, in partnership with the Playwrights Co., opening Nov. 15 at the Adelphi, N. Y.

George Devine, who staged a successful revival of the play by the English Stage Co. last winter at the Royal Court Theatre, London, with Harvey and Diana Churchill as stars, will repeat the assignment for the Broadway edition. Incidentally, an off-Broadway presentation of "Wife" opened last Wednesday (26) at the Renato Theatre, Greenwch Village, N. Y. Ruth Gordon starred in click revivals on Broadway in the summer of 1955 and at the Old Vic, London, in the fall of 1936.

Wells, formerly a managerial assistant with the Playwrights Co., recently resigned to go on his own. Blum is the editor of Theatre World and other show biz books.

Bard Season Offering Ticket Sale Reduction

Toledo, July 2.

Shakespeare under-the-stars has come up with an unusual gimmick to promote ticket sales for its second summer season at the Toledo Zoo Amphitheatres. The operation, which got underway last Wednesday (26), is going after outside organizations to sell discount ticket coupons on a money-making basis.

The deal involves the sale of coupon books, with the payoff dependent on the number sold. The pitch being made by the Shakespeare unit covers a minimum purchase of 50 of the coupon books for $375. That's the price to the organizations, which, in turn, can peddle them for their full sale value of $500.

In other words, the organizations put up $375 for a potential $125 profit. The coupon books can be sold for $10 each and are exchangeable for $12 worth of tickets at the Zoo boxoffice.

Carnival King

Boston, June 21.

Group 20 Players production of drama in three acts (10 scenes and epilogue) by Henry Treece. Stars Fritz Weaver, Sylvia Short; features Thayer David. Peter Donat, Thomas Hill; staged by Elliot Silverstein; production design, William D. Roberts; lighting, Gregg Harney. At Theatre on the Green, Wellesley (Mass.) College, June 20, '57; $3 top.

Earl of Lancaster	Thayer David
Lord Mortimer	Sorrell Booke
Roger Mortimer	Robert Baines
Isabella	Sylvia Short
Edmund	Michael Lewis
Edward II	Fritz Weaver
Piers Gaveston	Peter Donat
Nurse	Sarah Braveman
Jack	John Wynne-Evans
Dick	Robert Brustein
Sailor	Eugene Picciano
Hugh Despenser	Thomas Hill
Monk	Reuben Singer
Gwyndd	Evelyn Ward
Fitzroy	Laurence Bourassa
Jailer	Reuben Singer
Gurney	Ronald Coradian
Maltravers	Alan Becker
Edward III	Eugene Picciano

Others: Ted Graham, Manning Leiter, Fionan O'Halloran, Jerry Rothstein, Laurence Bourassa, Eve Hebbard, Jenifer Lee, Herbert Miller.

This historical drama, first produced in 1954 by John Harrison at the Nottingham (England) Playhouse, has been imported for its American preem as the season opener for Group 20 in its 1,000-seat alfresco theatre on the Wellesley College campus. It plays through next Saturday (29).

It's a big, lusty, colorful spectacle on a four-level set, bluntly portraying sex, murder, treachery, intrigue with homo overtones.

It is admirably staged by Elliott Silverstein, and it sustains interest up to the middle of the third act, where it mushrooms in all directions.

The show is a curious mixture of pageant, bitter comment, poetic lines and bedroom farce. The abnormal relationship of Edward II and Piers Gaveston is the peg on which the opposing Lords Ordainers, seeking a change in government, hang the king's fate.

There is no sympathy for any of the characters in this play, least of all for Edward. Fritz Weaver gives a nicely styled performance in the marathon role of the monarch, with its long speeches, mad shoutings, tender monologs, sword fights and drinking bouts. Sylvia Short, as Queen Isabella, stands out as the unloved, power-mad wife.

Thomas Hill registers as the King's chief of staff in the wars and makes the most of a scene in which he is lured to death by a tavern girl well played by Evelyn Ward, brunette looker. Peter Donat is good in his short appearance as the foppish Gaveston. Robert Baines is properly venemous as the treacherous Roger Mortimer.

Thayer David is properly forceful as Lancaster. Michael Lewis does a nice job of low keyed acting as the placid Kent. John Wynne-Evans and Robert Brustein score as soldiers acting as a Greek chorus to offstage events.

On the basis of this tryout opening "Carnival King" is overly long. As a strawhat offering it rates okay, and although it involves a heavy production it could have some interest in off-Broadway houses. Guy.

To Fight Mass. Censorship

Lining up against legislation to establish book censorship in Massachusetts are the Civil Liberties groups, the Massachusetts Council of Church and legislators battling for preservation of free speech.

They are directing their fire against a measure reported favorably by the House Committee on Ways and Means to establish a seven-member citizens' advisory committee to recommend action by the attorney-general to prevent sale or publication of books and other literature they determine to be obscene or otherwise objectionable.

Ben Hogan's Award

Ben Hogan was termed "one of the greatest golfers of all time" in a decision by Judge Peter F Hagan in Philadelphia's Common Pleas Court awarding the golf pro $5,000 in compensatory damages from New York publisher A. S. Barnes Co.

The suit was filed by Hogan in 1955 charging that author Dave Camerer had used his name and pictures of him practicing without permission in a Barnes book, "Golf With the Masters." Camerer in 1954 had offered Hogan $100 for permission to use text and photos and the golfer wrote back: "Are you kidding?"

Tome was subsequently published a few months later and ended up in the rough. Judge Hagan said the Hogan name had "great commercial value" and awarded cash damages because the publishing house had "competed with him unfairly."

Lonsdale, Beerbohm Books

Frances Donaldson, daughter of British playwright Frederick Lonsdale, who shortly before his death suggested they both collaborate on his life story, has finally done a book on her father, "Freddy," which Lippincott will publish in August. Mrs. Donaldson was on the London stage for a short time, but is married and has three children.

Sir Max Beerbohm, distinguished English author, was also an accomplished caricaturist and some vintage drawings will be published by Lippincott in October under the title, "Max's Nineties." The 45 drawings cover the 1893-99 span. Osbert Lancaster did an introduction and annotated the volume.

Lobsenz Joins Hillman

Norman M. Lobsenz appointed assistant to the publisher, in charge of all editorial operations, for Hillman Periodicals Inc., as announced by Alex L. Hillman, president.

Lobsenz was formerly editorial director of Pocket Magazines.

Nathan Leopold's Autobiog

Doubleday has signed the Nathan Leopold autobiog and intends releasing it in 1958. Account, "Life Plus 99 Years," the slayer of Bobby Frank from the time of crime through prison years, down to the present.

Current bestseller, Meyer Levin's "Compulsion," dwells on the Loeb & Leopold case.

Wibberley's Plays

While Leonard Wibberley's "Take Me To Your President" is put to cover by G. P. Putnam's Sons July 12, his last fantasy, "McGillicuddy McGotham," has been acquired by producer Frederick Brisson, who is in process of deciding whether it should be made into a musical or straight comedy.

Also, his "The Mouse That Roared" is being produced in England by Walter Shenson.

Time's Book Publication

Time mag is turning book publisher in the fall with "300 Years of American Painting," which will have 250 color reproductions.

Alex Elliot is writing the text for the tome. Random House will do the distribution.

Al Morgan's H'wood Novel

Radio-tv scripter Al Morgan, whose "The Great Man" was filmed by Jose Ferrer for Universal, has taken the Hollywood experience as background for his next Dutton novel, "Cast of Characters." Morgan worked with Ferrer on the film script and, during his one year's Coast sojourn, picked up enough material for the new book, due in September.

Three anthologies are also on the Dutton slate: "The Pick of 'Punch'" (the London humor publication), an annual edition edited by Nicolas Bentley; "One Moment, Sir!," cartoons from the Saturday Evening Post, edited by that weekly's cartoon editor; and "Lovingly Yours," by Henry Syverson, who has put 80 of his cartoons from SEP and This Week between covers. Also via Dutton, in September, is Christian Dior's memoir which the famed Paris fashion designer quaintly titles "Christian Dior and I."

100 Years of 'The Atlantic'

Edward Weeks, under whose editorship, dating from 1938, The Atlantic Monthly hit its peak 225,000 monthly sales, has edited "Jubilee: 100 Years of The Atlantic (Monthly)" in collaboraton with Emily Flint. It marks the centennial of that periodical and its treasury of prose, fiction and poetry is primed as a $7.50 October item. Published by Atlantic Monthly Press-Little, Brown & Co.

Sean O'Faolain has done a critique of the literature of "the fervent twenties". (Evelyn Waugh, Aldous Huxley, Grahame Greene, William Faulkner, Ernest Hemingway, Elizabeth Bowen, Virginia Woolf and James Joyce, among others) under the title of "The Vanishing Hero," also for Atlantic, which will also issue "Leftover Life to Kill" by Caitlin Thomas, widow of Dydan Thomas. Latter book is described as "a literary bombshell" because of its iconoclastic, bitter closeup on her life with the late Welsh author.

Little, Brown is publishing the play version of Gore Vidal's play, "A Visit to a Small Planet" in August.

Munshin's Book Pitch

Actor Jules Munshin, who discussed and read from "Dear Anybody . . . or the Crafty Letter Writer," in a guest appearance on WTRI-TV, Albany, last week, said that he planned to write a second book "about adventure."

Munshin, who is touring summer theatres with Imogene Coca in "Janus," explained that the president of Crown Publishing had suggested he turn a hobby for "correspondence" into a tome on how to write letters. Among others, the comedian read his reply to Norman Mailler, author of "Deer Park." Munshin also plugged "Dear Anybody" in a guester with Miss Coca via WRGB-TV, Schenectady, and in interviews over WPTR and WROW, Albany.

Ree De Veaux, formerly associate editor for National Press Service, joined Good Housekeeping mag's fashion merchandising staff in charge of promotion.

Elsa Wending Bakalar, writer, lecturer and information offiber for British Information Services in New York, leaving B.I.S. after 10 years to enter private enterprise.

An "expose" type novel, "The Brain Pickers," Hallie (Mrs. Whit) Burnett, is on Jullan Messner Inc.'s October roster. Has to do with behind-scenes of the book publishing biz.

Herb Bailey, ex-reporter for the show trade in Chicago, readying his second book on the controversial cancer drug, Krebiozen, for Putnam's winter list. It's titled "The Truth Will Grow."

W. Bridges-Adams, author of "The British Theatre" and former director of the Stratford-on-Avon Shakespearean festivals, has done another book on "The Irresistible Theatre" which World will publish in August. Same firm bringing out Margaret Case Harriman's "And The Price Is Right (The R. H. Macy Story)" early next year.

Hazards of Woodsy Theatregoing

Seattle, July 2.

At the "Forest Theatre" in Kitsap Cabin, Washington, the Mountaineer Players recently presented "The Teahouse of the August Moon." Theatre is carved out of a verdant forest hillside, with flowering rhododendron and lush ferns adding inspiration for both actors and audience. Stage itself is set in the midst of a stand of majestic fir trees, with the wings fashioned of moss covered bark set up on frames. Music supplied from a hi-fi setup blended in with the low throaty tones of a stream in the glen below. Elfin setting was not with difficulties, however. Lady Astor, the goat, disappeared before finale to munch in the forest. Also a tree fell, narrowly missing a theatregoer.

In their 31 years in the forest, the Mountaineer Players have also presented such woodsy naturals as "Robin of Sherwood," "A Midsummer Night's Dream," and "The Green Pastures."

last summer. Lee Sherman's choreography also rates on the plus side, as does Reginald Hammerstein's direction and John Kennedy's supervision of the entire production.

Switching from the musicals to the straight play, "Romeo and Juliet" registers impressively in the Central Park setting on the banks of Belvedere Lake. When caught last Saturday (29) night, there was an overflow crowd, some standing behind rows of seats, some sitting on benches just listening and others reclining on the bank of the lake from where the show is visible from an angle.

'Fanny' Meagre $35,000, First Week in Dallas

Dallas, July 2.

"Fanny" wound its first week at State Fair Auditorium here at Sunday's matinee (30), with a tepid $35,000 gross for seven performances. Revival, produced by managing director Charles R. Meeker Jr., stars Bill Hayes, Nicola Moscona, Hiram Sherman and Margot Moser. Musical plays another week, winding Sunday (7).

Rehearsals started yesterday (Mon.) for "Texas, Li'l Darlin'." Comedy, by John Whedon and Sam Moore, stars Jack Carson, Jet MacDonald and Danny Scholl, same trio that made a hit of the same piece here in 1951. Repeat is due a July 8-21 run.

'Lady' Stets 80G, 'Sergeants' 15½G, 'Cart' $13,300, L.A.

Los Angeles, July 2.

"My Fair Lady" continued to rack up capacity business last week in a session that saw only moderate business elsewhere in town. Two houses darkened over the weekend, the Huntington Hartford closing out "Apple Cart" and the Biltmore shuttering with the departure of "No Time for Sergeants." Latter house now faces a long dry spell, but the Hartford rekindled immediately with "Matchmaker" last night (Mon.).

Estimates for Last Week

Apple Cart, Huntington Hartford (C) (3d wk) ($4.95; 1,024; $30,000) (Maurice Evans). Off to around $13,300 for the final frame after $17,200 the previous week. Tour ended here Saturday night (29).

My Fair Lady, Philharmonic Aud (MC) (9th wk) ($5.95; 2,670; $80,000) (Brian Aherne, Anne Rogers). Capacity $80,000 again. Departs Saturday (6) for San Francisco to be followed on the Civic Light Opera season by "South Pacific."

No Time for Sergeants, Biltmore (C) (6th wk) $4.95; 1,636; $36,000). Up for the final frame, reaching nearly $15,500, after previous week's $14,900.

'Pacific' Modest 40G, K.C.; NSG Weather Clips Biz

Kansas City, July 2.

The Starlight Theatre al fresco production of "South Pacific" at Swope Park grossed a moderate $40,000 last week, the first of a fortnight's run. The take was dented by a washout Thursday (27) night, with the threat of rain holding down attendance at other performances.

The cast is headed by Howard Keel, Martha Wright, Gloria Lane, Benny Baker and Jim Hawthorne.

New Girl in Town, 46th St. (MD) (7th wk; 55; $9.20-$8.60; 1,297; $59,084) (Gwen Verdon, Thelma Ritter). Previous week, $59,800; last week, over $59,900.

No Time for Sergeants, Alvin (C) (89th wk; 708; $5.75-$4.60; 1,331; $38,500). On discount tickets. Previous week, $24,000; last week, over $23,100. Closes Aug. 17, to tour.

Separate Tables, Music Box (D) (36th wk; 284; $5.75; 1,010; $31,021) (Eric Portman, Margaret Leighton). Lays off July 13 in order to play Aug. 3-31 at Central City, Col., but resumes here Sept. 2. Geraldine Page succeeded Miss Leighton last Monday (1). Previous week $15,100; last week, almost $13,000.

Tunnel of Love, Royale (C) (19th wk; 157; $5.75; 944; $34,000) (Tom Ewell). Previous week, $16,000; last week, nearly $16,500.

Visit to a Small Planet, Booth (C) (21st wk; 164; $6.90-$5.75; 766; $27,300) (Cyril Ritchard). Previous week, $23,900; last week, over $21,700.

Laid Off Last Week

Auntie Mame, Broadhurst (C) (34th wk; 269; $6.90-$5.75; 1,182; $43,000) (Rosalind Russell). As always, about $43,500. Laid off last Saturday (29) and will reopen Aug. 5.

Long Day's Journey Into Night, Hayes (D) (34th wk; 204; $6.90; 1,039; $30,000) (Fredric March, Florence Eldridge). Previous week, $27,700; last week, over $28,100. Laid off last Saturday (29), opened yesterday (Tues.) at the Paris Festival where it runs through next Saturday (6), and resumes here Aug. 19.

Closed Last Week

Moon for the Misbegotten, Bijou (D) (9th wk; 68; $5.75-$5.25; 603; $20,400) (Wendy Hiller, Franchot Tone, Cyril Cusack). Previous week, $10,200; last week, almost $7,100. Closed last Saturday (29). It was the second production in a Bijou play series, with the overall project capitalized at $100,000, plus 20% overcall. Most of that coin has been dropped on the two ventures.

'SP' Wow $55,926; 'Match' 17G, S.F.

San Francisco, July 2.

Frisco Civic Light Opera sopped up most of the available legit money, with sellout fourth week of "South Pacific" at the Curran equalling the Mary Martin-Giorgio Tozzi show's record third week. In addition, CLO's "My Fair Lady," opening next Monday (8) for six weeks at the 3300-seat Opera House, is nearing sellout even before opening. Less than $100,000 worth of tickets, at $5.50-$5.90 scale, are left.

"No Time for Sergeants" opens tonight (Tues.) at the Geary for at least six weeks and the Harry Belafonte one-man show opened last night (Mon.) for six performances at the Opera House. Alcazar is dark until July 10, when "The Reluctant Debutante" moves in for an indefinite run. CLO's "Fanny" opens July 15 at the Curran for five weeks.

Estimates for Last Week

South Pacific, Curran (4th wk) ($5.50-$5.90; 1,756; $57,000) (Mary Martin, Giorgio Tozzi). Sellout $55,926 for a new house record; previous week $55,900; the 10% discount on subscription seats is holding the house slightly below full potential.

Matchmaker, Geary (4th wk) ($4.40-$4.95; 1,550; $36,000) (Ruth Gordon, Loring Smith, Patricia Cutts). Down to $17,000; previous week, $21,000; exited Saturday (29) for a four-ending four-week run Los Angeles.

Fallen Angels, Alcazar (3d wk) ($4.40; 1,147; $31,000) (Hermione Gingold, Mary McCarty). Over $13,500; previous week, $13,000; folded last Saturday (29).

'CAT' EASES TO $13,500; READY TO VACATE CHI

Chicago, July 2.

The lone legit offering here held to only a fair level last week, with slight help from the annual Furniture Market influx. Ninth week of "Cat on a Hot Tin Roof" tapped about $13,500 at the 1,335-seat Erlanger, at a $5 top. Gross for the previous week of the Thomas Gomez-Marjorie Steele-Alex Nicol starrer was $14,747.

R. G. Armstrong and Jack Betts have taken over the male leads this week, leaving Marjorie Steele as the show's only star. Still no new legits on the horizons for another month at least.

"Cat" will probably leave July 13 or 20 for a return engagement on Broadway.

'Stockings' Sad $22,500 With 2 Rainouts, Pitt

Pittsburgh, July 2.

With the Monday (24) and Friday (28) performances rained out, the Civic Light Opera production of "Silk Stockings" grossed a sorry $22,500 last week at the Pittsburgh Stadium. Dolores Gray and Lawrence Brooks costarred in the season's initial production.

"Great Waltz," starring Lois Hunt, is current this week.

French African waiters do al fresco dances at your table, mostly grinds that are a blend of Katharine Dunham impressionisms and burleskery bumps. Better on the atmosphere than the groceries. It attempts a road company Don The Beachcomber "mysterioso recipe" cocktail-stick to Dubonnet. A oncer.

The Grenouille (The Frog) is always ribald and the French gals know that the best defensive mechanism is to exclaim "Je suis enciente"—the traditional Gallic gallantry to any mother-to-be alone saves them from some mighty informal and al fresco patting on the posteriors, etc. Chez Gaby is still a top tourist spot blending good food with synthetic revelry, al fresco and effective, reminding of the old Leon & Eddie's bumps-a-daisy stuff. Table du Roy is tourist fodder, always good; ditto La Mouton de Panurge, with its phallic symbolism in decor, menu, and even on the bread and rolls, Gaby's Acapulco is in the Mexican motif; there is a decided veering to Latin-style atmospheric eateries. Art Buchwald's chowmeinery on the Albert Ier, a putt from the Hotel George V, of course gets beaucoup curiosity trade, but is too small for payoff to the all-star investors (Zanuck, Huston, Sam Spiegel et al).

Hot-Off-the-Brill Bldg.

The manner in which the top boites in London, Paris and Rome get the latest tunes remains a startling aural observation, although readily explained by off-the-air and off-disks arrangements, not to mention the friendly pilots who bring 'em in hot-off-the-Brill-Bldg. But to an American abroad these tunes are almost like "never been away."

Monique Van Vooren, chantoosey, set for a bit in Arthur Freed's "Gigi," being squired by midwest tycoon Nate Cummings, and the latter's son and daughter-in-law. Maurice Chevalier set in the same Metro pic, which Vincente Minnelli is directing. Latter's wife is French and at-home here; she first came to Hollywood as chaperon for her sister in a Miss Universe contest. The Freeds, the Minnellis, along with Fred (Fritz) Loewe and Alan Jay Lerner are holed up in the penthouse plushery of the George V. Says Lerner: "While they're flitting around town I'm working over a hot typewriter setting words to Fritz's tunes. He can go off to the Deauville baccarat tables but I'm a slave to the muse of Nick Kenny. Anyway, it's a relief not to have to pick up the phone and tell disbelieving pals, 'But I haven't got any house seats; mine are gone till next October,'" referring to "My Fair Lady," the li'l gold-mine they have running for themselves back on 51st St.

Peripatetic Shelly Reynolds

Sheldon Reynolds has given up his "Foreign Intrigue" (after 236 of 'em he's tired of the formula) and is commuting from London where he's shooting "Dick and the Duchess" for CBS, with Ray Allen on script. His chief aide is Nicole Milinare, a savvy French femme who knows story, production and locale values.

Reynolds' fave eatery is Le Berkeley, on the Rondpoint, a plush restaurant, and he makes the sage observation that people who might be barred from New York's Pavilion, 21, Stork and Colony, or at least have trouble getting a good table, should not expect, because they're Americans, that the French aren't as discriminatory in their seating protocol.

Bemmy's Joints

Ludwig Bemelmans now has both a Paris and N. Y. art gallery (Hammer in Gotham) gobbling up everything he turns out (has turned to oils) at $1,000-$1,500 a crack. He's holed up in Seine-et-Oise auberge, about a half-hour from the Etoile, having the entire gastronomic facilities of the inn at his beck and call and also a glass-encased, ex-barn which makes an ideal studio. "Bemmy" poured one Sunday and added starters were the Jose Ferrers (Rosemary Clooney), who planed over from London for the weekend in between filming his "Dreyfus" picture. The French are sensitive to anything pertaining to Capt. Dreyfus but Ferrer hopes to break them down and exhibit it in that country. Miss Clooney's baby is due in the fall.

Bemelmans built, designed and decorated a Left Bank bistro somewhat before (the late) Borrah Minevitch's unique Au Franc Pinot, off the Ile de St. Louis, and the artist-author bemoans, "Now it's a hit. Some day I'll start and finish something and stick around to cash in on it."

Chez Borrah Minevitch

Lucille (Littel) Minevitch clicking with Au Franc Pinot, on the site of an old oubliette, dating back to Robespierre's era when dissidents were thrown into this "forgotten hole," emptying into the Seine, just across the street. It's now historic ground and it was quite a feat for Minevitch to get official permission for his atmospheric restaurant-bar. The hep Franco-American set still talks of how Minevitch salted the cellar saloon, during its most rugged stages, with some old French doubloons, then spread the rumor about buried treasure, and the casual French workers really started to dig with a frenzy. Reason for this was that Minevitch wanted the joint finished in time for the premiere party to a visiting VARIETY man—and he made it. Even though on the very morning of the party the place was still almost a shambles. In between her painting (as Lucille Littel, her maiden name), Mrs. Minevitch runs Au Franc Pinot. Her ex-husband, Deems Taylor, the composer, due over soon to visit with her at the Moulin de Minevitch, a farm-mill in Meriville, some 50 miles from Paris.

Winduppery

The Calavados, around the corner from the George V, remains the prime winduppery, with Maria Velasco at the ivories. She has a tall memory for Rodgers & Hart and kindred tunes, alternating with the strolling Los Latinos, Mexican trio. Upstairs, Stuart Hart plays the piano and sings for the candlelight dinners and while the groceries are good the Calavados is essentially a late-bar for the onion soup and the cold Dutch beer.

Forgotten Greasepainters

Gypsy Markoff, heroine of that wartime Lisbon plane disaster, which also caused Jane Froman so much anguish, still playing her gypsy chansons on the accordion and a Continental fave in the smaller bistros, currently at the Paletta, Franco-Russian boite. Miss Markoff still awaiting some Governmental recognition and recompense for the costly operations which crippled one of her hands. She was but one of the doughty "soldiers in greasepaint" who did such a terrific USO-Camp Shows and other GI entertainment chores—unfortunately too quickly forgotten. Paradoxically, with all the Fort Knox that Uncle Sam sends abroad a forgetful government has not done right by people like Miss Markoff, Miss Froman, et al.

Miss Markoff was particularly happy for Jean Swaczynski, her pianist, who had just gotten his 67-year-old mother out of Poland, after not having seen her for 14 years.

Mony Dalmes of the Comedie Francaise readying to rejoin her husband, Waldorf-Astoria veepee Claude C. Philippe, and to make her American legit debut (in English) for Gilbert Miller in "The Dazzling Hour," French play which clicked in London and was briefly tried out at La Jolla (Calif.) by Jose Ferrer. Mary Sinclair, Charles Korvin and Alexander Clark will be in support. Probably getting a Westport (Conn.) or Falmouth (Mass.) break-in. Miss Dalmes has been Berlitzing-up on English, with an eye to the Broadway stage. She came over two seasons ago with the Comedie Francaise for its limited Broadway season.

AGVAite Gone TWA

The purser on the return TWA flight identified himself as a reformed singer ("Sons o' Guns," the Olsen & Johnson show, with the ice shows at the now defunct Center Theatre in Radio City, with Vincent Lopez and Mitchell Ayres); he's Dick Craig, of Hyannis, Mass., now a happy gent, flitting between Idlewild and overseas capitals. Being a personality kid with a show biz background he quickly impressed as a polished greeter.

Music Corp. of America board chairman Jules C. Stein had quickied in for a huddle with brother Dave Stein, the Paris rep for the super-agency, on a deal for a Munich talent agency takeover, as a base for a German branch of MCA's global setup. Last year Stein had acquired a long-established French percentary as the nucleus of the French MCA branch.

Smart idea is the First International Music Hall Festival de Paris, a stunt by Bruno Coquatrix, director general of the Olympia; Georges Soria, Paris cultural attache, and Fernand Lumbroso, of the Lumbroso Enterprises, which was kicked off with a Maxim's cocktailery. Accent of the new Olympia lineup seems to be on many acts from the East, including a Russian clown and turns from Czechoslovakia, but Coquatrix and Lumbroso have U. S. aspirations, if the international music hall show clicks.

Roman Rambles

The week before, UA's Continental chief Mo Rothman was hosting a 11:30 a. m. cocktailery for Gary Cooper and Maurice Chevalier at the Plaza-Athenee, Paris, and a week later he was on the Via Veneto "beach," yclept Cafe Doney, with a banged-upped forehead, as result of an auto accident. Looked worse than it was. Huddling with UA's Italo sales boss Kurt Unger. Incidentally, the before-noon "cocktail party" is a new Paris idea—aperitifs, etc., until the traditional big lunch from 1—3 p.m. The press likes it too. It's UA's Francis M. Winikus' idea—more efficient, doesn't go on and on, as with the 5—7 or 6—8 sessions which are tough to break up.

Michael Chinigo, with a showplace villa (swimming pool 'n' il) on the Amalfi Drive, off Sorrento, is now a sales executive for King Features, having relinquished the day-to-day INS news coverage as its former Rome bureau chief.

Charles Franklin (Chuck) Baldwin, Mediterranean rep for the Motion Picture Export Assn. (Eric Johnston office), who is headquartered in Rome, has been commuting to Madrid on the Spanish film stalemate. He is hoping for eventual accord with the Spaniards "when the climate eases" but, right now, admits that Madrid is on an even closer honeymoon with the Italians than with the French. Much of the Spanish economy is tied closer with Italy than France, as heretofore, he feels.

Sam'l Steinman's "Roman Rambler" column for the Paris edition of the N.Y. Herald Tribune slated for U.S. syndication by the Trib in the fall.

Roman dailies, and in fact almost all the Italian papers (Milan, Florence, Naples and Rome included) "look like they were made-up by the traditional drunken printer." Major standout exception is Rome's Il Giorno, with its U.S.-style columnar chatter and U.S.-style cartoons, which is commanding quick readership recognition for its well-balanced and savvy journalistic make-up.

True mag's roving European feature writer Michael Stern has taken to painting, under Kurt Polter, and as a result the latter's own art works' output has boomed in price.

Paraguayan guitar-singer Amahi a new click at Bricktops where Thelma Carpenter just opened.

Mario Lanza has shed 32 pounds for his "7 Hills of Rome," Metro filmusical which Lester Welch is producing and Roy Rowland directing.

Noticeable that in the one-worldism of show biz industry most film companies and the like now utilize their basic American corporate names. It's no longer Les Unies Artistes for United Artists, or Les Fox Films Europa when, evidently, Spyros Skouras wants the 20th Century-Fox Films name impressed around the world. So, too, with the global RCA trademark, where Si Rady, in Paris, is heading up a&r operations; the new RCA Italiana, in Rome, where Dr. Pietro Vaccari is the new boss, succeeding Joe Biondo. (In Madrid, it's ditto with Gabriel Soria, and the accent on RCA Espana).

ence" with Rosenberg "by criticizing that otherwise excellent effort for being done in black and white."

Trussell literally sees black when a film company makes a film in black and white. "Hollywood using black and white CinemaScope is the same thing as Henry Ford having invented the automobile and then used the same old horses to pull it along," Trussell says. "It's the most miserable waste of a progressive technique in the entire history of the entertainment arts."

CHATTER

Broadway

With seven weeks of Asiatic concerts for State Dept. behind him, Richard Tucker of the Met arrives back in N. Y. July 7.

Marilyn Monroe dedicated the new "sidewalk superitendents club" of the new Time-Life Bldg., now being constructed in Rockefeller Center.

Jules Nassberg, whose insurance beat takes in much show biz, named to the board of directors of the Life Insurance Underwriters Assn. of N. Y.

Ethel Smith shifting from her concert and nitery organ routine to legit at the Starlight Theatre, Powling (N.Y.) strawhat, debuting July 9 in "The Desk Set."

With Michael Kent now fiddling at the Tropicana, Las Vegas, Fred Fassler is pianist Karl Inwald's vis-a-vis on the Strad in El Marocco's Champagne Room. Kent succeeded the late Andre Bodo as the violin specialist.

Andre Mertens' bag in Europe for Columbia Artists: Hungarian pianist Gyorby Cziffra and U.S.-via-Vienna Opera baritone Walter Berry. Latter will sing with Chicago Lyric this fall, concert tour fall following.

Wall Streeter Donald Gruhn, son of Murray Gruhn, electronics specialist and legit backer, marrying Judy Miller, daughtetr of MCA veepee Charles Miller and Adelaide Miller, latter the sister of MCA founder and board chairman Jules C. Stein. Wedding slated for October.

The heat affects pressagents too, apparently. At least, this is all that can be attributed to a Hollywood story about a script change in "April Love," Pat Boone starrer. Scenes in which he was to embrace Shirley Jones had to be changed because he doesn't believe in physical contact with any woman other than his wife.

After seven years as the Waldorf-Astoria publicist, five of them under Paul A. Stewart and two as chief of the department, Madeleine Riordan is exiting the post to freelance. Hilton Hotels' national public relations director John Joseph brought in Mary McLeod, ex-Caples agency, and also tourist bureau background.

Martin Levine, general manager of Brandt Theatres, and Edith Marshall, of John C. Bole Theatres, serving as co-chairmen of the Independent Theatre Owners Assn. participation in the Will Rogers Memorial Hospital audience collection drive which takes place next of Aug. 7.

International Concert Service Inc. has been chartered to conduct a music business in New York. Jesse S. Richman is a director and filing attorney. National Concerts and Sol Hurok both are headquartered at the same address.

Amusement Division of the National conference of Christian & Jews at its annual Awards Luncheon last week distributed citations "for outstanding service to the 1957 Brotherhood campaign" to some 35 theatre managers in the N. Y. metropolitan area. Exhibitors in this territory raised $39,000 this year in behalf of the drive compared with $36,000 last year.

Phil Baker back on the Coast, trying to get active again. Comedian-accordionist's wife is still in her native Copenhagen where both had been sojourning for some time.

Renata Tebaldi, Met Opera soprano, sailed for Genoa last week on the S.S. Cristoforo Colombo.

Sam Tucker, hotelier and operator of Las Vegas' Desert Inn, en route to Europe with Naples as his first stop.

John F. Isard resigned as manager of the Savoy-Plaza, with which he has been since its opening Oct. 1, 1927 until becoming the manager in '46, to assume the post of g.m. of the Surf Club, Miami Beach. Isard and his wife sailed Monday (1) on European vacation for six weeks and continues at the Savoy-Plaza (now a Hilton hotel) until Oct. 1 when he shifts to the new Florida post.

Alaska

By Gordon Shaw

The far north seems to be settling down now, to a steady summer season of entertainment with the following noted for this month:

Phyllis Bennett into Steve Boinich's Persian Room for two weeks with options.

The Gadabouts, Mercury diskers, holding forth at Club 11 on Richardson Hiway.

The Squadron and Top Hat clubs are currently Alaska interior's "exotic" spots.

Don McCune, local tv personality, has gone to KOMO-TV, Seattle, for "Captain Puget" show. Rex Rucker replaces McCune at KFAR-TV. Both are permanent moves.

Joan Lawton, who was Alaka's contestant for Otto Preminger's "St. Joan," to appear with the pic in Anchorage and Fairbanks.

Radio station KFRB has gone on a 24-hour schedule of music, news and sports with emphasis on deejays. It still maintains net affiliation with CBS for news and special events.

Danny Kaye publicist Robert McElwaine and Sandra Cowen, fledgling actress and daughter of former U.S. Ambassador to Philippines Myron and Mrs. Cowen, set for October nuptials.

Mrs. George Malone, wife of the Nevada solon, hostess at afternoon screening of "Prince and Showgirl" at MPAA office.

Barbara Nichols, here with Burt Lancaster to beat drums for "Sweet Smell of Success," hit publicity jackpot in women's pages of town's dailies.

OBITUARIES

FRANK BLACHFORD

Frank Blachford, 77, faculty member of the U. of Toronto and a noted musician, died June 24 in Calgary, Alberta, at a testimonial dinner which he was attending as adjudicator for Royal Conservatory of Music degrees. He was a celebrated violinist in his younger years and won a scholarship at Leipzig Conservatory from which he graduated with high honors in 1901. He also studied in Berlin and Geneva before embarking on international concert tours.

Blachford was first concert master of the Toronto Symphony and was one of the pioneer leaders of music when he batoned an orchestra over CFCA, Toronto, in 1924 onward. He was also founder of the Toronto String Quartet in addition to his faculty duties with the U. of Toronto.

Survived by wife, son, daughter.

JACK SHUTTA

Jack Shutta, 58, veteran actor and member of a noted theatrical family, died of cancer June 28 in Houston. He started his stage career as a youth in a vaude turn with his sisters and parents. Later he trouped in burlesque.

Shutta appeared in Florenz Ziegfeld's production of "Whoopee" on Broadway and was also seen in the film version. He worked in various legit shows, films and for a time teamed with George Murphy in a nitery act.

After coming to Houston last October, he appeared in four productions at the Playhouse there. He was cast for a part in "Witness for the Prosecution," currently at the Playhouse, when he became ill.

Surviving are three daughters and a sister, Ethel Shutta Kirksey, former singer.

JACOB W. LOEB

Jacob Weil Loeb, 92, former partner of the late William Fox and talent booker for the old Fox circuit, died June 25 in New York.

In Loving Memory of Charlotte Learn Garrity
Passed Away July 6, 1947
John J. Garrity, Sr.
John J. Garrity, Jr.
Patricia Garrity Givaudan

He was v.p. of the Fanchon & Marco circuit for years.

While associated with the film industry, Loeb is credited with having helped launch the screen careers of such oldtime luminaries as William S. Hart, Theda Bara and William Farnum, among others. He was also said to have originated the idea of having special music accompany silent films in the nickelodeon era.

Loeb, who retired in 1931, assumed the vice presidency of the old General Broadcasting System after leaving the motion picture field.

Surviving are a brother and a sister.

HAROLD WALDRIGE

Harold Waldrige, 50, retired actor, died June 26 in New York.

Waldrige began his career in Oklahoma, where he started a Little Theatre movement. He later went to N. Y., where he appeared as an office boy in John Golden's "The Wheel." Later, in David Warfield revival of "The Auctioneer," he portrayed an errand boy. He then appeared in a George Arliss film, "The Ruling Passion."

His legit credits also include "Polly Preferred," "Love 'Em and Leave 'Em," "Poppa," "Veneer," "Geraniums in My Window" and "Without Warning." His films were "Five Star Final," "The Heart of New York," "Strangers of the Evening," "Private Scandal" and "Three Men on a Horse."

LILLIAN DREW

Mrs. Lillian Drew, 75, widow of Frank Drew, who was Metro's central western manager with headquarters in Cleveland for over 30 years, died June 13 in Los Angeles. The late Drew, who died in Seattle about three years ago, was a son of Frank Drew, of the oldtime firm of Drew & Campbell, which operated the Star burlesque house in Cleveland among other interests.

His widow was a former head of the women's division of the Cleveland Variety Club. She left no immediate survivors.

EVELYN DELEMERE

Mrs. C. M. Rhodes, 56, former "Ziegfeld Follies" dancer, known professionally as Evelyn Delemere, died June 23 in Jamaica, New York.

She launched her career when she was 17. She later was featured in the Broadway productions of "The Perfect Fool," with Ed Wynn, and in "Sunny," with Marilyn Miller. She appeared in the Follies with Eddie Cantor and Bobby Clark.

Her husband, daughter and mother survive.

CYRIL LANGLOIS

Cyril Langlois, 64, founder and chairman of the board of Lang-Worth Feature Programs, Inc., producer and distributor of syndicated radio programs since 1935, died June 18 in New York, after a long illness. Langlois was a professional singer in the early days of radio and produced numerous programs, including "Jungle Jim" and the "Cavalcade of Music."

Wife, two sons and two sisters survive.

C. L. YEARSLEY

C. L. Yearsley, 79, early day film advertising man, died in Hollywood June 27 of a heart attack. He had been in retirement for several years.

One of the first ad men to use display space to bally films, Yearsley joined First National in 1917 to head its ad department. When Warners acquired the film in 1928, he went along as a management staffer.

His wife survives.

ROBERT LeSUEUR

Robert LeSueur, 77, retired actor, died June 26 in Oakdale, New York.

LeSueur launched his career in 1904 at the old Castle Square Theatre in Boston. He later appeared on Broadway in St. John Irvine's and H. G. Wells' "The Wonderful Visit." Other legit credits include "Johnny Belinda" and "Woman Bites Dog."

Wife and sister survive.

JOHN L. BRANNAM

Lieut. John L. Brannam, 23, prominent actor in Dallas drama groups, died June 20 from injuries suffered in an auto accident near Waxahachie, Tex. He was scheduled to portray the lead role in "Pictures in a Hallway," the next production of the Great Drama Series being given in Dallas this summer.

Brannam was also seen in the Baylor U. production of "Hamlet."

WILLIAM G. McCARTHY

William G. McCarthy, 34, an advertising executive with the J. Walter Thompson agency, died June 28 in New York. McCarthy wrote and produced live and film tv commercials for a number of companies including the Ford Motor Co., the Shell Oil Co., Swift & Co., Lever Brothers and P. Ballantine & Sons.

Wife, two daughters and his father survive.

ARTHUR W. RICHARDSON

Arthur W. Richardson, 55, chief engineer for WGBH-TV, Cambridge, Mass., for the past four years, died June 29 in that city. He was previously associated with WTAO, Cambridge, Western Electric Co. of N.J. and General Electric Supply Corp.

Surviving are his wife, three daughters, a son and a brother.

KAY VERNON

Kay Vernon Malenga, 43, vet singer, died June 30 in New York after a lengthy illness. Known professionally as Kay Vernon, she worked in radio stations, niteries and supper clubs, including the Chez Paree, Chicago, as well as top spots in the major cities.

Survived by her husband.

KATHLEEN O'C. REYNOLDS

Kathleen O'Connor Reynolds, 60, silent screen actress who retired from films about 30 years ago, died at her Hollywood home June 25 after a long illness. She began her career in Mack Sennett productions and later appeared opposite Tom Mix in many films.

Widower, Clark Reynolds, survives.

MAURICE E. ROSENBLUM

Maurice E. Rosenblum, 50, one-time nitery operator who founded the Vogue Theatrical Agency in San Antonio 12 years ago, died June 23 in that city.

Before coming to San Antonio, he operated five night clubs in New York.

RAYMOND THOMPSON

Raymond Thompson, 33, manager of the Jefferson Drive-In Theatre, Dallas, died June 26 in a hospital there, shortly after a 50-foot fall from the theatre's marquee tower, which he was repairing.

Survived by two sisters.

Joseph M. Thompson, 53, projectionist at Proctor's Theatre, Troy, N. Y., for 25 years, died June 21 in Watervliet, N. Y. His wife, son, brother and sister survive.

carry the picture at the boxoffice? My husband and I go to movies in (in Manhattan where the Steele's now reside) at least once a week, and judging from audiences we've seen I just don't believe teenagers make up most of such audiences. You see businessmen, mothers and fathers, young men and their sweethearts—but very few teenagers. Right now pictures such as 'Spirit of St. Louis' (James Stewart), 'Designing Woman' (Gregory Peck) and 'Prince and the Show Girl' (Laurence Olivier) are doing great business in N.Y. Theatres where they are playing are jammed."

Speaking for herself, Miss Crawford says, "I still get 10,000 letters a month from fans, and that number tripled when I was in England making a picture. I think the other stars would say the same thing. The motion picture business is cutting its own throat by making so many pictures to bring in newcomers and compete with tv, then not exploiting them. They are making a great mistake. Only 20th-Fox and U do exploit their pictures properly," she thinks.

Star had this to say of the newcomers: "While I've been gone I've seen fan magazines about people I never heard of. I don't know who they are or where they came from. Audrey Hepburn is the greatest of the newcomers—she is a real talent. And I think another who will be a star is Heather Sears, who is in 'The Story of Esther Costello.'" (The latter is the current Joan Crawford release.)

productions of clippings from various wire services and VARIETY.

Hills emphasized that one out of every two issues of the book contained an article concerning the industry; that Pete Martin alone was responsible for 80-odd stories and serials profiling celebs in moviedom; and that this close tieup was cemented by the fact that Hollywood takes more material from the Post than from any other magazine. During the first five months of this year, 15 Post titles were purchased by films. These included "The Wreck of the Mary Deare, "Imitation General," "No Blade of Grass" and "Invisible Boy," sold to Metro; "Ambush at Blanco Canyon" (UA); "Memo on Kathy O'Rourke" (UI); "Doom Cliff" (WB); "Kiowa Moon" (H-H-L); "The Gunslinger" (Sol Fielding); "Death in Small Doses (AA); "The Guns of the Navorone" (Col); and "Frontier Frenzy" (C. V. Whitney).

Action stills from current pix were screened in connection with clippings from the Post stories. Among these were "Spirit of St. Louis" and "Gunfight in O. K. Corral." Twenty-odd clips from VARIETY headlines were used to illustrate b.o. success of "Corral."

Reader response to articles was dramatized by incidents following publication of several pieces, including one on Joe Louis, which resulted in an organized bid to raise dough for the ex-champ.

Event was emceed by George Murphy, president of Motion Picture Advisory Council, who eulogized Pete Martin, "When I hear that Pete is going to write a story on some personality, I relax, happy in the knowledge that his profile will be objective, fair, interesting and free of sensationalism—which is more than I can say of all profilers."

Although less than 5% of the audience was made up of potential space buyers, per se, a spokesman for the Post stated that "we wanted to create a stir, and I guess we did. The event was a success so far as we were concerned, and we had a much greater turnout than we anticipated."

Hurok Talent

Gilels, composer Aram Khatchaneva and her troupe.

The Moiseyev troupe had been previously signed for a tour in the U. S. in the hopes that the fingerprint section of the U. S. Immigration laws would have been modified. That not having been accomplished, Hurok returned here last week for a further try. He subsequently succeeded in pacting the other elements to a tour. Individual performers, such as Oistrakh and Gilels, had been able to get around this provision in a previous U. S. tour.

Gilels is already booked to work in the U. S. next year opening with the Pittsburgh Symph Jan. 7. Leonid Kogan, violinist, will start an American tour Jan. 8 with the Boston Symphony. Oistrakh and Khatchaturian will tour the U. S. in the fall of '58 for a series of dates (separately). If Hurok is able to get mass clearance, it's anticipated that the Moiseyev troupe will open at the Met, N. Y., in April and the Bolshoi Theatre would go in the following year.

Hurok, who is Russian-born, negotiated the deal in the native tongue, is convinced of the Russian desire for a cultural exchange of this kind. Hurok cited the desire of American performers to work in the Soviet Union. Hurok stated that the USSR has agreed to pay transportation one way in dollars and an additional 1,000 rubles ($250) for each performer for expenses and room, board, transportation within Russia.

honor." It's known that Selznick has from the beginning tried to avoid all controversy over this aspect of his production by hiring an Italian expert (journalist Luigi Barzini Jr.) to see that the Italian point of view was satisfied at all times. A costume expert is also supervising authenticity of period garb and uniforms.

Selznick went on to praise the "very effective collaboration of the Italian troupe, both in regard to actors and to technicians and workers." The producer also had words of praise for the equipment in local studios.

tendance and surely in exuberant enthsiasm.

Sticking to Verdi (tightly conducted by Julius Rudel) as she did at her Carnegie Hall Philharmonic Fund benefit, Madame (as she is called for respect, since not married) Tebaldi was in fine vocal and dramatic form, one of her top notes being so exquisite the audience applauded before the number ended, a collective faux pas which carried a real compliment. The audience was slow to break up and go home even after the encores.

Two remarks for the record: (1) rare is the singer of any kind who can so completely dominate an occasion, (2) if Maria Callas inaugurated the N. Y. operatic season of 1956-'57, with standing room only and a pitched battle with the adulence, Renata Tebaldi had the last word with less than capacity but with unreserved love sweeping the field.

Sex Making 'Comeback' in Paris As Egghead Cafes Beat Hasty Retreat

Paris, July 9.

The striptease clubs, the fleshteries and the boites purveying spectacle and plush aspects are now the main tourist and even Gallic meccas. The offbeat cabaret, the big Paris nightlife appeal after the war, is fading out.

A looksee at the overall night spot picture bears this out. The club bonanza left by Existentialism with its weightier intellectual atmosphere, is about frittered away. Of the 120 cabarets studded around this all-night town, over 70 have flesh as their mainstay and most of the rest are tourist traps except for a few holdouts which try for the unusual and different.

Various reasons have been given for the fadeout of the unique spot giving precedence to mind over the undraped or spectacularly hopped-up matter. Among the main reasons why the highbrow clubs are now the weak sisters in the nitery sweeps:

1. The big period of the egghead places came after the war when, a disoriented populace, instead of plunging into escapist pleasures, still had a weight to unload and wanted some form of reason with their relaxation. This was the heyday of the Rose Rouge with its brilliant pocket-size shows and the emergence of new talents. Existentialism also helped give a philo-

Youth, Optimism, I.O.U.s Produce Do-It-Yourself Feature in N.Y. for $6,000

In an era of astronomical production costs, the accomplishments of two former television aides in theatrical feature film-making is deemed incredulous. Pair turned out a 75-minute picture at a negative cost of $6,000. 'The picture—a frankly "B" effort destined for the double feature and action market—is titled "Run Across the River." It was shot entirely on location in the Greenwich Village area of New York.

Making their debut as shoestring film producers are Charles Weiss and Everett Chambers, who formerly worked with Fred Coe on the NBC-TV Playwrights '56 series. When the show went off the air and Coe headed for Hollywood, the "at liberty" duo joined with

Texas-Style Giveaway

Tyler, Tex., July 9.

KTBB, in move for a safe Fourth of July on the highways, offered a free funeral for anyone killed during the holiday period provided they register with the station prior to the start of the holiday.

The offer covered the period from Wednesday evening to early Friday morning, July 5. KTBB disk jockeys plus other staff members volunteered to act as pallbearers.

Station stated that since the ceremony probably would be for safety violators only, it would play only rock 'n' roll music at the funeral.

No one took up the offer.

Engineers at CBS 'Sleep In' to Avoid Union Picket Line

A group of CBS Radio engineers are bedded down at the web's headquarters in N.Y. to avoid crossing a picket line set up by disk engineers belonging to the same union local. Picket line was established in front of 485 Madison Ave. last week by recording engineer members of Local 1212 of IBEW, who are striking CBS' disk subsid, Columbia Records, in a bid for a new contract and wider jurisdiction over audio tape.

CBS' broadcast engineers, both in radio and tv, are members of

Ted Heath's Disk Tribute To Tommy, Jimmy Dorsey

London, July 9.

Ted Heath orch will record a tribute to the late Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey on an NP featuring numbers associated with them. The disk is mainly planned for sales on the London label in the U.S. but will also be available here.

It will feature 12 titles in all, and will include "Opus One," "Green Eyes," "Melody In F," "Marie" and "Song Of India."

CONFLICTS GO ROUND 'N' ROUND

Those Indian fakirs who walk over hot coals have nothing on television's administrators these days. For a serious problem—that of product conflict—is becoming even more acutely serious, and inability to resolve the issue in some instances has already presented dollars-and-cents hardships to the networks totalling up in the aggregate several million dollars.

In an era of mounting share-sponsorship arrangements—a situation resulting from ever-mounting costs of programming—network sales departments have never had to step so gingerly in order to avoid these product conflicts between competing advertisers. Already a major headache in daytime television (due chiefly to diversification among such major bankrollers as Procter & Gamble, Colgate, et al.), the product conflict situation is becoming a well-nigh unbearable one in nighttime tv, too.

What's more, it shows no signs of lessening as the rising costs of television make it imperative for sponsors to join in multiple-sponsorship or alternate-week arrangements. There's even a new wrinkle beginning to come into play—the shared-commercial tie-in, in which

San Francisco, July 9.

Harry Belafonte clawed at Hollywood and Madison Ave. while discussing his current touring show here.

"Take the stinking quality of my last picture—of all three pictures," he said.

"The first picture, called 'Bright Road,' was a nice, bland Lassie-like thing based on a story in The Ladies Home Journal. Then 'Carmen Jones'—bootleg Bizet. Now 'Island in the Sun,' a terrible picture based on a terrible best-selling book.

"But we had to prove in 'Carmen Jones' that an all-Negro picture could gross fat profits. Now 'Island' is going great, just great, and—wonder of wonders—I get to best James Mason."

The singer said he detested his

Rae (Ray) Bourbon's '1 Woman' B'way Show

Rae Bourbon, who underwent a sex transformation operation from male to female in Mexico last year, is planning to hit Broadway with a "one-woman" show in September. The entry, which will probably be tagged, "Witching Hour With Rae Bourbon," will be essentially the same as the one presented by the performer at the Ivar Theatre, Hollywood, for two weeks last October.

The Broadway stand, slated for Sept. 19, will also utilize a dixieland band in the orchestra pit. The venture is being backed by Irving Kratka and James Gardner, who own Classic Editions, a recording company. Bourbon records for UTC, a subsid of that diskery.

Package show tours are still expanding on a national and international level. Trips are being planned from Canada to Europe and from Honolulu to New York. Combined theatre-travel trips from New York to Europe are also increasing, as is package activity for hinterland shows.

The Atlantic hop from Canada is contemplated for next fall by Terry Fisher's Canadian Theatre Tours Ltd., which has been running show trains and planes to New York. The tour originating in Honolulu is planned for next September under United Air Lines auspicies. Ed Sheehan, radio-tv personality and newspaper columnist, is slated to shepherd the islanders.

Continuation of the Canadian Theatre Tours' packages to New York is apparently uncertain at the moment in view of the recent N. Y. Supreme Court decisions upholding the N. Y. City License Dept. ban on the sale of Broadway theatre tickets for resale or redistribution by unlicensed purchasers. Similarly the Honolulu to N. Y. trip will also be dependent on obtaining legit tickets through a licensed agency.

Wagner's Grandsons Pep Up Opera at Bayreuth; Traditionalists Yowl

By HAZEL GUILD

Bayreuth, July 9.

This little resort city is spanking clean and all brushed up for its annual international onslaught of visitors—the 50,000 people due to swarm in for the famed Richard Wagner Festival, which gets under way July 23.

Wolfgang Wagner's new production of "Tristan and Isolde" starts this year's month-long Wagner season — and as yet, there are none of the accusations, slurs in the press and battles that marred last year's event.

The Wagner brothers, grandsons of composer Richard, have set opera ahead a few generations with their super-modern staging, tricky lighting, starkly simple costuming, and eye-catching dramatic effects. But last year, when they dressed "Der Meistersinger" up in

Anne Frank Becomes Nat'l Heroine In Germany Via 'Frank' Play, Book

Frankfurt, July 2.

Story of a girl becoming a heroine following her death, after she has become famous through a book and a play, is nothing particularly new. But when the girl is Anne Frank, who died of starvation while hiding from persecution because her family was Jewish, and when the place is West Germany, the story is news here.

With the opening of the play, "Diary of Anne Frank" last fall at innumerable city theatres in Germany, the young girl has been raised virtually to the status of a saint in West Germany. The play is continuing as one of the most popular legit vehicles in Germany, and Anne Frank has become the symbol of the continuing fight against Nazism and the persecution of any victimized people here. She is probably the most famous figure for the young German youth of today.

As a strengthening of German-American relations, some of the German stages, in towns which have a large U.S. soldier segment, have presented "Diary" with an English commentary.

On the June 12 anniversary of her birth, many threatres throughout Germany, including the Kleines Haus here, staged special performances of the play.

At Frankfurt, where she was born 28 years ago, the Pauls Church held a special hour of religious observance June 12, with a plea for humanity, tolerance and understanding between people, and with Georg Solti conducting the Frankfurt Opera House Orchestra in a musical program.

The house of Ganghoferstrasse where Anne Frank lived in Frankfurt has been turned into a public museum, and now has a record number of daily visitors, making it second as a tourist attraction to

Egypt Makes Spaniard Out of Porter's 'Paris'

Tel Aviv, July 2.

The following story was told in Jerusalem by a refugee from Colonel Nasser's Egypt:

One of the top hits last fall was Cole Porter's "I Love Paris," and its most popular recording was the German version as sung by Caterina Valente—"Ganz Paris traeumt von der Liebe" (All Paris Dreams of Love). In Cairo's night clubs, both the original and the German version were sung by foreign and local singers till the French-British campaign began, when the singing and broadcasting of the tune were immediately banned.

With the crisis subsiding and French-British-Egyptian relations returning slowly to almost normal, the authorities were asked whether the song may be performed again. The reply was affirmative, but with a string attached. In all versions, "Paris" must be replaced by "Madrid."

ELMER WIENER JOINS BROOKLYN ACADEMY

Elmer Wiener, New York concert manager and press agent, is joining the Brooklyn Academy of Music staff to handle promotion and press relations. An ex-newshound, Wiener's show biz credits include experience as an impresario in his own right, some 13 seasons handling press for Cleveland's Met Opera seasons, in addition to chores in legit stock, vaude-film houses, trade expos headlining Hollywood names, and a stint as radio director of an agency.

Prior to hiring out to William McKelvy Martin, the Brooklyn Academy's new topper Wiener most recently was with the Friedberg Management, where he booked the Westminster Choir on its recent five-months world tour under ANTA auspices.

Director Martin assumed the Academy reins July 1, succeeding Julius Bloom.

Concert Showmen Scout Strictly Pro Battle Of Violinists & Pianists

By WOLFE KAUFMAN

Paris, July 2.

The Marguerite Long-Jaques Thibaud bi-annual music contest has just ended in Paris. That's a one-sentence news item for limited audiences. But the story of what this contest is, and how it is run, is very much worth telling. And worth hearing about.

In the first place, this contest is not a come-one-come all affair. It is open only to pianists and violinists. And all the contestants must be "finished" artists, ready for the concert stage. No amateurs. No beginners. As a matter of fact all but a few of the contestants this year were pianists or violinists who had already performed publicly many times. One of the contesting Japanese violinists, for instance (he didn't win) came here to compete from a trans-continental American tour under major auspices. In other words, all the contestants are pros.

The contest (or 'concours' as it

Frankfurt, June 9.

William Wyler is the latest Hollywoodite to go venture on his own in foreign co-production.

Wyler is planning an American-Austrian co-production with Paula Wessely Films of Vienna. Film will be based on the life of Duke von Reichstadt, and Audrey Hepburn will play one of the leads.

India in 'Banning' Mood; Unknown If Films Affected

Though lacking confirmation from its own representatives, Charles Egan, in Delhi, the Motion Picture Export Assn. early this week appeared unruffled by the report that India has banned the importation of all foreign films for an initial period of three months.

According to a dispatch to The N. Y. Times, hundreds of other items, including books, magazines and periodicals, were affected by the order which was designed to save foreign exchange.

A Ministry of Commerce and Industry spokesman said that items for which orders already had been placed would be permitted to enter.

This left up in the air the question of the American films which are brought in on an annual license. In any case, N. Y. execs opined that a goodly supply of unreleased pictures was still on hand in India and easily would last three months. Hollywood already has been restricted by the Indians. For the period from January through June, importation of U.S. pix was halved, if not in practice then at least on paper via regulations.

The Indian market is worth about $1,000,000 annually in remittances to New York though only a fraction of the theatres in India play American pictures. Number ranges from 75 to 350. India is one of the world's toughest markets as far as censorship is concerned.

Charges 'Garment Jungle' Lift on 1937 Play For Federal Theatre Project

Columbia Pictures and producer Harry Kleiner were named defendants in a $650,000 piracy suit brought Monday (8) in N.Y. Federal Court by playwright Benjamin Simcoe, also known as Benjamin Simkhovitch. Action seeks an injunction to restrain Col from distributing, licensing or exhibiting "The Garment Jungle."

Simcoe charges that "Jungle," a current Col release, was lifted from his play, "Garment Center." Latter, according to the complaint, was written by Simcoe in 1937 and was produced the following year by the Federal Theatre at Maxine Elliott's Theatre, N.Y. He assertedly made additions to the work in 1941.

It Is Closer For Stoll Opera House Built By Hammerstein

London, July 9.

After an extended continental tour, behind and around the Iron Curtain, Sir Laurence Olivier brought the Stratford Memorial Theatre production of "Titus Andronicus" to the Stoll Theatre for a five weeks' season. London echoed the high praise showered on this goriest of Shakespeare's tragedies, as directed by Peter Brook.

In the welter of murder, mutilation and rape, Olivier emerges stalwart in the title role. Vivien Leigh is wanly effective and mute as his martyred daughter. At curtain fall Olivier made a speech of thanks in six languages, representing the countries covered by the tour.

This production will end existence of Grandpere Oscar Hammerstein's former opera house on Kingsway, now doomed to demolition.

State Dept. Pre-Editing of Questions To Communists Not U.S. Way—Ike

The President of the United States last week replied unequivocally to the proposal that all questions put to Communist leaders in radio or video interviews be made subject to advance clearance by the U. S. State Dept. and the Counter Intelligence Agency.

Radical measure was proposed in a resolution sponsored by Ray J. Madden Indiana Democrat. Question of whether such restrictions "can serve a useful purpose" was put to President Eisenhower at his weekly news conference. He replied:

"I say this: That our tradition of a free press and free access to knowledge and to opinion is not only very great but it is guaranteed really by the Constitution, and I would think any such process as you talk about would align us with that type of country where governmental, political governmental, action is a dominant factor instead of the kind of democratic processes that we believe in so thoroughly."

HAWAIIAN SHOWMEN FEAR TAX IMPACT

Honolulu, July 9.

New 3½ percent gross income tax, effective today, is not only spiraling the cost of living but is rocketing it to an all time high.

Nitery and theatre sources are anxiously waiting to see how much of the hometowners' dollar will be earmarked for entertainment.

City property tax is doubling. Haircuts are up to $1.50. Food prices are being upped. And a cup of coffee at most cafes rose today to 15c, a shocker here.

The Late Bert Brecht Kicks Up Ideological Row in West Germany

Berlin, July 2.

Bert Brecht, who was a controversial figure during his lifetime, still has the power to provoke agitation on both the artistic and political levels. The late dramatist-director-producer has just been the subject of a hot public dispute here.

The issue arose when the West German Foreign Office in Bonn announced that it was not granting a subsidy for the recent guest appearance of the Theatre der Stadt Bochum at the Paris International Festival of Art. The reason given was that the drama group intended to perform a Brecht play in the French capital.

There was a lively debate in the Bundestag, during which Foreign

Lyrical Hypno-Test

London, July 9.

Greek born cabaret singer Kitza Kazacos, who can chirp in seven languages, learns her songs by hypnosis. She recently had a new Spanish number to sing in a BBC-TV show. Some of the pronunciation was a little tricky, so she took the score along to a hypnotist, told him how the Spanish should be pronounced and went off into a "deep sleep."

The hypnotist read the song over to her several times and told her she had nothing to worry about. And that was that. Miss Kazacos was word-perfect on the show. She says she finds the treatment a "wonderful tonic."

SKOURAS FOR STUDIO AS BIZ HQ

Expects Hierarchy Approval for Filmed 'Nun's Story'—With Realistic Exit

Director Fred Zinnemann said in Gotham this week (8) that he expected to have the fullest endorsement of the Roman Catholic Church for his upcoming "The Nun's Story," which he plans to put before the cameras in early December. Picture, on which Robert Anderson is doing the screenplay, will be shot at Cinnecitta in Rome and in the Belgian Congo. Audrey Hepburn will be starred.

Zinnemann said he was determined to capture the spirit of the Kathafine Hulme story as written, with the ending (the nun leaving her order) to be left intact. "Nuns are human beings, and we must give them dimension. I've talked to a lot of nuns since drawing this assignment (from Warner Bros.), and I found they react as individuals and not as a type."

He added that he planned to do "The Nun's Story" in terms of its conflicts. "It is a glimpse behind a curtain," he said. "It is the story of a person who has a fault—she cannot obey. Eventually, she loses that struggle. But I have no intention, in any way, of presenting her dilemma with any comment. The film will be done with respect, and with no overtone of sensationalism."

The director said the book had

12 Staff Producers, And Universal Likes System; Daff: 'For Us It Pays'

Universal is neither concerned about producers leaving the studio to accept participation deals elsewhere nor does it contemplate changing its system of making its own pictures, Alfred E. Daff, executive v. p., emphatically stated in Gotham this week. Daff's comment came as a result of a query relating to the exit of Aaron Rosenberg and Albert Zugsmith from the U staff to accept participation arrangements at Metro. The U exec's reply also took into consideration the fact that U was the only Hollywood studio operating without participation agreements for producers.

"Our system has proven a good system for Universal," Daff said. "There's nothing wrong with participations if its suits other companies to operate that way, but our policy has proven successful for us and we see no reason why we should change it." Replying to critics who have called U's clinging to the staff producer system as "old fashioned," Daff noted that U's profits may also be referred to as "old fashioned."

U presently has 12 staff producers on the lot. Each one will

KEEFE BRASSELLE'S LONDON FILM FIRM

Actor Keefe Brasselle is one of the principals of a new indie production firm which will co-produce six pictures with a British outfit —Vicar Productions, headed by Nat Miller.

New company, Pugach-Weitz-Brasselle Productions Ltd., will launch its program with "Death Over My Shoulder," which starts at Walton on the Thames Studios in London on July 22. Sam Wanamaker will co-star with Brasselle, latter also to produce and direct. Brasselle's wife, Arlene De Marco, one of the singing De Marco Sisters, will have one of the top femme roles in the film.

Brasselle is also negotiating to produce "Irma Goes to London," in which he will co-star with Marie Wilson. Also on Brasselle's agenda are "Journey of Fire," a story of the Bengal Lancers, and "I, Gangster" an action melodrama. All the pix will be filmed in London.

Brasselle and Miss De Marco leave for London tomorrow (Thurs.).

WELL-BOOKED LOLLOBRIGIDA

Lined Up for Three Films After Childbirth

Rome, July 9.

Gina Lollobrigida is set as star of "Solomon and Sheba," which Edward Small and Arthur Hornblow Jr. are co-producing in this country in association with the star's own producing company. King Vidor will direct. Doesn't roll until next summer (1958). Releasing via United Artists.

Miss Lollobrigida, who is expecting a child late this month, stars first in "Anna di Brooklyn," to be produced by Marcello Girosi for RKO distribution. This will star Vittorio DeSica and be directed by Edmund Goulding.

Lollobrigida will also do "Imperial Venus" this winter for Rizzoli Films.

'JET PILOT' AIRBORNE FINALLY—UNIVERSAL

After being in mothballs for almost five years, Howard Hughes' "Jet Pilot" will finally take off on Sept. 20. The picture, made during Hughes' regime at RKO, is one of the pictures turned over to Universal when RKO decided to abandon its domestic distribution organization.

U has scheduled openings for the picture in key and sub-key situations from coast to coast. According to Charles J. Feldman, U's sales v.p., the company has appropriated $1,000,000 advertising budget for the picture. Sum is said to be the largest ever alloted for a picture released by U.

Sees Expanded Import Market Via 'La Strada'

Dubbed version of the Italian "La Strada," in distribution via Trans-Lux Distributing, will serve to open many new spots for foreign films, in the opinion of George Roth, Lux's veep-sales chief.

While the "La Strada" performance has been spotty in some areas, and particularly on the Coast, Roth said the Italo Academy Award winner elsewhere had outdrawn strong American product. He estimated that the film would rack up some 6,000 dates and should gross eventually up to $1,500,000.

Roth said he war certain that the "La Strada" experience would encourage many theatremen to look for "more of the same" in the future. Some spots topbilled the picture over well-publicized American features. Foreign films generally have made progress in recent months, Roth felt.

Trans-Lux, with an office on the Coast, now has opened another one in Chicago.

KIM STANLEY'S FILM DEBUT

Sets 'Goddess' Exteriors In West, Studios In Bronx

In an unusual cross-country switch, exteriors for "The Goddess," new Paddy Chayefsky film for Columbia, will be filmed in Hollywood while the inferior scenes will be shot at the Gold Medal (formerly Biograph) Studio in the Bronx.

Kim Stanley, Broadway stage performer, will make her motion picture debut as the star of the film. The screenplay, an original by Chayefsky, is a story of a small town southern girl who achieves Hollywood stardom only to discover that her material success has not brought her happiness. The leading character, it's said, bears some resemblance to Marilyn Monroe who is reported to have nixed the assignment.

Milton Perlman will produce and John Cromwell will direct the picture.

SEES GEOGRAPHY EFFICIENCY FOE

Cognizant of the need for a closer East-West liaison and understanding, 20th-Fox prexy Spyros P. Skouras declares flatly he favored moving his entire administrative setup under one roof at the Coast.

Skouras wouldn't be pinned down on exactly when such a move might take place, but indicated that it might be done sooner rather than later.

"This business of being 3,000 miles apart is no good," he maintained. "The studios should have a better grasp of global film needs, and the boys in the east should be better acquainted with the day-in, day-out problems of studo operations."

The 20th topper said that, if and when the move takes place, it would involve all departments of the company. Since the departure of Darryl F. Zanuck from the studio helm, Skouras has been more involved than heretofor in production planning and details.

It's known that 20th may convert part of its lot to commercial purposes, and that it may build on it. It's quite possible that the home-office staff would be moved in next to the production plant.

Several of the companies have their center of gravity on the Coast, but none have actually gone as far as moving there lock, stock and barrel. Most feel that the foreign market can not be adequately handled from the Coast, with Gotham a natural center of communications to boot.

Mirisch Freres May Skip Allied

Hollywood, July 9.

Harold and Walter Mirisch, Allied Artists' execs whose pacts expire at end of February, are considering formation of their own indie production company at that time. They are discussing releasing deals with other companies, notably United Artists.

Harold is v.p. and large stockholder in Allied; Walter is AA's exec-producer. Possibility still exists brothers will decide to remain with Allied.

Metro Seeking 'Porgy and Bess'; Shiny Proposal Offered Goldwyn

Metro, which released Samuel Goldwyn's "Guys and Dolls," now appears to be pushing for distribution rights to the producer's upcoming "Porgy and Bess." Film company is offering unusually attractive terms to Goldwyn, being anxious to regain its prestige position with top-rung product such as "Porgy," though all-Negro, is expected to be.

Details are being kept under wraps but it's believed M-G—or, specifically, M-G president Joseph R. Vogel—has initiated talks on the basis of M-G taking 20% of the domestic gross and 22½% of foreign as its share of the distribution money. Additionally, M-G would advance coin for national ads, prints and trailers and pay for all trade publication insertions.

Finalization of any deal is not expected for some time, particularly since Goldwyn has blueprinted a long-range "Porgy" production schedule.

ROSENFIELD AS COLUMNIST

W. A. Payne Now Dallas News' Show Biz Ed

Dallas, July 9.

John Rosenfield, amusement editor of the Dallas Morning News since 1925, has relinquished his post and now is writing a daily column for the paper. William A. Payne, assistant city editor, took over the amusement post.

Rosenfield was awarded the 1956 Film Critic of the Year Award in Los Angeles in February. At that time Rosenfield was hospitalized in New York with a mild heart attack.

MAY BAN SMOKING IN BRITISH CINEMAS

London, July 9.

A report from the British Medical Research Council stating that smoking, particularly cigaret smoking, can cause lung cancer, may result in a complete ban on smoking in all theatres and picture houses. At present the majority of West End legit theatres do not allow smoking, but picture houses throughout Britain permit smoking at all times.

A spokesman for one of the largest chains of picture theatres in this country said that if the British Medical Assn. made an appeal to cut out smoking, they would most certainly cooperate. Several indie managements say they would welcome a no-smoking rule Although to a great number of theatres this could mean the loss of quite a lot of revenue on tobacco sales, the main knock would be felt by the Treasury, which at present reaps around $1,960,000,000 a year in tobacco taxes, mostly from the sale of cigarets.

Crosby With Lancaster Iffy

Hollywood, July 9.

Bing Crosby is being paged by Hecht-Hill-Lancaster to co-star opposite Burt Lancaster in "The Rabbit Trap."

Crosby is interested in the project, but there will be a rewrite of the script to build up Lancaster's role, so he's withholding his final okay until he sees the finished script.

Add Marriage Sacrament, Escape Legion 'C' Rating On 'Love In Afternoon'

Gary Cooper marries Audrey Hepburn in "Love in the Afternoon" and the Church has given its blessings. Picture of that title, in the form presented to the Catholic National Legion of Decency, had been threatened with a "C" (Condemned) rating because Cooper and Miss Hepburn engaged in much love in the afternoon and at the end they simply were seen going off on a train together.

The Billy Wilder-Allied Artists production subsequently was changed via additional dialog as spoken by Maurice Chevalier, who appears in the picture as Miss Hepburn's father. His words get across the idea that the two romancers are on the way to the altar, thus making everything legal.

Legion still had its reservations (film "tends to ridicule the virtue of purity by reason of an undue emphasis on illicit love," said the reviewing organization). But the "C" was escaped; Legion's rating now is a "B"—which means "morally objectionable in part for all."

Holiday No B.O. Hypo; '80 Days' No. 1, 'Prince' 2d, 'Sun' 3d, 'Wonders' 4th, 'Success' 5th

Long Independence Day weekend was regarded as of doubtful benefit to the b.o. by exhibitors in most keys covered by VARIETY. For fair skies and torrid temperatures tended to lure potential patrons to beaches and resorts and the hopefully anticipated holiday surge to the wicket failed to materialize.

Exceptions to the rule were those houses with either fresh product of blockbuster proportions or time-tested longrunners. In the latter category falls "Around World in 80 Days" (UA), which again leads this frame by a wide margin. Winding up second is "Prince and Showgirl" (WB). It ran third last week.

"Island in Sun" (20th), now in extended runs for the most part, dropped to third from its previous No. 2 position. "Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) is fourth, same as last week. "Sweet Smell of Success" (UA), with more playdates this sesh, has forged up to fifth by dint of fancy showings. Hot on its heels is "Bernardine" (20th) in sixth spot. This Pat Boone vehicle appears to be cornering the teenagers.

"Ten Commandments" (Par), with an established b.o. rep, is seventh followed by "Fire Down Below" (Col), the Rita Hayworth starrer. Rounding out the Top Nine is "Something of Value" (M-G), which dropped down three places from last week's sixth berth.

Runners-up are "Beau James" (Par), playing in only four keys currently; "Man on Fire" (M-G) and "Gunfight at the O.K. Corral" (Par).

Of likely championship material is "Pride and Passion" (UA), excellent in L.A., massive in Chicago and big in New York. Also due to be heard from is "Delicate Delinquent" (Par). This Jerry Lewis starrer is sock in D.C., fancy in N.Y., smash in Cincinnati and strong in Philly, among other dates.

"Johnny Tremain" (BV), neat in Boston, is good in Denver and big in Chicago. "Tammy and Bachelor" (U), fine in Minneapolis, is neat in Toronto and good in Denver.

"Bambi" (BV) (reissue) is terrific at the Viking, a Philly art house. Disappointing this frame are "Love in the Afternoon" (AA) and "St. Joan" (UA). Former is fair in Frisco, slow in Philly and L.A., but good in Seattle. "Joan" is mild in N.Y., lagging in L.A., slow in Minneapolis and fair in Boston.

ASSOCIATED BRITISH EQUALS PREVIOUS 20%

London, July 9.

Trading profit for the Associated British Picture Corp. for the year ended March 31, was $7,278,546—$1,608,692 up on the figure for last year which was $5,669,854. At the annual meeting, to be held on Aug. 7, the directors will recommend a final divdend of 12½% less tax on the ordinary stock, which will make a total distribution for the year of 20%; the same as last year.

In his annual statement, Sir Philip Warter, the chairman, points out that the theatre profits were maintained at last year's level only by increasng admission prices and by the most rigorous economy measures.

3-Feature Policy Okayed by Jap FTC

Tokyo, July 2.

Showing of three pictures on the same program was okayed by the Fair Trade Commission. The question was raised since with the mushrooming of theatres, competition has forced many theatres to adopt a three-feature policy.

Shochiku, Toho, Daiei and Toei of Japan's majors had previously included a provision in the contracts forbidding the use of three features. Commission decision overrules this and the contact clause must be struck out since it violates an anti-trust law.

It Was a Bumpy First Two Years, But Schwartz Sanguine Re DCA

Strategic-minded exhibitors, preparing for their own future welfare, should set aside one or two days a week for foreign films, Fred J. Schwartz, president of Distributors Corp. of America, declared in Gotham last week.

"The audience is there," he insisted. "It's just a question of exposure. Given systematic and patient build-up of these attractions, and the theatres will create their own at least a partial answer to the shortage of product."

Schwartz and DCA sales chief Irving Wormster admitted the past two years had been "a tough struggle," but that DCA was now at the point where income balanced costs and overhead. Company operates 15 offices througout the country and expects to add another four or five. Its release volume is about 30 films a year. "We now finally have enough product to sustain us for the next 12 months," Schwartz said. "Now we can be more selective."

DCA now plans to have between three to five top "A" pictures, two or three lowbudget exploitation shows, and five to ten of "the best foreign films that we can pick up."

Favor Co-Producing

Aim is still to coproduce wherever possible, either in the U.S. or abroad. In Europe, Schwartz said this was important so as to "introduce the flavor necessary for the States without destroying the native quality of the pictures." Neither Schwartz nor Wormser appeared particularly enthusiastic about dubbing films into English, though several DCA pix are being dubbed for the mass market.

Schwartz pointed out that for "Battle Hell" (Yangtse Incident), which DCA coproduced with Herbert Wilcox in London, a dialog di-

KRUSHEN'S COAST TRIP

Heating up Next Batch of U.A. Releases in Chi, L.A.

Mori Krushen, exploitation chief of United Artists, left N.Y. yesterday (Tues.) for a two-week trip to Chicago and Los Angeles. He'll hold a series of sales strategy confabs with circuits and exhibitors on new UA releases.

On the front burners currently are "Time Limit," "Paths of Glory" "Fuzzy Pink Nightgown" and "Witness for Prosecution."

Yanks Snub Czech, Spanish Fests

There'll be no American films at either the Czech Karlovy-Vary or the Spanish San Sebastian film festivals. The failure to go into Karlovy-Vary ties in with the Czechs' uncooperative attitude re the purchase of U.S. films. They first discussed a deal, then walked out of it, apparently for political reasons. RKO's "The Brave One" was, at one point, suggested as a suitable entry for Karlovy-Vary. Choice was later nixed, reportedly at the urgings of the State Dept.

As for San Sebastian, MPEA faces various problems in sending films into a country which it has boycotted for close to two years.

1949 Cannes Palace To House Another Fest

Paris, July 9.

So that the million dollar Film Palace in Cannes, built in 1949 and utilized only once a year, should not lie fallow all year between fests a secondary-type fest will be inaugurated this year. It will run from Oct. 8-18 and will be monickered The Festival of Great Works of the Cinema.

World film museums will be allowed to submit and suggest past film masterpieces (talkies only) and a special commission will make the final choices.

Czechs Co-Produce With Russia, Poland, France; Unusual Red Plot: Sex

Karlovy Vary, July 9.

Czech film production still stays to a steady 20 to 25 features per year at the modern Barandov studios outside of Prague. Recently the Czechs have had some coproduction with Russia, various satellites and even some Western nations, and will be doing location work around Europe.

There is now an East German-Czech pic rolling, "Bitter Love," directed by Vaclav Gajer. Pic will be made in both DEFA and Czech studios, plus split exteriors. Concerns a love affair between a Czech deported laborer and a German girl during the war. German actress Eva Kotthaus plays opposite Czech Ludek Munzar.

Russo-Czech feature will be "Men Walk in the Dark" with Czech scripting but Russo direction. Poland is also on the list for three pix with first to be "Faithfully Yours" about a Czech on a Polish holiday who gets mixed up with a Polish girl though he is married. Unusual for Commies. Plot will work out quite morally. Other ventures include a Polish ballet, "Mr. Twardowski," plus another comedy by a Polish writer, "You and Me."

A French-Czech coproduction is in the works with French players Robert Hossein and Marina Vlady cast.

Hugo Fregonese's 'Quixote' Up For Cooper-Costello

Madrid, July 9.

Hugo Fregonese, Argentine film director, is now in Madrid setting the most ambitious project of his career. He speaks of a $4,000,000 version of "Don Quixote" which he hopes to ready for a January '58 start. Cognizant that Mike Todd may also tackle "Don Quixote," Fregonese says he hopes to get there first with the most.

Moving on all fronts to jell commitments for cast, U.S. release, Spain coproducer and script, the producer-director has given local scribe Carlos Blanco an Aug. 31 deadline to ready thet initial screenplay. While project hinges largely on Gary Cooper's approval of the script, Fregonese is taking no chances and will have screenplay dialogued by a prominent Hollywood screenwriter who will also act as associate producer.

Idea for the Cooper-Fregonese version of the Cervantes classic was born in '53 during shooting in Mexico of "Blowing Wild" (Warners). Fregonese says he has at last united the necessary artistic talent and financial backing to get "Quixote" moving.

Lou Costello is being sought as Sancho Panza and Madrid film circles consider the Cooper-Costello combo will find favor with Cervantes Societies throughout Spain. Fregonese says he will cast every role with a major star.

20th Century-Fox is currently dickering with Fregonese for U.S. release and a color scope 55mm treatment. In Madrid, Fregonese is scouting local producers and intends to sign a coproduction pact before heading south to Torremolinos. Principal reasons for a local coproducer, he says, is to unload on strong Spanish shoulders such delicate questions as government cooperation, a clean censorship bill of health and a rallying of the "Don Quixote" clans around the Fregonese-Cooper version.

(In addition to Todd and Fregonese, Dino DeLaurentiis has also announced a "Don Quixote" to star French comic Jacques Tati. Wags here predict a shortage of windmills).

Dead, Pedro Infante Twice Hailed

Won Berlin and Own Land's 'Best Actor' Awards—'Road of Life' Clean-Sweeps Mex Acad 'Oscars'

Mexico City, July 9.

A posthumous award was made at the Hotel Del Prado ceremonies here to Pedro Infante, romantic singer-actor who died recently in an airplane crash. This is the same Mexican film player singled out for "best actor" award last week at the Berlin Film Festival because of his work in "Tizoc."

"El Camino de la Vida" ("The Road of Life"), story of a group of destitute local newsboys, with this 632-year-old town as setting, produced by Cinematografica Latino Americana, a pic that in theme and treatment is felt here to match the Italian school at his best, was "Oscared" as the top Mexican film of 1956 by the Mexican Academy of Cinematographic Arts and Sciences. "Road" also copped prizes for direction, Alfonso Corona Blake (a newcomer); and story, Matilde and Eduardo Landeta, and top actor, Victor Manuel Mendoza.

Other winners in the Mexican industry:

First supports: Jorge Martinez de Hoyos, Sara Garcia.

Bit players: Pedro D'Aguillon, Lucy Gallardo.

Juvenile: Luz Maria Aguilar.

Child actor: Humberto Jimenez Pons.

Adaptation: Arberto Gout.

Camera: Rosalin Solano.

Mounting: Salvador Lozano.

Editing: Jorge Bustos.

Sound: Luis Fernandez.

Music: Gustavo Cesar Carreon.

A special award was made Francisco Gomez "for his persistency and technical capacity in establishing Mexico's first color laboratory for the service of the cinematographic industry."

New York Sound Track

Jan Sedlacek, chief of Karlovy Vary Film Festival in Czechoslovakia argues that the U.S. should have entered the fest officially instead of offering to send either Allied's "The Friendly Persuasion", or Paramount's "Funny Face," already shown at the Cannes Festival. Karlovy actually started with a pic that had been withdrawn from Cannes so as not to risk offending Catholic tastes. Pic is "The Good Solider Schweik" based on a Czech classic.

ON AND OFF BOOZ REPORT

FILM ROW COSTS IN '56: $34-MIL

By GENE ARNEEL

Branch operations, with home-office sales and advertising not included, cost the six top companies $34,000,000 in 1956. These same outfits—Paramount, 20th-Fox, Metro, Warners, Columbia and Universal—had total domestic film rentals of $239,000,000 in the same year, meaning the exchange system overhead nicked the distributors for 14% of their income.

This kind of outlay, and how a good part of it could be saved, is the subject of the report made by Booz, Allen & Hamilton, management consultants. Hired by the Motion Picture Assn. of America, BA&H's study and recommended efficiencies covered the six aforementioned outfits and Allied Artists. Excluded are United Artists, which was not an MPAA member until a couple of weeks ago; Republic, whose status in the theatrical picture business has become vague, and RKO, which last year collapsed its domestic distribution setup.

Booz Allen has outlined two proposed cutback programs, the first being short range (one to three years) and the second going five to 10 years. Basis of the latter, if adopted, would be the elimination of the branch exchange system as it is now known.

Part One would comprise; Centralization of billings and accounting work, modification of credit and collection practices and consolidation of shipping and backroom procedures. It's pointed out that top efficiency would be reached if all companies go along with these ideas and the potential saving for each of them per year would be up to $830,000.

No determination is made of the amounts that could be saved via the long range program but these would be measured in the millions, it's inferred, if there's unanimous participation and adherence to the schedules.

Report suggests that each company have its own electronic computer and date processing centre along with only five to seven regional sales and booking offices. Booking decisions would be made by a "mechanical brain" machine. A few regional shipping and inspection centres would be maintained by all companies on a consolidated basis.

Such changes obvious would represent radical departures from the traditional setup, under which the companies operate branches in 32 key cities and in most cases handle backroom work in each area on an individual basis. The overhaul, also, would mean tremendous cutbacks in employment.

Timetable

Booz, Allen also mapped out a timetable for putting the short range plan in work, as follows—

First two months: Present recommendations to MPAA company heads, determine who is willing to go along, and appoint an implementation committee.

Next two months: Decide on basis for operation of consolidated backrooms.

Next two: Establish ground rules for participation.

Next two: Select three to five

Think-Machine To Predict B.O.?

Hollywood, July 9.

Film producers for years have been trying to hit upon some magic formula whereby they might predict the financial return of a given picture. Now indie Nicholas Nayfack has come up with the answer—he hopes.

If it works, Nayfack will find himself in the comfortable position of being able to chart future production operations without threat of ulcers, in the knowledge that much of the gamble of picture-making has been removed. He came upon his solution strictly by chance, while in production of his first indie, "The Invisible Boy." Remington-Rand's electronic brain, Univac, which plays a pivotal role, did the trick.

Nayfack brainstormed the idea while watching a scene featuring Univac. If Univac could predict results in other fields, why not motion pictures? He immediately contacted a Cal Tech scientist (Univac sequences have been worked out for film through the offices of this institution) on the practicality of the plan. Given a go-signal—with certain reservations by the somewhat doubting scientist—producer and his research department supplied enough pertinent data for scientist to whip up a mathematical equation.

The solution came through in short order—picture should gross $3,600,000.

Since "Boy" is a sequel to Metro's "Forbidden Planet," produced last year by Nayfack for a return of $3,400,000, part of the equation was based on the analysis of differences between the two films. These were weighed as to relative importance, and then gross of new film was estimated as against that chalked up by its predecessor.

Also analyzed were the attendance curve for science-fiction films generally, inflationary rises in ticket prices, population growth according to census reports, number of films in competition, number of families watching tv. Also charted were attendance curves at specific times of the year, the producer's boxoffice record. Such an intangible as a news tie-in with the International Geophysical Year from a public interest standpoint likewise was clocked.

Nayfack is holding his breath that computations by Univac will prove correct. If they are, from here on in he'll devise his formula and compute the data before the actual start of production. It'll be like betting on a sure thing, producer opines.

FINAL 'REALISM' NEEDS MERGERS?

By FRED HIFT

The first reaction has come to the management survey reports, made by Booz, Allen & Hamilton on the order of the Motion Picture Assn. of America. The response, from the president of one of the major companies, is strictly negative.

Sum and substance of his argument—without going into details of the recommendatons resulting from the survey—was that the resultant savings would be piddlin' and almost not worth the effort.

"The only thing that would make sense, in the long run, is the complete merger of companies," he said. He added he knew of no such merger talks at present.

While the Booz, Allen & Hamilton report outlined short and long-term programs to effect economies in distribution, a good part of the survey was slanted to the individual companies, showing where they stood in relation to their competition.

The report recommended consolidation of branch and backroom facilities and the streamlining of billings procedures via the use of IBM machines. It also suggested centralization of collections at the homeoffices, the use of electronic computers aiming at a more scientific distribution of prints, etc.

One company, 20th-Fox, is currently experimenting with the use of IBM machine billing at the homeoffice for its New Haven exchange.

Some executives feel that the management survey would be given greater consideration had the industry, in recent months, not switched to a new policy of stepping up production. Thus, while some of the distributors would definitely benefit by a merged operation at least of the physical facilities, others now maintain that they've got enough product to keep all hands busy and at work.

As is true abroad, the question of what it would cost to close the backrooms, as against what would be gained, must be decided. Some of the companies definitely feel that savings of $5,000,000 or $6,000,000—such as are suggested in the Booz, Allen & Hamilton report—are almost not worthwhile in the light of loss of control, etc., that would be suffered.

Though the industry is probably less competitive these days than it used to be in its youth, many of its executives still retain a fiercely individualistic spirit that shrinks from the danger of a loss of identity in any area. Furthermore, the companies' leadership, with comparatively few exceptions, is strongly traditionalist in its thinking, sometimes to its own detriment and in the face of changed or changing conditions.

While film people in recent years have become survey conscious, it is fair to say that very few overall studies (and recommendations)—other than those made by individual companies for their own uses—are ever acted upon. Repeated comment by execs is that surveys, particularly on the business side, never tell them anything that they didn't know already. Same can be said, to a large extent, of the current Booz, Allen & Hamilton study.

Spotlight Film Row Salaries

Field personnel obviously would be affected (i.e., payrolls would be considerably trimmed) if any substantial part of the Booz, Allen & Hamilton report on exchange system economies is adopted. Here's a representative breakdown on top annual salaries paid salesmen and branch managers in various key cities:

	Salesmen	Branch Managers
New York	$9,752	$23,725
Washington	9,292	13,780
New Haven	6,211	9,740
Minneapolis	7,121	16,900
Kansas City	7,403	12,680
Atlanta	7,343	12,900
Boston	6,698	14,300
Los Angeles	7,023	17,000

'Band of Angels' Slavery Angles May Rile Dixie

Hollywood, July 9.

There appears to be a Southern rebellion also looming against Warner Bros.' upcoming "Band of Angels," following on the heels of protests from the south at Darryl F. Zanuck's "Island in the Sun" over its inclusion of racial problems. It has Clark Gable as a slave-buyer.

Execs of southern circuits have expressed alarm at scenes in "Angels," in which Negro actor Sidney Poitier slaps Yvonne De Carlo, and those in which he also manhandles Patric Knowles. Consequently, WB expects southern theatregoers will protest over the master-menial problems in the Clark Gable-Miss De Carlo starrer.

However, Warners is going ahead with plans for a big New Orleans opening July 18 despite the apprehension expressed by southern exhibs. First screenings are skeded at Dallas and Memphis this week, and exhibs fear film will meet the same opposition shown "Island," which so far has played only in border states, although biz in those areas has stimulated near-future "Island" bookings in Texas, Virginia and Florida, Jim Crow states.

Limits on Booz, Allen 'X-Rays'

Substantial segment of the American film business submitted itself to economic psychiatry—but limitedly. Most company members of the Motion Picture Assn. of America collectively called in the management consultant firm of Booz, Allen & Hamilton to size up ways and means of saving money without impairing efficiency of operation.

But the film outfits made one thing clear: BA&H would be free to sleuth only the physical process of handling prints from distrib to exhibitor. Specifically ruled out were any gum-shoeing of sales policies and methods, homeoffice operations and executive functions.

Employment of manpower, from the top echelon and on down, obviously overlaps with the physical print processes. As a result, the efficiency experts' report could hardly present a complete picture of what, in BA&H's opinion, could be done in the name of sound economy.

20th So Active Moving to MGM Lot Improbable

The proposed studio merger between Metro and 20th-Fox seems headed for file-and-forget.

Spyros P. Skouras, 20th prexy, disclosed in Gotham that the survey to establish the possibilities of joint studio operation was still going on, but the tenor of his comments appeared negative.

He pointed out that, among other things, 20th was now engaged in a heavy production sked which makes a merger of facilities less desirable (a) because there's a question whether the Metro lot could handle it all, and (b) whether, with so many films on the boards, there's a point to it at all.

20th originally had mulled a merger of facilities with Warner Bros. When that fell through, talks with Metro—and a survey—were initiated.

Skouras said his company probably would remain where it is, using part of the huge Fox lot. There's considerable oil drilling going on at the studio site with nine wells already drilled and producing.

To Create Track Record, Then Seek Release Deal: Castle-White Strategy

Hollywood, July 9.

Old-time methods of film exploitation will be employed by Susina Associates, new indie formed by producer-director William Castle and writer Robb White for a program of five features. They've closed a deal with Bel-Air Productions to use the latter firm's facilities and Bel-Air will participate in the profits of the initialler, "Macabre," which rolls July 23.

As part of the old-fashioned selling campaign, White plans to take to the road for a barnstorming tour with "Macabre," which will be set for selected small houses for original runs. After these pre-release engagements, a regular releasing deal will be sought.

In addition to "Macabre," Susina has acquired "Jungle Fury" and "Up Periscope" and is planning a vidpic series "Our Virgin Island," based on White's best seller of some years back. Property will first be lensed as a feature by British Lion.

Castle, who produced the "Men of Annapolis" series for Ziv TV, said "Macabre" will carry a budget somewhere between $150,000 and $300,000. He's on leave of absence from Ziv.

Podhorzer's New German Export Status in N.Y.

Frankfurt, July 9.

In a move designed to strengthen its position in the American market, Germany's Export-Union has appointed Munio Podhorzer its representative in the States. Podhorzer, who heads his own United German Film Enterprises in N.Y., is currently visiting Germany.

This is the first post-war move by the German industry as such in the U.S., where its films to date have not made much impact. Podhorzer in past years has sought to promote and publicize German pictures via his UGFE, but has enjoyed only fitful support from the Export-Union.

Latted is supported by the German industry and aims to publicize German films in the foreign market. It also gets some government support.

One of the first projects to be undertaken by Podhorzer presumably will be the arranging of German film weeks in the U.S. Groundwork for these "weeks" already has been laid.

Jerome Evans' Job at U

Jerome H. Evans has been named to the newly-created post of eastern promotion manager of Universal. According to Charles Simonelli, the appointment of Evans as well as the naming of Paul Kamey to the newly-created post of assistant eastern publicity manager under Philip Gerard, is part of the company's program of expanding its executive advertising and publicity personnel to meet the company's increasing promotional activity.

Evans, who teaches marketing in the evening division of the Bernard Baruch School of Business Administration of CCNY, has been associated with U for the past 12 years, handling commercial tieups, national promotions, and radio-tv activities.

'DERIVED FROM TV' POISON TO SVENSKAS

Minneapolis, July 9.

Chalk up still one more picture of television genesis to do a comparative boxoffice brody in Minneapolis area. This time it's "Johnny Tremain" which turned in a very ordinary single week at the local RKO Orpheum, failing to win a holdover or moveover.

"Must be that too many of the youngsters have watched 'Tremain' on video," is the conclusion.

Invariably, expanded video fare misses at the local boxoffice, other recent examples being the highly praised "12 Angry Men," "The Bachelor Party" and "The Constant Husband."

Cinerama's Sailing Ship

Honolulu, July 9.

Luxury schooner Te Vega, which formerly sailed between here and Tahiti, is enroute to the South Pacific under charter to Dudley Pictures Corp., whch is filming "Cinerama South Pacific."

Te Vega, a picturesque sailing vessel, has been chartered until October.

Band of Angels
(COLOR)

Clark Gable and Yvonne De Carlo in powerful Old South drama with miscegenation theme skillfully woven into plot. Good prospects.

Hollywood, July 5.

Warner Bros. release. Stars Clark Gable, Yvonne de Carlo; costars Sidney Poitier, Efrem Zimbalist Jr.; features Patric Knowles, Rex Reason, Torin Thatcher, Andrea King, Ray Teal, Russ Evans, Carolle Drake. Directed by Paoul Walsh. Screenplay, John Twist, Ivan Goff, Ben Roberts, based on novel by Robert Penn Warren; camera (Warner-Color), Lucien Ballard; editor, Folmar Blangsted; music, Max Steiner. Previewed June 27, '57. Running time, 125 MINS.

Hamish Bond	Clark Gable
Amantha Starr	Yvonne De Carlo
Rau-Ru	Sidney Poitier
Ethan Sears	Efrem Zimbalist Jr.
Charles de Marigny	Patric Knowles
Seth Parton	Rex Reason
Capt. Canavan	Torin Thatcher
Miss Idell	Andrea King
Mr. Calloway	Ray Teal
Jimmee	Russ Evans
Michele	Carolle Drake
Stuart	Raymond Bailey
Dollie	Tonnie Moore
Aaron Star	William Forrest
Young Manty	Noreen Corcoran

Subject of miscegenation is explored and developed in this colorful production of the Old South. WarnerColor film, shrewdly turned out along showmanship lines to make best use of an unusual story, will come in for some social reaction and accordingly may be specially "exploited." Add to this word-of-mouth fact that Clark Gable and Yvonne De Carlo, both deliver powerful performances. Feature seems cinch to do exceptionally good biz generally despite any sensitivity below Mason-Dixon Line.

Raoul Walsh is in top form in direction of the screenplay by John Twist, Ivan Goff and Ben Roberts. Derived from a Robert Penn Warren novel, screen writers have captured the mood and spirit of the Deep South narrative which deals with a young woman of quality discovering that her mother was a slave. Sold on the auction block to a former slave-trader, unfoldment dwells on the pair's relations, both in New Orleans and later on a plantation up-river when war between the North and South moves area. Beautiful and realistic backgrounds are achieved through locationing in Louisiana.

Gable's characterization is reminiscent of his Rhett Butler in "Gone With the Wind," although there is obviously no paralleling of plot. As former slave-runner turned New Orleans gentleman, with bitter memories of his earlier days, he contributes a warm, decisive portrayal that carries tremendous authority. After he buys femme, instead of relegating her to his slave quarters he treats her as a lady in his household, where romance buds and later she refuses to accept the freedom he offers.

In the best delineation of her career, Miss De Carlo is beautiful as the mulatto, who learns of her true status when she returns from a Cincinnati finishing school to attend her father's funeral. She finds herself a chattel of the heavily-mortgaged estate, due to mother having been a slave, and is dragged off to the block. Actress makes her work count heavily and is ideally cast in role.

As co-star Sidney Poitier, young Negro actor, impresses as Gable's educated protege, whom slaver picked up as an infant in Africa and reared as his son. Character is one of complexities, the young man hating his master for having educated him beyond his station. One of the most dramatic moments occurs when Poitier, now a Union soldier after escaping from slavery, captures Gable to turn him over to Federal forces for having burned his crops against official orders; then arranges his escape with Miss De Carlo, whom he resents for actions not in keeping with her Negro blood.

Strongly cast, too, is Efrem Zimbalist Jr., as a Union officer in love with femme; Patric Knowles, a Southern planter who goes on the make for her; and Torin Thatcher, sea captain and former associate of Gable. Standout performance also is turned in by Carolle Drake, Gable's former quadroon mistress, and Rex Reason and Ray Teal offer effective bits.

I Was a Teenage Werewolf

Tease-titled science-fictioner, okay upper half of exploitation package.

Hollywood, July 5.

American-International release of a Herman Cohen production. Stars Michael Landon, Yvonne Lime, Whit Bissell, Tony Marshall; features Dawn Richard, Barney Phillips, Ken Miller, Cindy Robbins, Michael Rougas, Robert Griffin. Joseph Mell. Directed by Gene Fowler Jr.; story-screenplay, Ralph Thornton; camera, Joseph La Shelle; editor, George Gittens; music, Paul Dunlap. Previewed July 3, '57. Running time, 76 MINS.

Pepi	Vladimir Sokoloff
Mrs Ferguson	Louise Lewis
Bill	John Launer
Chris Stanley	Guy Williams
Mary	Dorothy Crehan

Another in the cycle of regression themes is a combo teenager and science-fiction yarn which should do okay in the exploitation market. American - International will topbill pic with the not-so-good "Invasion of the Saucer Men" as a horror package.

Only thing new about this Herman Cohen production is a psychiatrist's use of a problem teenager who comes to him for help using the youth for an experiment in regression, but it's handled well enough to meet the requirements of this type film. There are plenty of story points which are sloughed over in the Ralph Thornton screenplay, but good performances help overcome deficiencies. Final reels, when the lad turns into a hairy-headed monster with drooling fangs, are inclined to be played too heavily.

Michael Landon delivers a first-class characterization as the high school boy constantly in trouble, and has okay support right down the line. Yvonne Lime is pretty as his girl friend who asks him to go to the psychiatrist, and Whit Bissell handles doctor part capably, although some of his lines are pretty thick. Barney Phillips is competent as a detective trying to straighten out Landon, as is Robert Griffin in role of police chief and Dawn Richard as one of Landon's victims.

Gene Fowler Jr.'s direction is up to standards of the script and Joseph La Shelle's photography leads technical credits. Whit.

Invasion of Saucer Men

Trivial science-fiction.

Policeman	Buddy Mason
Boy in Soda Shop	Orv Mohler

"Invasion of the Saucer Men" is a minor entry for the science-fiction trade. Film suffers from poor use of attempted comedy, and is further handicapped by a haphazard sort of yarn which makes film's 69-minutes' running time seem much more. Pic will be packaged with "I Was a Teenage Werewolf" for release by American-International.

The James H. Nicholson-Robert J. Gurney Jr. production uses the device of a saucer ship from outer space landing its crew of little monsters, to build suspense. Script by Gurney and Al Martin revolves around a pair of elopers getting involved with these little green men, but so many elements are dragged in, including a U. S. Air Force unit which arrives to investigate the space ship, that interest doesn't hold.

Steve Terrell and Gloria Castillo co-star, but haven't much chance other than to look frightened under Edward L. Cahn's direction. Frank Gorshin, in for comedy relief, has no place actually in the jagged story line. Balance of cast don't count for much. Technical credits are stock. Whit.

Outlaw's Son

Outdoor cops 'n' robbers entry. Better-than-average fare. Should do okay b.o.

Hollywood, July 2.

United Artists release of a Bel-Air Production. Stars Dane Clark, Ben Cooper, Lori Nelson; co-stars Ellen Drew; features Charles Watts, Cecile Rogers, Joseph "Bucko" Stafford. Producer, Howard W. Koch. Director, Lesley Selander. Screenplay, Richard Alan Simmons, from Clifton Adams novel. Camera, William Margulies; editor, John F. Schreyer; music, Lex Baxter. Previewed July 1, '57. Running time, 88 MINS.

Nate Blaine	Dane Clark
Jeff Blaine	Ben Cooper
Lila Costain	Lori Nelson
Ruth Sewall	Ellen Drew

Ed Wyatt	John Pickard
Deputy Marshal Ralph Striker	Robert Knapp
Bill Somerson	Les Mitchel

The "Outlaw's Son" has a tendency to gallop off on several plot tangents simultaneously, not all of which pan out. Still, this outdoors cops 'n' robbers entry stacks up as better-than-average fare, which should do okay at the B.O. corral. Dane Clark, Ben Cooper and Lori Nelson have certain followings which might help.

Richard Alan Simmons screenplay, from Clifton Adams novel, follows plot line laid out in title. Son of hot-tempered gunman Clark is Cooper, who tries to adjust to small cowtown society. Townsfolk aren't too friendly, especially after pop's accused of killing the local banker during a holdup.

Also, pic opens with pop's visit to his son, being reared by maiden aunt Ellen Drew. During visit, he teaches his juve boy, played by Joseph "Bucko" Stafford, how to handle a gun. When son interjects a .44 into a schoolyard beef, naturally townfolk don't cotton to that.

Grownup son Cooper becomes casehardened deputy marshal but family hot temper soon gets him in trouble and he throws in with some outlaws to rob a mine payroll. Now-elderly pop returns to scene and goes down shooting to prevent his son following in his footsteps.

Oh, yes. Along story line Aunt Ellen confesses she testified falsely about the bank holdup, to prevent Clark from taking his boy along to a life of crime (couple of other guys done it). Also, when his "respectable" town g.f., Cecile Rogers, throws Cooper over after he gets into trouble, he takes up with fiery and unconventional Miss Nelson and windup promises a permanent union.

Clark registers well as the troubled outlaw, the role fitting his brand of intense dramatics. Cooper does quite well as the muddled young rebel, western-style. Miss Nelson's role isn't fully or logically developed, but she shows considerable promise and attractiveness.

Miss Drew is fine as the fiercely maternal aunt and Charles Watts, as the tough but understanding town mashal, also turns in a strong supporting chore. Among large cast, young Stafford, Eddie Foy III, Miss Rogers, John Pickard, Robert Knapp, Les Mitchel and Guy Prescott turns in capable performances, despite roles sometimes abbreviated to little meaning.

Direction of Lesley Selander stresses action over introspection, and largely succeeds despite a tendency to wander afield. Music by Lex Baxter and camera work by William Margulies are definite assets. Other technical credits are good. Kove.

Screenplay, Bailly, from a novel by Marcel Prete; camera, Jacques Lemare; editor, Louis Devaivre. At Marignan, Paris. Running time, 105 MINS.

Georges	Philipe Lemaire
Steve	Armand Mestral
Florence	Jeanne Moreau
Mireille	Anouk Ferjac
Remy	Lino Ventura

Tale has a mediocre bank clerk, about to marry a girl he works with, thrown in with some grifters who frame him with another girl and make him an unwilling accomplice. He manages to unwittingly foil the holdup and get away with it. But his taste for living dangerously has been dangerously whetted and leads to tragedy.

Some good story points but director Raymond Bailly is rarely able to develop them. Release lacks the suspense and deeper characterization which might have made this an offbeater. It's also talky.

Philipe Lemaire is superficial as the ordinary man thrown into worldly doings, and does not give the character being and life of its own, necessary to its conviction. Armand Mestral is also wooden as the enigmatic Steve who ushers the little man into a world of crime. Jeanne Moreau is the only thespic standout as she makes her sensual character meaningful and believable. Technical credits are good. Mosk.

Destination 60,000

Another cocky pilot taught humility. Hackneyed plot but striking aerial photography and popularized technical data may serve as draw for aviation-minded youth.

Hollywood, July 2.

Allied Artists release of a (Jack J.) Gross-(Philip N.) Krasne Production. Stars Preston Foster, Pat Conway, Jeff Donnell, Coleen Gray; features Bobby Clark, Denver Pyle, Russ Thorson, Ann Barton. Director-screenplay, George Waggner; camera, Hal McAlpin; editor, Kenneth Crane; music, Al Glasser. Previewed July 1, '57. Running time, 66 MINS.

Col. Ed Buckley	Preston Foster
Jeff Connors	Pat Conway
Ruth Buckley	Jeff Donnell
Mary Ellen	Coleen Gray
"Skip" Buckley	Bobby Clark
Mickey Hill	Denver Pyle
Dan Maddox	Russ Thorson
Grace Hill	Ann Barton

Striking air photography serves to counteract standard cocky youngster leavened by misfortune plot updated to the jet age. Popularized technical data and jargon may attract aviation-minded youth. Otherwise, prospects are modest.

Story by George Waggner, who also directed, revolves around tests of plane manufacturer Preston Foster's latest experimental jet. His hot-shot test pilot-wartime buddy, Pat Conway, isn't too amenable to discipline, after first trial attempt fails. Alternate pilot Denver Pyle is seriously injured in second try at ironing out bugs. Foster himself takes up a third prototype and nearly blacks out; until Conway, flying escort, snaps him out by barking combat commands over intercom radio. Sketchily developed is romance between Conway and Foster's secretary, Coleen Gray, and Foster's family life with Jeff Donnell and Bobby Clark.

Waggner's direction is able and wisely stresses low-key performances. With trite plot, high-powered dramatics would have evoked unwanted hilarity.

Foster turns in a brisk, workmanlike chore. Conway impresses as a possible b.o. heartthrob, with good looks and a nice, easygoing personality, but certainly isn't a polished actor as yet. Miss Donnell ably depicts understanding domesticity, while Miss Gray, with very little to do, does it well. Others in cast, Bobby Clark (a good juve actor), Pyle, Russ Thorson and Ann Barton, fill assignments capably.

Notable aerial photography is partly stock clips supplied by Douglas Aircraft and some original shots by cameraman Hal McAlpin. Kove.

Les Trois Font la Paire
(Three Make a Pair)
(FRENCH)

Paris, June 25.

Gaumont production and release. Stars Michel Simon, Sophie Desmarets; features Philipe Nicaud, Clement Duhour, Darry Cowl, Christian Mery, Carette. Written and directed by Sacha Guitry. Camera, Philipe Agostini; editor, Paulette Robert. At Ralmu, Paris. Running time, 85 MINS.

Inspector	Michel Simon
Titine	Sophie Desmarets
Philippe	Philipe Nicaud
Director	Darry Cowl
Gangster	Christian Mery
Chief	Clement Duhour

This shapes as a series of sketches, and too many of the allusions are either private or too intrinsically Gallic to make this an important U. S. contender. Sacha Guitry directed this from a sickbed by proxy but it has his familiar tone which could slant this for some specialized spots in the U. S., but it is limited at best.

It concerns a young hoodlum who kills a passerby just to prove to a gang that he is daring. However, the scene had been photographed by a hidden camera for it was being filmed as part of a picture. Then it turns out that a pair of twins resemble the killer. However, the gang is annoyed by all this and knocks off the culprit to the discomfiture of an ambitious inspector who thought this would make his career.

Film is adroitly acted and plotted and is well made. But the ingenious ideas remain unformed, and rarely turn this into saucy comedy. It is well acted and has a good gloss, but it remains a dubious U. S. item. Mosk.

Decision Against Time

Airplane forced landing situation. Fairly suspenseful, okay for general dating.

Hollywood, June 29.

Metro release of a Michael Balcon production. Stars Jack Hawkins; costars Elizabeth Sellars; features Walter Fitzgerald, John Stratton, Lionel Jeffries, Eddie Byrne, Victor Maddern, Donald Pleasence. Directed by Charles Crichton. Screenplay, William Rose, John Eldridge, based on original story by Rose; camera, Douglas Slocombe; editor, Peter Tanner; music, Gerbrand Schurmann. Previewed June 28, '57. Running time, 87 MINS.

John Mitchell	Jack Hawkins
Mary Mitchell	Elizabeth Sellars
Conway	Walter Fitzgerald
Ashmore	Eddie Byrne
Peter Hook	John Stratton
Joe Biggs	Victor Maddern
Keith	Lionel Jeffries
Christree	Donald Pleasence
Mary's Mother	Catherine Lacey
Mrs. Snowden	Megs Jenkins
Maine	Ernest Clark
Jenkins	Raymond Francis
Sim	Russell Waters
Ingrams	Howard Marion Crawford
Nicholas Mitchell	Jeremy Bodkin
Philip Mitchell	Gerard Lohan
Betty Harris	Mary MacKenzie
Launderette Assistant	Esme Easterbrook

"Decision Against Time" has its moments of suspense but lacks development of this quality that might have made British import a truly gripping melodrama. Film is okay for program situations, where it should generate mild interest.

Practically the entire action of this Michael Balcon production occurs within the 35 to 40-minute span an English test pilot is in the air over his airport with a badly crippled freighter, circumstances of which make landing particularly precarious. His boss, owner of a small plane factory whose whole capital is tied up in this one aircraft, constantly orders him to set the automatic pilot and bail out, but pilot decides to chance landing in a desperate effort to save his company from going broke.

Charles Crichton's direction of the William Rose-John Eldridge screenplay affords certain tenseness, particularly in the final moments leading up to pilot's safe landing, but not enough happens generally. Hawkins delivers a straightforward performance and has good support from players in usual matter-of-fact roles which characterize so many British films but don't appeal particularly to American audiences. Elizabeth Sellars as his wife is effective in a restrained portrayal, Walter Fitzgerald scores as the boss and John Stratton, Eddie Byrne and Donald Pleasence rate in smaller parts. Whit.

Spoilers of the Forest
(COLOR)

Possibly last film to be made under the Republic banner. Okay programmer.

Hollywood, June 27.

Republic release of Joe Kane production, directed by Kane. Stars Rod Cameron, Vera Ralston, Ray Collins, Hillary Brooke; features Edgar Buchanan, Carl Benton Reid, Sheila Bromley, Hank Worden, John Compton, John Alderson, Angela Greene, Paul Stader. Story and screenplay, Bruce Manning; camera (Trucolor), Jack Marta; editor, Richard L. Van Enger; music, Gerald Roberts. Previewed June 26, '57. Running time: 68 MINS.

Boyd Caldwell	Rod Cameron
Joan Milna	Vera Ralston
Eric Warren	Ray Collins
Phyllis Warren	Hillary Brooke
Tom Duncan	Edgar Buchanan
John Mitchell	Carl Benton Reid
Linda Mitchell	Sheila Bromley
Casey	Hank Worden
Billy Mitchell	John Compton
Big Jack Milna	John Alderson
Camille	Angela Greene
Dan	Paul Stader

With the timber area of Montana serving as a picturesque locale, "Spoilers of the Forest" stacks up okay for the program market. Film is perhaps most notable, however, in that it appears quite likely to be Republic's last production.

The Bruce Manning story-screenplay pivots around Vera Ralston, who, with her stepfather, is equal owner of 64,000 acres of Montana timber land. Into the scene come lumber big-shot Ray Collins and his foreman, Rod Cameron, who want to make a deal to cut the timber as fast as possible, despite the owners' opposition.

Cameron woos Miss Ralston, hoping only to sway her lumber conservation views, but it winds up the real thing for both. Collins tries to wreck the romance, but fails, and he's ousted from the scene.

Cameron is good as male topper, while Miss Ralston shows some thesping development as his vis-a-vis. Collins, as always, is thoroughly competent; and Hillary Brooke attractively appealing as his spouse. Featured roles are well handled by all concerned.

The Joe Kane production is enhanced considerably in physical values via neat stock footage, with Jack Marta's Trucolor photography also aiding visually. Kane also has directed capably.

Remaining technical contributions are okay. Neal.

SPLIT HEIRS ON TOLL FUTURE

Paris Shooting Carries a 'Strain' But Now Nick Ray Seeks Encores

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Paris, July 9

There is not one crane in France and the nearest one is in Munich. The "strain" of making a film in France and on European or North African location is much greater than it is in Hollywood.

It's a "myth" about French crews working from 12 noon to 7 p.m. in Paris. They arrive at noon but it is a good hour before starting.

These are some of the musings of Nicholas Ray, the U.S. director, who recently completed his first film abroad "Bitter Victory" (Col) Though having a French producer, Paul Graetz, film was made only in English with Columbia footing most of expenses, thought to be nearly $1,500,000 in black and white CinemaScope, possibly a little cheaper than it would have cost in the U. S.

Ray found Parisian technicians even more "jurisdiction" conscious than their U.S. counterparts. In Hollywood he was able to come in early and shift lights around to suit the setup, but here he had to wait for the photographer who only arrrived at noon.

Against his negative points Ray felt that it was a rejuvenating, intriguing experience for any U.S. director to work abroad. It was a healthy jolt of work habits to adapt to the techniques—often excellent—of a different point of view.

Ray denied that co-sripter Rene Hardy, the author of the book the film is derived from, has tied up the negative due to disagreement with the film's outcome by standing on his author's moral rights, which have legal status here. Ray admitted that there had been a lot of trouble on the scripting. He first huddled with Hardy and producer Graetz in Hollywood where initial script had been knocked out by Ray, Gavin Lambert and Hardy. Then Lambert and Ray overhauled it to get it into shooting shape. Then Hardy objected and the trobules were on. Screenplay went through various phases.

Hardy is again dissatisfied but the film is now in mixing and will soon be ready. Script credit will go to Hardy, Lambert and Ray with an additional dialog tag for American writer Paul Gallico, who lives in Lichenstein. Pic stars Richard Burton, Curd Jurgens and Ruth Roman. Ray would like to do two more features overseas now that he has the hang of it. One in prospect is about misplaced children of the last war to be made in various countries; another the drama of an American woman abroad. Latter probably for Betsy Blair, now a Parisian resident.

Booz, Allen Report Led Whitney to Seek Type Of Sell BV Set Up For

C. V. Whitney Productions' releasing switch from Warners to Buena Vista is the result of the latter company's offer of a better deal. It's also believed that the Whitney outfit was impressed with the Booz, Allen & Hamilton report on industry economics—a report which recommends limited distribution facilities such as are maintained by BV.

Under the deal with Whitney, BV is charging as releasing fee 25% of the domestic distribution gross. The standard WB contract calls for a cut of closer to 30% of the rentals.

Leo F. Samuels, BV president, leaves New York for the Coast this week to once over "Missouri Traveler," which is first of the two Whitney films to be handled by BV.

Modern Theatre Equipment Co., and Sterling Sales & Service Inc. merged in Texas as Modern Sales and Service Inc., has been arranged per J. H. Elder, prez of Sterling.

Clear Boris Morros

Status of film producer Boris Morros, originally named by the U.S. Government as the go-between in the Jack and Myra Sobel spy case, now has been made clear. Morros' name also cropped up in the indictment of Americans George and Jane Zlatovski as spies for the Soviets. U. S. Attorney Paul W. Williams has now stated: "I want to emphasize right away that Mr. Morros is a loyal American citizen working for the United States and that he will be a Government witness." Thus Morros apparently acted as a U.S. agent.

Despite 32c Top, Mexico City To Add 10 Houses

By DOUGLAS L. GRAHAME

Mexico City, July 9.

Mexico's devotion to low-scale film entertainment remains pretty much a political necessity of the Government on classic "bread and circuses" statesmanship reasoning. Despite the sensational boom in real estate and the rapid industrialization of the republic in the past two decades there remains the familiar gap between the elite and the low-income working class.

With the official top admission frozen at 32c there will nonetheless be still 10 more houses in the capital by around Dec. 15. This brings to 141 the number operating. However this is moderate for a city whose population, never very accurately censussed, may be near 4,500,000. Perhaps half or more never attend. Can't afford even 32c.

(New York City's film houses: 430—Ed.)

Houses opening for the Christmas season expand Mexico City's seats by about 40,000. It is, of course, true that some of the owners may seriously hope of an upped admission once the new Municipal and Federal administrations are sworn in on Dec. 6, 1958 (for six years).

Incidentally, Manuel Angel Fernandez, pioneer local exhibitor, is sinking heavy $75,000, to recondition his Cine Roxy, ordinarily a moveover first run house, for the screening of "Around the World in 80 Days."

(VARIETY's issue of July 3, '57, under the caption "Argentine May Liberate B.O." detailed at some length the success made by local film industries, with MPPA help, in getting admissions raised in various Latin republicas. Brazil, Chile, Venezuela and Colombia situations had been bettered.—Ed.)

RAPPAPORT OPERATES DESPITE CINERAMA

Towne Theatre at Baltimore will convert to a Cinerama operation in the latter part of August.

Unlike previous deals whereby theatres were turned over to Cinerama on a four-wall basis with the operation being handled exclusively by the Cinerama organization, the presentation at the Towne will remain under the direction of its operator Izzy Rappaport. This is the first of a series of new Cinerama deals being negotiated by Bernard G. Kranze, v.p. of Stanley Warner Cinerama.

Cinerama films will be shown on a roadshow basis, similar to the Stanley Warner policy. While Rappaport will operate the house, he will have available the advice and guidance of the Cinerama staff.

ALL ASK FCC NOT TO RUIN CHANCES

Friends and foes of subscription television went to bat once again before the Federal Communications Commission this week, submitting comments in reply to questions posed by the regulators.

The upshot of it all was that no one—neither pro nor con factions—wants a pay-tv test along "limited" lines.

Those who are against the whole idea of home-toll continue firm in their argument that it would merely usurp the regular function of commercial video and assess a charge on programs now being aired for the plugs.

The proponents of slot-tv say they aren't eager for any limited test, which would cost a lot and would prove little. On the other hand, they make it plain that investors can't be expected to pour millions into a venture which, within a short time, may be forced into withdrawal by the FCC.

James M. Landis, special counsel for Skiatron, in his brief, affirmed that five years was a minimum period for actual system operations (he added that ten years was desirable) to answer the FCC's query re public reaction to this novel type of tv service.

Says McDonald

E. F. McDonald Jr., president of Zenith, sounded more impatient, "I urgently request the Commission to reject our petition altogether rather than to bog us down in further endless administrative hearings and proceedings," he wrote. "We submit that ten years more of hearings, written or oral, will add only bulk and heat, not light, to the record.

"In the meantime, the public, which owns the air and has the right to its fullest use will be deprived of any opportunity of deciding for itself whether subscription tv is a useful service."

Telemeter, which field last week, said in its Comments that the Commission should authorize a test immediately, if at all. Telemeter's point was that no further trial was necessary.

National Broadcasting Co., pointing out that two years ago it had gone firmly on record as to its view that home fees video would be "contrary to the public interest," said it held this conviction even more firmly today. It noted that all the various types of programs which "boxoffice" adherents promise to deliver for a fee, had been broadcast gratis; and it cited the Dodgers-Giants tieup with Skiatron as proof that "pay-television, if approved, will simply subtract much of this fare now being freely enjoyed by everyone."

Investment Angle

NBC, too, noted that field tests would have to be extensive, and then worried that "If . . . an unlimited fullscale 'demonstration' were permitted, the investment required would tend to so entrench the system that it would not be possible to terminate it after experience had demonstrated the adverse public effects, which are evident from analysis."

In his preliminary statement to the Commission, McDonald lit into his opponents, holding that the only enemies of pay-video were the exhibitors and the three tv webs "whose current monopolistic position and hogging of television revenues is a matter of serious national concern." He charged further that these combined interests had been using the National Assn. of Radio and Television Broadcasters "as a stalking horse to achieve their purpose of killing off a potential competitor."

Zenith's brief also pointed to the "danger" of wired-tv if broadcast subscription video is denied authorization. He said it was entirely possible that the phone company may have "serious designs on the field which could lead to a multi-muillion dollar, multi-channel coaxial cable system, linking up homes in all the principal cities."

The CBS statement, taking the established broadcasters line, said

18 Denmark Theatres Exhibiting 'New' Yankee Films; Looks Like Bonanza Despite Heat Wave

By VICTOR SKAARUP

Copenhagen, July 9.

Danes this week crowded into the 18 theatres that started showing "new" American films July 1, after an absence of two years. High attendance came despite a heat wave. Critics praised most of the new releases in unusually glowing terms.

The 18 houses now showing the new Hollywood product are those that agreed with the Motion Picture Export Assn. to pay more than the hitherto prevailing 30% rental maximum.

Present indications are that these theatres are going to set summer b.o. records. If the pace continues, it's felt here that the day won't be far away when all Danish houses will bow to the American terms and make their deals with the U. S. companies. In the fall several new Danish pictures are due to bow, and chances are that, as always, they'll do good business The big questionmark is: How will the European product stand up under the new American competition?

The eight major Hollywood companies on July 1 took out a big, half-page ad in the local dailies, announcing their new pictures and the fact that they could now be seen at specified houses. The ad was felt necessary since some independent distributors had set preems on the same date for films they had acquired from American producers outside the MPEA fold. These films, however, are being shown at the regular 30% rental terms.

Several of the Danish houses that signed with MPEA have, for the past several months, been showing American product, also at 30%. However, these were not new films.

The first new releases here were "Carmen Jones" (20th) at the Dagmar; "The Harder They Fall" (Col) at Norreport; "To Catch a Thief" (Par) at the Saga; "A Woman's World" (20th) at Bellevue; "Desperate Hours" (Par) at Platan and Aladdin; "Attack" (UA) at Bristol, and "Last Time I Saw Paris" (Metro) at Villabyernes Bio.

The big World Cinema (incidentally operated by a labor group) is also among the "dissidents," but at the moment is housing its usual summer attraction, the Schumann Circus. It will start the new season with Charlie Chaplin's "The King in New York" and then will book its first American picture since the lifting of the MPEA boycott—"Trapeze" (UA).

Preems coming up include "Picnic," "Bus Stop" and "The Man Who Knew Too Much."

Members of the MPEA in May of 1955 stopped all importation and booking of films in Denmark in protest against the 30% rental limit it insisted on by the exhibitors. Latter claims they can't afford to pay more. The Americans insist they can't afford to operate under such conditions.

Rank Rolls Three

London, July 9.

Shooting of three major Rank Organization pictures began yesterday (Mon.). At Bourges, in France, Betty Box and Ralph Thomas began lensing "A Tale Of Two Cities," starring Dirk Bogarde as Sydney Carton.

In Liverpool Michael Relph and Basil Dearden began "Violent Playground," a story about teenage delinquency starring Stanley Baker, and featuring John McCallum and Ann Heywood. And at Pinewood Studios, lensing began on a Daniel M. Angel production entitled "Carve Her Name With Pride," which stars Virginia McKenna and Paul Scofield.

1st Meeting Held; Seek Peace On U.S. Films Status

London, July 9.

Peace talks set up by the Ministry of Labor between the Association of Cinematograph and Television Technicians and the British subsidiaries of American production companies, designed to quell the row over the use of foreign producers and directors on British films, brought no settlement after the first confab last week. Instead, another discussion has been called for Thursday of next week (18).

A Ministry of Labor statement on the talks said representatives of the British Union and U.S. employers discussed the question of employment of foreign producers and directors in British quota films, and after a detailed review of the whole subject a further meeting was arranged for July 18.

The dispute stemmed from action inaugurated by the Technicians, which was determined to impose an agreed limitation on the employment of foreign producers and directors in British pictures. They have a quota arrangement with the British Film Producers Association, but it does not cover all the production outfits who do not belong to the BFPA.

The union threatened to take strike action unless a satisfactory arrangement was reached, and set the date of the strike at July 1. But the Ministry of Labor stepped in and called a meeting between the Yank companies and the labor organization to try and negotiate a settlement. The producers were ready to talk, but not with the threat of strike over their heads, and insisted that the union withdraw its threat before they got on with the confabs. The ACTT executive at once called a meeting and decided to comply.

SAYS AIR-COOLED EXHIB: 'COME INTO OUR LOBBY'

Minneapolis, July 9.

During the recent torrid days and nights, the Paramount's State, a leading loop house, has invited the public to take advantage of its air-cooled lobby.

"Stop!" reads a two-faced sign on the curb in front of the showhouse. "Cool off. A few minutes in our lobby. No charge. It's our treat."

Republic will distribute "Death Watch," produced by John Bash in England.

3 PATHAK-LUKOWSKI FILMS SEEK U. S. DEAL

Berlin, July 9.

Vinod S. Pathak, of Indo-American Film Corp., has signed with Deutscher Film Ring (Defir) and its subsidiary Rialto Film Productions a three film co-production deal in three years. President of Defir, Hubert Lukowski, is coproducer with Pathak.

The three features are budgeted at $300,000 for first one, $750,000 for the second and $1,200,000 for the third one. Opener is to be a mobster tale centered and made in Italy. The third picture would be a big remake of one of the great films of the past.

As to Pathak, negotiations are in progress now for a major release in the States.

Some Areas Sad, Some Glad, Orient Patchquilt of Curbs and Commies; Yanks Need Patience of Buddha

Critical economic situation in the Far East, coupled with a drainage of available dollar funds, is testing the prowess of American film industry statesmen, suddenly faced with a rising wall of restrictions.

It's not so much a matter of salesmanship, since attendance in the entire area is definitely up, and rising living standards see more money coming in at the boxoffice for American pictures.

But even as revenues rise in some areas the economic deterioration in various key countries, and subsequent plug-the-hole measures aimed at cutting down the outflow of dollars, are creating a delicate balance that's not only dangerous for the U. S. companies, but also leaves the way open for the Communist countries—Russia and Red China—to make their pitch, unhindered as they are by profit-or-loss considerations.

Some of that already has happened in Indonesia, where the Soviets at one point brought in films via the diplomatic pouch and then proceeded to virtually give them away, related Irving Maas, the Motion Picture Export Assn. supervisor for the Far East, last week on his return from Tokyo.

The Red Chinese have been sending large numbers of films into the tiny countries of Laos and Cambodia, where comparatively few U. S. films have been shown.

To balance the picture, however, such countries as India, Japan and the Philippines show strong resistance to the Commies, despite valiant Soviet efforts to get a film toehold. That's true particularly in India, where the Red "culture" campaign has been going strong, impeded however by the comparatively objective Indian censors who resent propaganda.

Japan Is Tops

By far the most important market in the Far East is Japan, which gives the American companies approximately $14,000,000 in potential revenue. Actual remittances come to about $7,000,000 annually. The official transfers are based on 22% of the gross billings. While Hollywood pix are doing a brisk business in Japan, the country's balance of payments situation has worsened steadily, and, unless there is an improvement, chances are that the Japanese fiscal authorities are going to clamp down further on remittances.

Maas thought it unlikely that they would further restrict the volume of pictures being brought in since "they've already created a situation where the supply doesn't meet the demand."

The American film companies have made two large loans to Japan's hydro-electric industry. Maas said no request for the same type of loan had come from anywhere else in the Far East. There was discussion of a loan in the Philippines to aid agricultural development.

Dramatizing the Far East's economic problems, India now has banned the importation of all foreign films for three months. This doesn't greatly concern the U.S. companies for the moment, since they have enough product there to last them a while. Maas said that in September the Indians would re-evaluate the situation and lay down import rules for the six months starting October.

In Indonesia, Maas had worked out a deal covering the American remittances for 1956 through 1958, but he said last week that conditions were so chaotic at the moment that there was no assurance that the deal would be finalized and honored.

In the Philippines, the siuation is rapidly coming to a head. Economic situation in the country at the moment is bad, Maas reported. Government had thrown various restrictive measures, i.e. taxes, quotas, etc. at the Americans who in turn threatened to pull out. Philippine position since then has been modified, and some final decisions re a new tax basis and other issues should be forthcoming very soon.

In other areas, such as Pakistan, Burma, Vietnam (where MPEA is operating under an International Media Guarantee Program) and Singapore, business is going along as per usual and, if anything, at a smarter pace than before, Maas said. He stressed that, while rising restrictions naturally represented problems, the fact remained that monies earned did accrue to the credit of the companies and, sooner or later, would be remitted.

Italian Terms Again Snafued

With the American companies calling the tune, the distributors section of ANICA, the Italian industry org, last week nixed a proposed film rental agreement with AGIS, the Italo exhibitors group.

While further talks between two are likely, the possibility now is strong that the whole film rental pact issue may be put up to the Italian Government, which has the right to step in if a deadlock continues.

The AGIS-proposed agreement, in which some of the Italian distributors appeared to concur, fell through on the basis of issues having nothing to do with actual film rental terms. The big points of contention were: (1) The Italian desire for a committee to pick the "exceptional" pictures that could command free negotiability of terms. (There would be one such film per company.) (2) An Italo plan for the establishment of a committee to supervise the operations of the entire agreement.

There was disagreement also on such questions as publicity expenditures, holdover figures, etc. However, these are considered comparatively minor.

Some in New York are frankly hopeful that negotiations will still bear fruit, and that the Italian Government will not step in. In that latter event, there is some doubt how well the U. S. distributors would fare. Under Article X of the Italian Film Law, the Government has the right to step in. This right at one point was held unconstitutional by the Courts. Since then, the law has been changed to make the section conform to law.

Mexico-Italo Swapo

Mexico City, July 9.

Mexico has taken the initiative of consummating the reciprocal pact with Italy by dispatching five selected Mexican films to Rome for distribution.

Choosing and shipping was done by Cimex, the semiofficial placer abroad of Mexican pix. Italy is expected to send several choice Italian releases pronto.

'Romantically Interested' Mixed Pairs Gets 'Island' Excluded From Memphis

Memphis, July 9.

To nobody's surprise this city's censor board has denied a permit to 20th-Fox's "Island In the Sun." In the long reign of the late Lloyd T. Binford, America's most venerable censor, an active bluenoser until he was 89, even the most Innocent scene combining whites and Negroes was cause for the picture's banning from Memphis.

So it's the Binford bounce still. Mrs. B. F. Edwards, chairman of the present four-women censor board, characterizes the film as "inflammatory, too frank a depiction of miscegenation, offensive to moral standards, and no good for either white or Negro."

She added that it was "obvious to board members and myself that Joan Fontaine and Harry Belafonte, a Negro, are romantically interested and then there was the romance of Dorothy Dandridge, Negro singer, and John Justin leading toward marriage which made us ban the picture for our city."

Tom Young, 20th branch manager here, said that the pic is doing boff biz at several other southern houses which include Owensboro and Henderson, Ky., and Fort Smith, Ark. The pic will probably be skedded for West Memphis, Ark., usual haven for Memphis-banned features.

GERMANS COLLECT 50% OF OWN FILM RENTS

Berlin, July 9.

German films got close to 50% of the entire German market film rental revenue in 1956, according to statistics put out by the West German Distributors Assn. Their take ran to 154,354,746 DM ($36,750,000) or 46.6% of the total, which was 331,179,983 DM ($78,854,000).

The American cut, amounting to 30.7% of the total, was 101,799,495 DM ($24,200,000), which was more in terms of actual money taken in when compared with 1955, but less in relation to the overall market take, which rose in '56 some 31,000,000 DM ($7,800,000) over 1955.

The French got 5% of the market last year, the Italians 3.4% and the British 1.8%. German reissues accounted for 0.5% and Austrians for 10.7%. In other words, the German-language product in 1956 got 57.8% of the total market.

The 10% rise in rentals was in line with an increase in attendance, from 770,600,000 in 1955 to 828,400,000 last year. Admission taxes ran to 150,870,000 DM ($35,920,000).

The $24,200,000 American take, out of which the companies must, of course, pay local expenses, dubbing costs, etc., makes West Germany the most important market in Europe outside of Britain. In fact, few markets anywhere deliver such a dollar take to the U. S. industry. West Germany earnings are freely remittable.

Hecht-Lancaster's 5 More for UA

Metro Deal Relates Only to Shaw's 'Devil's Disciple' Project

Hecht-Hill-Lancaster has signed a new distribution deal with United Artists calling for the delivery of five productions in addition to the three due under a previous arrangement. All eight pictures expectedly will be ready for release within two to two and a quarter years.

It's thus made clear that H-H-L is staying with UA despite the tie-up with Metro entered last week. Latter association is a limited one, calling for the production of "Devil's Disciple," Bernard Shaw comedy, and the loanoat of Burt Lancaster for M-G's upcoming remake of "Ben Hur." Other properties will be made for M-G as time goes on but there have been no decisions along this line as yet.

Initial disclosure anent the alignment with M-G had given rise to speculation that the independent company might be severing ties with UA. The fact as now established is that the independent company will turn out the bulk of its pictures for UA and a limited few for M-G.

H-H-L has a heavy backlog of properties and spreading these around is compatible with the outfit's pattern of operations. Twist is that UA advanced the money for scripts and stories which eventually will wind up as releases of non-UA companies, such as M-G. UA will recoup these investments, of course. Another angle is "Devil's Disciple" is blueprinted as a costly project and UA reportedly does not feel miffed about losing it to M-G.

Cora Miller: 51 Years in B.O.

Mobile, July 9.

Probably America's oldest box office cashier in terms of a steady job in the same theatre is Cora Miller, ticket seller at the Century Theatre. Come Feb. 15 next, she will have been at the same window for 51 years.

House has been the Century for the past 30 years; for almost 21 before that it was the Crescent. Before she took her present job, Miss Miller cashiered at the earlier Victor Theatre where money was taken at the door, and tickets were never printed.

Now 72, cashier almost failed to get her present job. She held out for $10 a week when management offered her $6. "I haven't seen a complete movie in ten years," she says. "Most of today's fare runs me crazy to watch. But when Marilyn Monroe comes along in a picture like 'Bus Stop' it restores my faith in films. That was a great picture. I'm almost sorry I didn't see all of it."

"Change? Forty years ago we had one-day shows with serials on Fridays and Saturdays for the youngsters. Serials have gone and Westerns have taken their place."

"Funniest thing I remember was when William Giblin, our golden voiced singer of 50 years ago, was to sing 'Two Blue Eyes Are Crying' and the projectionist showed the slide upside down with the tears falling into the eyes. It was almost as funny as a Chaplin picture."

Goldwyn's 1950 Antitrust Suit Starting (Wed.) in San Francisco

San Francisco, July 9.

Seven witnesses have been subpoenaed already in Samuel Goldwyn's antitrust suit against National Theatres. The suit, filed seven years ago, will finally come to trial tomorrow (10) before Federal Judge Edward P. Murphy.

Goldwyn is expected here tonight (9) and will be present for the opening statements. His local lawyer, Joseph Alioto, says the producer will return in "two to three weeks" to testify himself.

Subpoenaed film execs are:

R. A. McNeil, former president of Golden State Theatre and Realty Corp.

Roy Cooper, former buyer for Golden State Theatre and operator of Roy Cooper Theatres;

Samuel Gardner, Frisco manager for Loew's;

Herman Wobber, Western division sales manager for 20th-Fox;

Fred Dixon, ex-chief booker for Golden State Theatres;

John H. McCollom, employee of Naify theatre chain;

Michael Naify, president of Golden State Theatres and T & D Jr. Enterprises — he succeeded McNeil.

The original $2-million suit sought treble damages because of "restraint of trade and monopoly" and charged the defendants "combined tremendous buying power arising out of the control of theatres to purchase films on a noncompetitive and monopolistic basis."

The claims originally covered a 13-year span from 1937 to 1950 and included 27 Goldwyn-produced pictures.

Alioto sums up his case by saying:

"Their buying monopoly depressed and depreciated film rentals."

Goldwyn was one of the defendants in the Government's parallel anti-trust suit and was charged "with being a participant and beneficiary to some extent in the conspiracies by reason of affiliation with United Artists."

The $2 million claim, however, was cut in half by Judge Murphy's action last October in which he granted the defendants a partial summary judgment. Murphy agreed with the defendants that the ordinary statute of limitations applied to the Goldwyn case and barred all claims before May 16, 1947.

This cut the list of films affected to seven. They are:

Both the roadshow and regular releases of "The Best Years of Our Lives"; "The Secret Life of Walter Mitty"; "The Bishop's Wife"; "Enchantment"; "A Song Is Born"; "Rosanna McCoy"; " Our Foolish Hearts."

Goldwyn is appealing the judge's ruling and claims the statute of limitations had been suspended because the Government had an antitrust suit pending against some of the defendants at the same time. Judge Murphy held, however, that the two conspiracies were substantially different.

Since last October both sides have huddled many times but could not reach agreement. Northern California defendants have been severed out of the case which comes to trial tomorrow (10). The current suit, for $500,000, is solely

BUZZING THE BEACHES

All-Out Bally For Levine's 'Walk Into Hell'

Boston July 9.

Joe Levine, prexy of Embassy Pictures Corp., dispatched chartered plane, bannered to ballyhoo his "Walk Into Hell," to fly the New England resorts as part of kick off in 200 theatres in this territory July 31. Plane will fly inland opening day over key spots.

Levine also has a full scale Terry Turner saturation tv-radio campaign going and six states plastered with 24 sheets.

Just back from Cincinnati, Levine reports he has more than 60 theatres pacted including Rube Shor's circuit, to open the middle of August.

Urge End of B.O. Tax in Reich

Berlin, July 9.

Urgent call for the abolition of the amusement tax on films is contained in the annual report of the West German Producers Assn. which points out that the admissions and turnover taxes paid on specific pictures are higher than the production costs of the respective films.

The report says that, as taxation is too high, admission prices in the West German republic are too low, when considered as, or compared to, any other regular commercial product. "A sensible tax structure applying to film alone would be sufficient to keep German production alive and to increase its productivity" the report said.

The producers repeatedly used the U. S. as an example, noting among other things that the American industry recently was virtually relieved of its tax burden "in the realization that the biggest industry in the world, because of the amusement tax, couldn't survive in its own market, despite the fact that it gets more than 50% of its income from abroad."

Further reference to the U. S. film comes in the chapter devoted to the German export market where, the report established, "the German film hasn't been able to break through as yet." The total export revenue of the German film in 1956 ran to about 15,000,000 DM (about $3,500,000). This the association attributed to the limited appeal abroad of pictures made specifically for German audiences, and to the lack of promotional activities.

It noted that, in other countries of Europe, export promotion is supported and encouraged by the respective governments. In Germany, very little government money is forthcoming for this purpose. The report said that the film export of the U. S. indicated the advantage that could be had by considerable official encouragement of the export business.

(Apart from allowing the American companies to operate jointly abroad under the

A MEETING TO REMEMBER about "AN AFFAIR TO REMEMBER"

It's safe to say that, combined, Leo McCarey and I have spent at least 50 years in the picture business. We've had our share of hits, misses and near-misses. We've gloried in the credit of our successes and cursed the sales, advertising and publicity departments for our flops. We were human, we behaved like producers and directors.

But after what we saw and heard at 20th Century-Fox's home office about ten days ago, we're a couple of reformed guys. In short, we have seen the millennium and it worked us over!

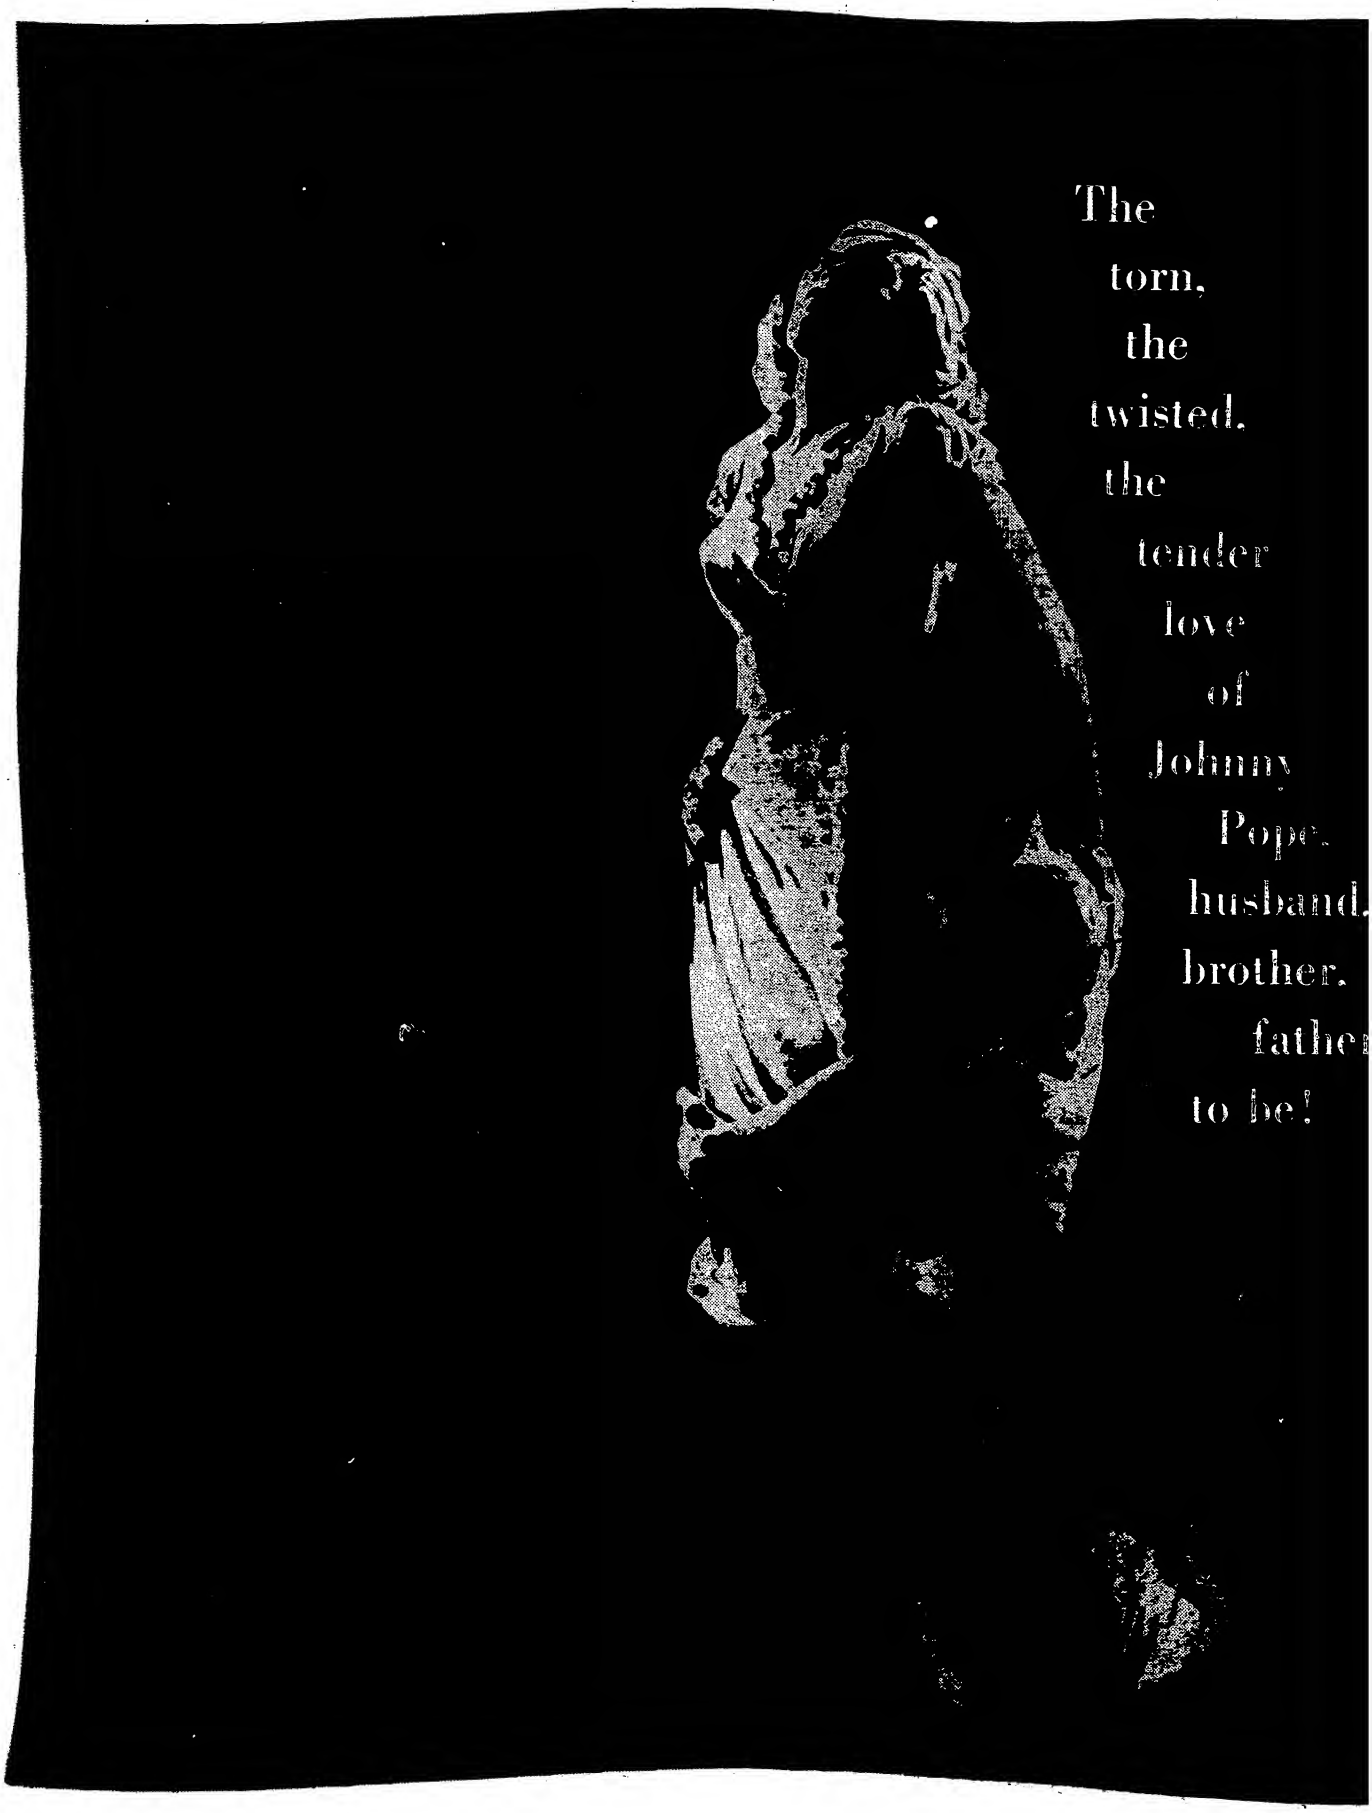
Concerned about our first joint venture for 20th, Leo and I flew east to see what (if anything!) the boys back there were cooking for AN AFFAIR TO REMEMBER, starring Cary Grant and Deborah Kerr. We already knew how hard Harry Brand and his staff of specialists had worked on the picture, but—the eternal question—what about New York?

Traditionally skeptical when we started, our skepticism multiplied en route. Mentally unsettled with pre-release jitters, we even talked about a well-known producer's representative as a possible distribution consultant for AFFAIR.

Then came the day of the meeting with the New York bunch and—it was a mother-lovin' revelation! That's why Leo and I are taking this ad:

To thank them, and tell them and the industry at large that never in our careers have we been accorded such a turnout of organizational manpower for a single picture; never have we seen a home office function so magnificently in selling preparations, domestic and foreign opening plans, and in advertising, publicity and exploitation via every conceivable medium!

The following attendance list at a producer-home office meeting may be a commonplace to others at 20th, but to Leo and myself it was an unforgettable honor. We cannot help naming and feeling deeply grateful to:



SPYROS SKOURAS, president
CHARLES EINFELD, vice-president
ALEX HARRISON, general sales manager
MURRAY SILVERSTONE, president 20th Century-Fox International Corp.
ERNEST TURNBULL, head of Hoyt Theatres, Australia
MARTIN MOSKOWITZ, eastern division manager
GLENN NORRIS, central-Canadian division manager
ABE GOODMAN, advertising director
ED SULLIVAN, publicity director
RODNEY BUSH, exploitation director
IRA TULIPAN, publicity manager
MAX STEIN, creative advertising manager
ED SOLOMON, assistant exploitation manager
JACK BLOOM, sales department circuit contact
EDMUND REEK, vice-president and producer of Fox Movietone News
EMANUEL SILVERSTONE, vice-president and general sales manager 20th Century-Fox International Corp.
LES WHELAN, advertising and publicity director for 20th's International Corp.
ALAN SILVERBACH, foreign sales supervisor
ROGER FERRI, editor of Dynamo
JOHN SPRINGER, magazine department manager
MARTIN MICHEL, radio and TV manager
NAT WEISS, assistant advertising manager

We were awed to find that each had a concrete, well thought out plan for the special handling of AN AFFAIR TO REMEMBER, and at the meeting each made further noteworthy contributions to the overall campaign.

Yes sir, we came, we saw, we were conquered and converted to 20th's distribution organization. It was truly a meeting to remember!

Stout Pix Boom Mpls.; 'D.I.' Handsome $14,000, 'Bernardine' Robust 12G

Minneapolis, July 9.

For a change business is booming again. Even though the current strong array of newcomers encountered a warm and sunshiny July 4 weekend that must have diverted a considerable amount of traffic to counter outdoor attractions and pursuits, this looks like the best loop boxoffice seven days in many a month from the standpoint of aggregate takings. Respect is demanded by such fresh entries as "Bernardine," "The D. I." and "Sweet Smell of Success," all of which will give excellent accounts of themselves, apparently thriving on the heavy competition.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (847; $2.40-$2.65)—"Around World" (UA). This beautified and almost rebuilt Alvin tees off Friday (12) with an exclusive territory engagement of the Todd production on its 70m screen. One show a night, three matinees a week and all seats reserved. Advance sale is very big. Opening night taken over by Minnesota Editorial Assn. and a sellout.

Century (S-W) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65)—"Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (48th wk). Winding up a full year and still in the important money with no end of the run in sight. Hefty $13,500. Last week, $15,000.

'Success' Sock $20,000, Philly

Philadelphia, July 9.

Biz is spotty this frame with long July 4th weekend resulting in exodus to nearby seashore resorts; local heat also hurt. Topping fresh product is "Sweet Smell of Success" at the Stanton. Jerry Lewis' p.a. hypoed the opening day of "Delicate Delinquent" at the Stanley while "Around World" and "Seven Wonders of World" also registered good takes. Trans-Lux, with reissue of "Bambi," is drawing good matinee trade.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (526; 99-$1.80) — "Something of Value" (M-G). Great $16,500. Last week, "Designing Woman" (M-G) $5,500.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 75-$1.40)— "Man On Fire" (M-G). Good $15,400. Last week, "Gunfight at O.K. Corral" (Par), $7,500.

Buff Perks; 'Fire' Hot $14,000, 'Prince' Smart 10G, 2d, 'Joan' Dull 2½G

Buffalo, July 9.

Biz is holding up strong with "Fire Down Below" stalwart at the Lafayette and "Island in Sun" bright in its second round at the Buffalo. Sole exception is "St. Joan," which is disappointing at the Cinema.

Buffalo (Loew) (3,000; 60-85)— "Island In Sun" (20th) and "Gun Duel in Durango" (20th) (4th wk). Bright $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

Paramount (ABPT) (3,000; 60-85) — "Delicate Delinquent" (Par) opened Monday. Last week, "Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Men of Sherwood Forest" (Indie) (9 days). Potent $18,500.

Center (ABPT) (2,000; 60-85)— "Prince and Showgirl" (WB) (2d wk). Flashy $10,000. Last week, better than $13,000.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 60-85)— "Fire Down Below" (Col). Stalwart $14,000. Last week, "20 Million Miles to Earth" (Col) and "The 27th Day" (Col). Topped $12,000.

Century (Buhawk) (1,400; $1.50-$3)—"Around World" (UA) (14th wk). Staunch $10,000. Last week, $13,000.

Teck (Cinema Products) (1,200; $1.20-$2.40)—"Seven Wonders of the World" (SW) (45th wk). Oke $7,000. Last week, $7,500.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 60-90)— "St. Joan" (UA). Disappointing, under $2,500.

'Bernardine' Brisk 14½G, Seattle; 'Love' Hotsy 6G

Seattle, July 9.

Weather was made to order for the outdoors over the holiday. But people who stayed at home also wanted to go some place. So the balance was in favor of show business with the overall take on the right side. Orpheum reopened this week after extensive redecorating and refurbishing.

Estimates for This Week

Blue Mouse (Hamrick) (800; $1.50-$2.50) — "Around World" (UA) (12th wk). Great $14,000. Last week, $13,400.

Coliseum (Evergreen) (1,870; 90-$1.25) — "Bernardine" (20th) and "Way to Gold" (20th). Immense $14,500. Last week, "Monster Challenges World" (UA) and "Vampire" (UA), $9,100.

Fifth Avenue (Evergreen) (2,500; $1-$1.50) — "Fire Down Below" (Col) and "Burglar" (Col). Good $8,500. Last week, "Island in Sun" (20th) and "Two Grooms" (20th) (3d wk), $9,200.

Music Hall (Hamrick) (2,200; 90-$1.25) — "Something of Value" (M-G) and "Vintage" (M-G). Fair $6,500. Last week, "D.I." (WB) and "Duel Apache Well" (Rep) (2d wk), $8,400.

Orpheum (2,600; 90-$1.25) — "Sweet Smell Success" (UA) and "Gun Duel in Durango" (UA). Okay $8,000. Last week, dark.

Paramount (1,282; $1.20-$2.65)— "Cinerama Holiday" (Indie) (11th wk). Good $10,500. Last week, $9,000.

'Bernardine' Lush $19,500, Frisco

San Francisco, July 9.

First-run business is spotty, with some exhibs complaining about the long July 4 holiday while others are praising it. "Bernardine," the longrun "10 Commandments," "Seven Wonders" and "Around World" are powerful. "Fire Down Below" is okay at the Paramount. "Love In the Afternoon" at Golden Gate and "Man on Fire" at the Warfield are both disappointing.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; 90-$1.25)—"Love In Afternoon" (AA) and "Dragoon Wells Massacre" (AA). Fair $14,000. Last week, "Lonely Man" (Par) and "Buster Keaton Story" (Par), $12,500.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; $1.25-$1.50)— "Bernardine" (20th) and "Way To The Gold" (20th). Excellent $19,500. Last week, "Island In Sun" (20th) and "Break In Circle" (20th) (3d wk), $14,000.

Warfield (Loew's) (2,656; 90-$1.25)—"Man On Fire" (M-G). So-so $12,500. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk), $10,000.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 90-$1.25) —"Fire Down Below" (Col) and "Last Man To Hang" (Col). Okay $15,000. Last week, "D.I." (WB) and "Counterfeit Plan" (WB), (2d wk), $12,000.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; 90-$1.25) —"Prince and Showgirl" (WB) (2d wk). Nice $11,000. Last week, $16,000.

Rio (Schwarz) (397; $1.10)— "Naked Night" (Times) and "Great Adventure" (Indie). Nice $2,200. Last week, "Don Juan" (Indie) and "Vienna Waltzes" (Indie), $1,200.

'Success' Sweet $20,000, Det.; 'Prince' Sturdy 17G, 'Tremain' Rousing 12G

Detroit, July 9.

A great week is in prospect for most downtowners. "Around World 80 Days" had its best Wednesday, Thursday, Friday biz since it opened 28 weeks ago at the United Artists and is well on the way to a wham session. "Sweet Smell Success" lives up to its name at the Palms. "Prince and Showgirl" shapes good at the Michigan. "Johnny Tremain" looks good at the Broadway-Capitol.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox-Detroit) (5,000; 90-$1.25)—"Island in Sun" (20th) and "Two Grooms for Bride" (20th) (4th wk). Swell $17,500. Last week, $21,000.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; 90-$1.25)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB) and "Spring Reunion" (UA). Strong $17,000. Last week, "Tammy and Bachelor" (U) and "Weapon" (Col) $16,000.

Palms (UD) (2,961; 90-$1.25)— "Sweet Smell Success" (UA) and "War Drums" (Indie). Terrific $20,000. Last week, "Lonely Man" (Par) and "Kettles on Old MacDonald's Farm" (U), $10,000.

Madison (UD) (1,900; $1.25-$2.75) —"10 Commandments" (Par) (33d wk). Great $15,000. Last week, $16,000.

Broadway-Capitol (UD) (3,500; 90-$1.25)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Tarzan and Lost Safari" (M-G). Big $12,000. Last week, "Rock All Night" (Indie) and "Dragstrip Girl" (Indie), $15,000.

United Artists (UA) (1,668; $1.25-$3)—"Around World" (UA) (28th wk). Sock $25,000. Last week, $21,000.

'Delinquent' Fast $16,000 Tops Pitt

Pittsburgh, July 9.

Long holiday weekend and fine weather were no help to business in general although under the circumstances things don't look too bad. Jerry Lewis' four stage shows at the Stanley on the Fourth helped his picture, "Delicate Delinquent," get off to fast start and "Sweet Smell of Success" got b.o. notices which with marquee draft will enable it to wind up okay. "Island in Sun" winding up fourth stanza at Harris satisfactorily, and while "Bernardine" is dropping in second it's still strong enough to stick again.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 80-$1.25)— "Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk). Will dip just under $10,000. Last week, fine at almost $16,000.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 80-$1.25) —"Island in Sun" (20th) (4th wk). Figures to close out at nearly $8,000, not bad. "Fire Down Below" (Col) comes in Friday. Last week, "Island" $11,500.

Guild (Green) (500; 85-99) — "Gold of Naples" (DCA) (2d wk). Heading for okay $2,800. Last week, fine $3,700.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 80-$1.25) — "Sweet Smell Success" (UA). Burt Lancaster and Tony Curtis are heavy artillery and critics gave it a brisk send-off. Staying nine days and in that stretch should crack $15,000. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk). Better than $8,000.

Nixon (Rubin) (1,400; $1.50-$3)— "Around World" (UA) (13th wk). Holiday extra shows helped and still in the chips. Up to $16,500. Last week, $15,000.

Squirrel Hill (SW) (900; 85-99)— "Strange One" (Col) (2d wk). Fair $3,000. Last week, nearly $4,000.

Stanley (SW) (3,800; 80-$1.25) — "Delicate Delinquent" (Par). Jerry Lewis in person at four shows opening day, on the Fourth, accounted for nearly $6,000 and on strength of that the week should show at least $16,000. Ought to hold at that figure. Last week, "Johnny Tremain" (BV). Disappointing $4,500.

Warner (SW) (1,500; $1.25-$2.50) — "Ten Commandments" (Par) (17th wk). Picking up again and will yield fine $15,000 on the session. Last week over $13,500.

'TAMMY' TASTY 14G, DENVER; 'MAN' 7½G

Denver, July 9.

"Tammy and the Bachelor" at Paramount is leading the town and stays. Others holding include "Delicate Delinquent" at the Denham, "Man on Fire" at the Orpheum and "Around the World" going into ninth week at the Tabor.

Estimates for This Week

'Sun' Robust $23,000, Toronto; 'Bernardine' Boff 25G, 'Value' 14G

Toronto, July 9.

On newcomers, "Island in the Sun" is off to a socko start for evening weekend turnaway biz, and "Bernardine" also hefty in three-house combo. On holdovers, "Something of Value" is also holding its own in second stanza, with "Tammy and the Bachelor" also hep in second frame. Showing no change to lusty biz is "Doctor in the House," this for fourth stanza, with "Happy Road" also neat in second frame.

Estimates for This Week

Carlton (Rank) (2,518; 60-$1)— "Island in Sun" (20th). Sock $23,000. Last week, "Saint Joan" (UA), bad $7,000.

Christie, Hyland (Rank) (877; 1,357; $1) — "Doctor at Large" (Rank) (4th wk). Holding hep at $10,000. Last week, same.

Chicago, July 9.

More potent product entered over the holiday weekend to give the Loop its third consecutive week of soaring grosses. Meanwhile, Universal releases its second multiple first-run package, "Tammy and Bachelor" with "Midnight Story," in 21 outlying theatres with its chief rival, "D.I.," breaking simultaneously in 50 nabe theatres after its successful downtown run here. "Tammy"-"Story" combo is grossing approximately 50% higher than normal for subsequent runs and considerably better than the last Universal package, "Joe Butterfly" and "Kelly and Me." Estimated take is $91,000 for initial frame.

"Something of Value" gets off to a hefty start at the Woods for $38,000, while "Johnny Tremain" with "Gun Duel in Durango" looks like a mighty $22,800 first framer at the Roosevelt with holdouts forming in the morning hours. "Fire Down Below" rounds first at the Chicago for a very nice $33,000, while the Esquire gets a grand slam $17,000 to start with "Beau James." "Calypso Heat Wave" with "Ride the High Iron" beats out a tepid tattoo at the Monroe for $4,500 for first, and "Beast of Hollow Mountain" with "Boss" shapes a pleasant $5,600 at the Grand for its initial frame. "Invitation to Dance" starts with an agile $4,500 at the World. "Papa, Mama, Maid and I" looks bright at the Carnegie for $2,500.

Second framers are still the heavyweights on the scene here, with both "Pride and Passion" at the State-Lake and "Silk Stockings" at the Loop sock draws. "St. Joan" looks relatively tame at the Garrick in same frame.

Roadshows continue with good to capacity grosses, while "Island in Sun" at the Oriental manages a durable fourth frame at the Oriental, and "Gunfight at O. K. Corral" winds up with six weeks at United Artists. "Green Man" in third frame at the Surf holds as the hottest art house product in town.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (H&E Balaban) (480; 90)—"Papa, Mama, Maid and I" (Teltel). Neat $2,500. Last week, "It Happened in Park" (Indie) (2d wk), $2,300.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.50)—"Fire Down Below" (Col). Glowing $33,000. Last week, "Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk), $17,000.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,400; $1.25)—"Beau James" (Par). Dandy $17,000. Last week, subsequent run.

Garrick (B&K) (850; 90-$1.25)—"St. Joan" (UA) (2d wk). Slight $6,500. Last week, $10,000.

Grand (Indie) (1,200; 90-$1.25)—"Beast of Hollow Mountain" (UA) and "Boss" (UA). Comfortable $5,600. Last week, "Sierra Stran-

'Bernardine' Wow $8,000, Omaha; 'Delinquent' Hep 5G, 'Value' Smart 4½G

Omaha, July 9.

Biz is looking up at the downtown first-runs this week, with "Bernardine," great at the Omaha, setting the pace. "Delicate Delinquent" is loud at the Brandeis, and "Something of Value" is scoring at the State. "Island in Sun" slipped to moderate in its second stanza at the Orpheum.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,100; 75-90)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par) and "Weapon" (Rep). Strong $5,000. Last week, "Public Pigeon No. 1" (RKO) and "Young Stranger" (RKO), $3,200.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 75-90)—"Bernardine" (20th). Fine $8,000. Last week, "Kettles on MacDonald's Farm" (U) and "Men Afraid" (U), $4,500.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,980; 75-90)—"Island in Sun" (20th) (2d wk). Fair $7,500 after $12,000 bow.

State (Goldberg) (850; 75-90)—"Something of Value" (M-G). High $4,500. Last week, "Johnny Tremain" (BV); $3,500.

'Fire' Torrid $12,000, 'Prince' Oke 8G, Balto

Baltimore, July 9.

With a number of new, healthy entries to brighten the scene and a slight hike in pre-Fourth attendance, the biz picture was slightly up here. "Fire Down Below," at the Hippodrome made a hefty showing and "Prince and the Showgirl," at the Stanley is sturdy. "Sweet Smell of Success," is bright at the New and "The Miller's Beautiful Wife," at the Cinema is nice.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Fruchtman) (3,100; 50-$1.25)—"Island in Sun" (20th) (4th wk). Good $7,000 after $11,000 last week.

Cinema (Schwaber) (460; 50-$1.25)—"Miller's Beautiful Wife" (DCA). Nice $3,500. Last week, "For Whom Bell Tolls" (Par), $2,500.

Film Centre (Rappaport) (890; 50-$1.25)—"Around World" (UA) (29th wk). Solid $10,500 after near same last week.

Five West (Schwaber) (560; 50-$1.25)—"Green Man" (DCA) (5th wk). Good $3,000 after $3,100 in last frame.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,300; 50-$1.25) — "Fire Down Below" (Col). Hot $12,000. Last week, "Johnny Tremain" (BV) (2d wk), $6,000.

Mayfair (Hicks) (980; 50-$1.25)—"Joe Butterfly" (U) (2d wk). Okay $3,000 after $6,000 last week.

New (Fruchtman) (1,600; 50-$1.25)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA). Hefty $12,000. Last week, "She Devil" (20th) and "Kronos" (20th), $6,000.

Playhouse (Schwaber) (410; 50-$1.25) — "Bachelor Party" (UA) (4th wk). Staunch $4,100 after $4,300 in third.

Stanley (SW) (3,200; 50-$1.25)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Happy $8,000. Last week, "D.I." (WB), same.

Town (Rappaport) (1,400; 50-$1.25) — "Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk). Fine $6,500 after $11,000 in first.

'Oklahoman' Sock $18,000, Kaycee

Kansas City, July 9.

Some big ones moved in for the holiday week and are making strong showings. "Bernardine" in four Fox Midwest houses may be big enough for a holdover. "The Oklahoman," in four Dickinson theatres, may hit a record week in these situations, held down lately by rain. "Prince and the Showgirl" at the Paramount and "Man on Fire" at the Midland both pleasant. Weather turning from heavy rain to more seasonal warm temperatures, a boon to theatres.

Estimates for This Week

Dickinson, Glen, Shawnee Drive-in, Leawood Drive-in (Dickinson) (750; 700; 1,100 cars; 900 cars; 85c person)—"The Oklahoman" (AA) and "Footsteps in Night" (AA). Fancy $18,000, biggest yet in this hookup, helped by holiday play and absence of rain. Last week, "Bail out at 43,000" (UA) and "Gun Duel at Durango" (UA), nice $12,000.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 75-90)—"African Queen" (UA) and "Moulin Rouge" (UA) (reissues) (3d wk). Oke $900. Last week, $1,000.

Midland (Loew) (3,500; 60-80)—"Man on Fire" (M-G) and "Lawless Eighties" (Rep). Hearty $9,500. Last week, "Bachelor Party" (M-G) and "A Woman's Devotion" (Rep) same.

Missouri (SW-Cinerama) (1,194; $1.25-$2) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Cinerama) (18th wk). Satisfactory $10,000. Begins final six weeks. Last week, same.

Paramount (UP) (1,900; 75-90)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Moderately good $8,000. Last

N.Y. SHOWCASES MISS FIREWORKS

The July 4th holiday period resulted in a slight pickup in Broadway film business, but the anticipated mighty surge did not materialize. As a matter of fact, a number of Main Stem operators expressed disappointment in the holiday stanza wicket activity. Boxoffice results were generally termed "pleasant but not spectacular." Good weather plus the four-day holiday from Thursday to Sunday, which many firms permitted, drove New Yorkers in droves to the beaches and the countryside. The tourist influx apparently found other Gotham attractions more appealing than the film houses.

Biz did not come near to the powerful spurt experienced last year when July 4th came out on a Wednesday. In addition to preventing a mass exodus from the city because of the mid-week timing, last year's July 4th holiday was accompanied by rain, the film industry's best ally during the summer months.

Despite the generally offish results, a number of attractions were able to buck the trend. "Pride and the Passion," at the Capitol, chalked up a strong $74,000 for its initial holdover week after scoring $110,000 for the opening round. The Alan Freed rock 'n' roll stage show at the Paramount, coupled with the critically-rapped "Beginning of the End," was just right for the vacationing teenagers who showed their appreciation to the tune of $120,000, best take at the Par since the previous Freed rock 'n' roll outing.

"The Delicate Delinquent," Jerry Lewis' first Dean Martin-less picture, scored a fancy $32,000 in its opening round at the Mayfair and is apparently proving a solid family entry during the vacation period. "The Prince and the Showgirl," at the tourist mecca Radio City Music Hall, continues its brisk pace with a mighty $148,000 for its fourth round. The hard-ticket entries, particularly "Around the World in 80 Days" at the Rivoli, showed continued power. "80 Days" racked up a capacity $48,000 for its 38th week. "Seven Wonders" at the Warner brought in $34,300 for 15 shows and "10 Commandments" at the Criterion tallied $44,500 for 16 shows.

"Sweet Smell of Success," despite controversy surrounding film, is proving good b.o. at Loew's State with $33,000 for its first followup round. "Island in Sun" at Roxy is holding its own with a strong $78,000 for current round.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$2)—"Beau James" (Par) (3d wk). Second session ending today (Wed.) looks to hit fine $29,000 or near. Opening session scored $33,000.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$1.80)—"Nana" (Times) (13th wk). The 12th stanza ended Thursday (4) was good $6,000 as compared with $6,200 for previous round. Stays until July 21 when "Lovers' Net," (Times), another French import, opens.

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.80)—"French They Are A Funny Race" (Cont) (8th-final wk). The seventh canto ended Monday (8) with fair $3,900. Sixth round was good $4,700. Continues until Thursday (11) when "Maid in Paris" (Cont) moves in.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Pride and Passion" (UA) (3d wk). First holdover session winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) looks headed for a big $74,000. Initial round which included July 4th was a mighty $110,000. "Pride" is scoring best biz at this house in months and stands a chance to finish among the three or four biggest pix to play the house.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; $1.80-$3.30)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (35th wk). This round winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) is seen heading for $44,500 for 16 shows. The previous round was great $45,000 for 17 shows.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—"Torero" (Col) (8th wk). Seventh inning concluded Monday (8) dipped to $5,400 after solid $9,500 for previous round. Continues until July 28.

55th St. Playhouse (E-F) (300; $1.25-$1.50)—"The Rising of the

Los Angeles, July 9.

Despite torrid weather offsetting some anticipated holiday biz, first-run grosses are zooming this frame to hit the 1957 high with a tremendous $291,100 expected. "Gunfight at O.K. Corral," paired with "Crowded Paradise," leads the regular field for a fancy $31,400 at the State, New Fox and Wiltern for first week of its moveover engagement.

"Sweet Smell of Success" and "Fort Laramie" are outstanding and shape toward a stout $26,600 in four situations, followed by "Fire Down Below" and "Utah Blaine" which are racking up a nifty $23,000 in three houses. "Prince and the Showgirl" is trailing with a moderate $17,100. in sight at a trio of sites. "Beau James" looks to a good $14,000 at the Hollywood Paramount.

"Pride and Passion" is showy at $25,000 in second frame at the Fox Willshire, while "Island in the Sun" should hit a strong $19,000 in fourth week at the Chinese. Among the longruns, "Seven Wonders" is tops at $41,400 at the Warner Hollywood, "Around World" should do a fine $27,000 at the Carthay while "10 Commandments" is registering an excellent $20,000 at the Warner Beverly.

Estimates for This Week

Hollywood Paramount (F&M) (1,468; 90-$1.80)—"Beau James" (Par). Good $14,400. Opened with benefit preem, $15,000. Last week, "Gunfight at OK Corral" (Par) (6 days, 5th wk), $10,050.

Pantages (RKO) (2812; $1.10-$1.75)—"Man on Fire" (M-G). Disappointing $8,000. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) (5 days, 4th wk), $5,900.

Downtown Paramount, Ritz, Vogue (ABPT-FWC) (3,300; 1,330; 825; 80-$1.80)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Moderate $17,100. Last week, D'town Par, Vogue with Wiltern, "The D.I." (WB) and "Counterfeit Plan" (WB) (2d wk), $17,100.

Orpheum Hawaii, Uptown, Loyola (Metropolitan-G&S-FWC) (2,213; 1,106; 1,715; 1,248; 80-$1.80)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) and "Fort Laramie" (UA). Stout $26,500. Last week, Orpheum, Hawaii, Uptown, "Monster That Changed World" (UA) and "The Vampire" (UA), $15,200.

'Cinerama Holiday' Wow 30G, Cleve.; 'Man' 11½G

Cleveland, July 9.

"Cinerama Holiday" is making the biggest noise here for the Palace with a pinwheeling take for the first nine days. It also raised about $5,000 in a benefit preem for the Cleveland Museum of Natural History.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (S-W) (3,800; 70-$1)—"Island in Sun" (4th wk). Satisfactory $13,000. Last week, $16,500.

Hippodrome (Telem't) (3,700; 70-$1)—"Bernardine" (20th). Smart $18,000. Last week, "Joe Butterfly" (U), $10,000.

Ohio (Loew) (1,244; $1.25-$2.50)—"Around World" (UA) (3d wk). Great $23,000. Last week, same.

Palace (S-W Cinerama) (1,523; $1.25-$2.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Cinerama) (2d wk). Lofty $30,000 for the first nine days. Last week, final three days of "This Is Cinerama," good $13,000.

State (Loew) (3,000; 70-90)—"Man on Fire" (M-G). Fairish $11,500. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk), $10,000.

Stillman (Loew) (2,700; 70-90)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA). Solid $15,000. Last week, "Giant Claw" (Col) and "Night World Exploded" (Col), $13,000.

'Bernardine' Fat 14G Leads L'ville

Louisville, July 9.

Rialto, big Fourth Avenue seater, is drawing the trade this week with "Bernardine." Pat Boone and supporting names are pulling the teenagers, who seem to have coin to spend when it's an item they want. "Man on Fire" is sluggish at Loew's, while "Joe Butterfly" at the Kentucky is shaping okay.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.-U.A.) (900; $1.25-$2.40) — "Around World" (UA) (6th wk). Showing weekend strength at $12,000, same as last week.

Kentucky (Switow) (1,000; 50-85)—"Joe Butterfly" (U). Nice $6,000. Last week, "Man Afraid" (U) and "Kettles on Old MacDonald's Farm" (U), same.

Loew's (United Artists) (3,000; 74-99) — "Man on Fire" (M-G). Slow $3,500. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G). Virile $11,000.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 50-85) — "Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Excellent $8,000 in sight. Last week, "Monkey on Back" (UA). Modest $4,500.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 50-85) — "Bernardine" (20th) and "Lure of Swamp" (20th). Sock $14,000. Last week, "Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Spoilers of Forest" (20th). Healthy $10,000.

'SUN' BRIGHT $14,000, PROV.; 'VALUE' HOT 11G

Providence, July 9.

Improved pic fare has mainstemmers giving the shore resorts some stiff competition for a change and all stands are on the hopefully happy side. RKO Albee is the topper with "Island in The Sun." Loew's "Something of Value," Strand's "Gunfight at the O.K. Corral" and Majestic's "Prince and the Showgirl" are all strong.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-90)—"Island In Sun" (20th) and "Rebel In Town" (UA). Solid $14,000 Last week, "China Gate" (20th) and "Shadow of Fear" (UA), dead $4,000.

Avon (L-G) (527; 60-90)—"The Green Man" (DCA). Fairly good $2,000. Last week, "Last Holiday" (S) and "Mr. Hulot's Holiday" (GBD), summery $1,800.

Cincinnati, July 9.

"Delicate Delinquent," with two days of personals by starrer Jerry Lewis, a holiday zoomer in the flagship Albee, is big contributor this week to whopper total for major houses. "Fire Down Below," the only other new bill, shapes hotsy at Keith's. "Bernardine" at the Palace and "Something of Value" in the Grand, loom okay second rounders.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.25)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par). Smash $19,000, swelled by stage appearances of Jerry Lewis Friday and Saturday (5-6) at $1.25-$1.50 scale and 50c for juves. Last week, "Island in Sun" (20th) (3d wk), six days, $9,000.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (57th wk). Great $18,000 after $19,000 last week.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 90-$1.25)—"Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk). Pleasing $7,000 trailing $11,500 bow.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 75-$1.25)—"Fire Down Below" (Col). Swell $11,000. Holds. Last week, Johnny Tremain" (BV) (2d wk), six days, $6,500.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 90-$1.25)—"Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk). Good $10,000. Last week, $14,000.

Valley (Wiethe) (1,300; $1.50-$2.50)—"Around World" (UA) (4th wk). First half surge points to third straight climb over preem to $19,000, shading last week's wham $18,700.

On Present Pace & Comparative Data Par Sees 'Commandments' Gross Sure To Tally $50,000,000 to $60,000,000

By comparing the boxoffice results of "10 Commandments" with its up-to-now all-time top grosser, "The Greatest Show on Earth," another Cecil B. DeMille production, Paramount is not only confident that the Moses saga will surpass "Greatest Show's" world-wide film rental gross of $25,000,000 but foresees between $50,000,000 and $60,000,000.

With only 150 "10 C's" engagements in the U. S. and Canada, the film company already has $8,500,000 in film rentals in the till. The picture will start 200 additional runs during July and August, including several multiple engagements on an intra-city basis.

Highlights of the comparison between "10 C's" and "Greatest Show" in key city runs reveal the following:

On the basis of a single run in N. Y. at the Criterion Theatre, "10 C's" scored $950,000 in film rentals at the end of its 32d week. In contrast, the total cumulative film rental in the N. Y. area for "Greatest Show," representing some 600 to 700 engagements, was $1,300,000. "10 C's," of course, is continuing indefinitely at the Criterion.

In Boston, "10 C's" chalked up $450,000 in four engagements as of June 15. The cumulative total film rentals for all runs in the Boston area for "Greatest Show" was $570,000. Ten runs in Buffalo gave "10 C's" $240,000 in film rentals as compared with "Greatest Show's" tal earnings of $230,000. In Cincy, "10 C's" brought in $265,000 for 11 runs while total "Greatest Show" bookings amounted to $315,000. Cleveland's three runs of "10 C's" resulted in $300,000; total runs for "Greatest Show" drew $350,000. The same pattern is noted in Washington, Detroit, Jacksonville, St. Louis, Los Angeles and Chicago.

Just starting to move into subsequent runs, "10 C's" is showing an amazing pull in local nabes despite the long downtown runs. For example, in two neighborhood houses in Cleveland—the Granada and the Park—the DeMille epic nabbed a combined total of $24,000 for the first week. Even on big pictures these houses rarely score more than $7,500 as a combo.

Paramount is following no set pattern in releasing "10 Commandments." In each area, it is following a policy which it feels will give the picture the best chance. For example, while there's been only one run in N. Y., there have been 32 engagements in the Jacksonville, Fla., territory.

Five-Zoned Philly

As a result of a court decision in Philadelphia, Par divided the city into five zones in each of which it licensed one exclusive additional special engagement to the best bidder. Eleven exhibitors in Philly charged in court that the new pattern would upset the usual system of day-and-date bookings that followed 28 days after the first run. They charged, too, that in adopting the zoning system, Par in effect was granting clearance to theatres not in substantial competition because they were so far away from each other.

DAKOTA'S HOLDOUT ALSO DROPS FAST TIME

Minot, N. D., July 9.

After being in effect for a month, daylight saving time has been junked in this city of 30,000, one of North Dakota's largest towns.

The city council by a vote of 8 to 6, with all aldermen present for the first of three times that the matter has been considered, finally heeded petitions with 1,500 signers plus wishes of the Chamber of Commerce, comprising business and professional men, and did away with the fast time.

In so doing, the aldermen reversed three previous actions in DST's favor.

They followed the lead of more than 25 other North Dakota towns that have dropped DST after brief experience with it.

RANK'S 'LOOK WHAT'S COMING' BALLY SHORT

Following the 20th-Fox "Big Show" pattern, Rank Film Distributors of America has prepared an advance attractions short and will screen it in all exchanges for exhibitors during July and August. Subject is called "Full Screen Ahead" and was prepared in London.

The short runs 20 minutes and includes excerpts from various upcoming Rank attractions in color and black-and-white, according to Kenneth Hargreaves, RFDA topper.

Sales chief Irving Sochin said the Rank films would "play an important role in the revival of attendance in theatres" during the summer months and the early Fall. This, traditionally, is the time when business picks up.

Big Hoopla for Denver Preem of UI's 'Passage'

Denver, July 9.

The Mile High City is vacuuming a well-used red carpet for the summer's second film premiere on July 17 at the Paramount. Pic is UI's "Night Passage," starring James Stewart and Audie Murphy, both of whom will personal at the premiere. For the opening, the Rio Grande Railroad's Prospector will change its name for the run from Salt Lake City to Denver the night of July 15, bearing a banner which will proclaim it as the "Night Passage Special." Train will leave Salt Lake at 5 p.m. arriving in Denver at 8:25 a.m. July 16. Celebs aboard will include Audie Murphy, Utah's Gov. George Clyde, and former Colorado Gov. Edwin C. Johnson. Salt Lake film critics Howard Pearson (Deseret News) and James England (Salt Lake Tribune) will be special guests.

Ex-Gov. Johnson, who played a bit as a telegrapher in "Night Passage," will receive a special plaque from UI, engraved with a telegraph key.

'Nun's Story'

glowing reviews in the Catholic press. No decision has been made on whether to present it in black-and-white or in color.

"To shoot a picture in Africa without color doesn't seem like such a good idea," he commented. "On the other hand, to use color in the convent might tend to "pretty up" the scenes. I don't know yet which way we'll go." He admitted having toyed with the idea of using black-and-white and color in the film.

Zinnemann's latest is "A Hatful of Rain" for 20th-Fox, which is due for release soon. It is the first major company release dealing with the narcotics theme since the Code lifted its taboo on dope subjects. Zinnemann said he was extraordinarily pleased with the performances he got out of his actors in the picture.

Film is an extension of the documentary technique which Zinnemann originated in such productions as "The Search" and "The Men."

He said cooperation of the Church in the making of "The Nun's Story" was an absolute necessity, and he valued it highly. "If we didn't have that cooperation it'd be like making 'From Here To Eternity' without the help of the Army," he said.

After "Nun's Story," Zinnemann plans to undertake his first picture as an indie, "The Sundowners," for Warner Bros. It'll be made via his FRZ Co., and will star Deborah Kerr.

make about three pictures a year to fulfill the company's program of 30 to 34 pictures. Under the indie participation method, according to Daff, it represents the work of a man doing a job personally while the staff producer system marks the accomplishment of an organization.

While holding the line against participation for producers, U has no objection to giving them to certain performers. As a matter of fact, it was U that originated the system by arranging the highly successful agreement with James Stewart. It has similar deals on a multiple picture basis with James Cagney, Audie Murphy, Lana Turner and several others.

Karlovy Prizes Cut From 25 to 4

37 Countries Enter Films—U.S. Treatment Irks Festival—Czechs to Build Film Palace

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Karlovy Vary, July 9.

Tenth Karlovy Vary Film Festival of Czechoslavakia opened Saturday afternoon (6) with a local pic "Svejk" (The Good Soldier Schweik) of Karel Stekely.

This pre-World War I watering spot (ex-Carslbad) now has "A" rating for itself from the Federation of International Film Producers and from even-other-years is now an annual.

In keeping with the "A" competitive status, the prizes have been cut from 25 to four. Previously it was hard not to cop a kudo here. It remains to be seen whether party line slants influence prizes. There will be a Grand Prix plus three others at the discretion of an international jury (but mostly of satellite and Russian makeup). Films having social themes may automatically rate above "escapism."

Fest prexy, Jan Sedlacek, is piqued at what he considers the cavalier fashion in which the Motion Picture Export Assn. is handling its "possible" participation.

Screenings are still in the rather stuffy converted ballroom of the ex-Pupp Hotel now the Moskva Palace. Sedlacek told VARIETY that a special Film Palace would be built next year for the '58 fest which would cost $1,000,000. Meanwhile, showings of CinemaScope features are held in the immense outdoor arena which holds 2,000 people. Echo troubles have been resolved.

There are 37 countries entered here so language complicates. An interpreter reads Czech subtitles at every screening. Ceremonial speeches are still conventional before each pic, and still tend to become "dialectical."

All delegations eat together at separate tables, with their country's flag perched on the table. It is easy to approach members of all the delegations. The U.S. "delegation" at the moment comprises one, namely this VARIETY reporter. Marc Spiegel will fly in this week for one day to show an American pic if the impasse is cleared up.

Some of the pix shown will be: "Typon A Nagasaki," "Le Sorcieres De Salem" (Witches of Salem), the pic version of the Arthur Miller play "The Crucible," and "Mort En Fraud" (Fraudulent Death) by France, "Il Piu Bella Momento" (Most Beautiful Moment) and "Souvenirs D'Italie" from Italy, "Springtime of Life" from Argentina, "Juha" in CinemaScope from Finland, "Doctor At Large" from England, "Beseiged House" from Brazil, "Orgullo" from Spain, "Sacred Testament" from Austria, "Felix Krull" from West Germany, Red China's "New Year Sacrifice," "The Northern Veil" from India, "Typhoon 13" from Japan, "Big and Small" from Yugoslavia, and "Prologue" from Russia. Fest winds July 21.

'80 DAYS' INTO TOKYO

Set for 16 Weeks Minimum Run In 35m Version

Tokyo, July 9.

"Around the World in 80 Days" will reopen the CineStage Picadilly in downtown Tokyo July 20 booking in advance for 16 weeks. Film will be shown in a 35m version instead of the original 70m. Todd-AO edition. Renovated theatre is too small for the mammoth curved screen.

Tickets in the 1,389 seater are classified in seven price brackets, ranging from 210 yen (58 cents) to 800 yen ($2.22). No newsreels or short subjects will be shown with the film.

Japan is the fourth country to exhibit "80 Days," following the U.S., France and Britain.

cities for test operations.

Next four months: Establish labor relations policy.

Next four: Schedule and commence test operations.

Next 12 months: Trail and evaluation.

Next five months: First expansion to five or six additional cities.

Next five to six months: Second expansion.

The foregoing would wrap up Part One. Thereafter would come the drastic streamlining—the paring of exchanges in favor of the physically limited regional office setup, presumably similar to the Buena Vista (Walt Disney) organization.

Management engineering firm made separate reports, each company individually having been given breakdowns on its own expenses in comparison with the averages of all others combined. It was reported that Metro and 20th-Fox have the highest exchange overhead.

Company presidents and distribution officials through the years have resisted all suggestions for cutting down on field forces. They've contended the picture business is unique and that office representation in each key area is essential.

Another factor is that each company has feared that to shutter operations in a certain town would mean loss of business to rival outfits which remained open. In light of this it's significant that Booz, Allen underlines the desirability of unanimous participation in the efficiency drive.

Impressive to observers is the detailed nature of the report. Specific money figures are given in relation to operations in each area; vague generalities are for the most part eschewed.

The report is now the subject of much skull practice by company execs intra-murally. Decisions on what, if any, part of the economy program will be adopted await extensive consideration and formal pro-&-con airings at future MPAA meetings.

Heirs of Toll

it would favor a toll-tv trial "if there were some way of instituting tests which would aid the Commission in its decision and which would aid the Commission in its decision and which would not hurt the public." However, it added, careful analysis of the problem had led it to conclude that "no trial demonstration would serve as a litmus-paper test that would indicate to the Commission how pay television would operate under full authorization."

CBS added that, when confronted with an unmarked bottle, "there are measures short of drinking a little of the contents to determine whether it is a mouthwash or poison."

ABC, urging dismissal of the proceedings, suggested that the entire issue be determined by the Congress. It also told the FCC that "It now appears that the majority of the proponents no longer believe that broadcast channels are needed for the service they propose to proyide; they contend that it can be done on a closed circuit basis."

The Exhibitors Joint Committee on Toll-tv, maintaining that a test of pay-as-you-see- wasn't the answer, stressed that any test situation, if it is to be meaningful, "would entail the very consequences that the Commission desires to avoid by not issuing a full scale experimental authorization."

Oscar Doob Into New MPPA Post

Oscar A. Doob, veteran promotion exec, has been appointed executive coordinator of the Motion Picture Assn. of America's ad-pub committee .As such he takes direct supervision over institutional film bally and goodwill projects independent of the business-building program being undertaken by the Council of Motion Picture Organizations.

It's understood the job pays $25,000 per year, with an additional $25,000 allocated for maintenance of offices. Doob will spend three days a week in New York and the balance of his time in Washington where he maintains his home. An ad-pub coordinator on the Coast is to be named shortly. MPAA is fostering both posts.

Of late Doob has been preparing a press presentation for COMPO, this being a compilation of facts and figures which film execs are to exhibit at forthcoming meetings with editors and publishers. Basic idea is to convince the fourth estaters of the importance of theatres in community economics and the entertainment scheme of things. Doob retired from Loew's in 1955. For 20 years he had been ad-pub director of Loew's Theatres, for five years was an exec in the theatre operating department and subsequently did special promotion work on Metro pictures. His new appointment was announced by Eric A. Johnston, president of the MPAA, and Roger Lewis, chairman of MPAA's ad-pub committee.

umbrella of the Webb-Pomerene Act, the U. S. industry enjoys comparatively little official support in its export activities. The industry itself has rarely called on the government to aid it in straightening out problems abroad.—Ed.)

In return, commented the producers, "the German market has become extraordinarily important for the foreign film." It pointed out that, in 1955, the Americans imported into Germany, 87.6% of their entire output.

The report notes the import of the motion picture in America "where the influence of the film on public and industry is one reason why it enjoys such considerable support via the state and industry." (There exists no state support for Hollywood of any kind, financially or otherwise.—Ed.)

Point made by the German filmmakers is that their Government has a tendency to treat motion pictures as a purely commercial rather than a culturally-important product, and it goes on:

"It is always possible to import from abroad (into German) articles that can be manufactured cheaper abroad. However, this approach is not easily transferable to the film business. Here, a nation of great culture robs itself of an important cultural expression simply because, due to purely commercial reasons, it cannot assure itself of a firm existence basis."

The Assn. pointed out that in France and Italy, the motion picture is being considered as both an entertainment and a cultural medium.

against National Theatres, Fox West Coast and 20th-Fox.

A second trial, specifically against Golden State Theatres, United California Theatres, T & D Jr. Enterprises, San Francisco Theatres, McNeil and Naify, will follow.

In addition to Alioto, Maxwell Keith and George Slaff are representing Goldwyn.

Representing the defendants are Arthur B. Dunne of Frisco, the firm of O'Melveny and Meyer of Los Angeles, and Dwight, Royal, Harris, Kagel and Kaski of New York.

Trial is expected to last anywhere from two to six weeks.

PRODUCERS STILL ARGENTINE'S 'PETS'; CZAR FORCES FIRSTRUN BOOKINGS

Buenos Aires, July 9.

Tension and suspicion are once more splitting Argentine exhibitors and producers into two hostile camps.

A recent meeting designed to reach a working agreement on conditions for release of a backlog of Argentine product—none of which has been exhibited in the last six months, only exacerbated the differences.

Exhibitors refused to sit down tamely under dictation from Screen Institute President Antonio Aita, as to native product they are compelled to exhibit under the new film Law. They are resisting application of that law as unconstitutional.

They were notified of a list of native product available for release, which has received a Screen Institute seal as deserving of protection, and were given 30 days to negotiate rental terms with the producers. Under the Film Law if such negotiations fail, the Screen Institute should draw lots to see which firstrun houses are compelled to exhibit the films, under the lot-drawing system.

Aita then determined that "La Casa del Angel" (Sono) be assigned to the Ocean, "La Bestia Humana" (Cinco) the Gran Rex, "Una Viuda Dificil" (AAA) to the Monumental and Palace day-and-date, "Todo Sea Para Bien" (Prometeo) to the Ambassador and Libertador, "Las Campanas de Teresa" (Sono) the Metro, and "Continente Blanco" (Mar del Plata) the Broadway, Sarmiento and Luxor, within the second, third and fourth weeks in July, and simultaneously in another five neighborhood and suburban houses.

The trade is buzzing with insinuations of partiality on the part of the Screen Institute's qualifying boards, which reviewed the native product and awarded Protection seals. Observers stress that attempts at regulating a business of this kind are always open to interpretations of partiality, corruption or prejudice, much more so than under a free, competitive system.

Producers claim such reports are fabricated by exhibitors, in the hope of sabotaging the Film Law.

The law has achieved nothing so far in the way of promoting the native industry, and production activity is still confined to making advertising shorts and planning possible productions.

Exhibitors here are appearing before the Screen Institute (recently created under the new Film Law to govern the film industry), outlining their many objections to that law as so far written.

They particularly stress those points which they consider a violation of principles of "free enterprise," and finally were requested to summarize their thoughts on paper. This will add a few more reams to the thousands already written on the subject before the law was drafted.

These talks gave rise to rumors that general application of the law would be postponed 40 days. This would also give time to work out a new scale of theatre admissions.

With the idea of unity in strength, exhibitors are organizing a national meeting of exhibitors from all over the country, to gather here in a few weeks. That convention will articulate the theatres' attitude in regard to the Film Law.

Exhibitors have refused to negotiate playing time with native producers on such pictures as have received Screen Institute Qualifying Board seals. Under the new law, the exhibitors could negotiate rental terms on those pictures classed as deserving protection, which must therefore be accepted for first-run. Failing negotiation, the Screen Institute can draw lots to determine which first-run house is obliged to exhibit the product. By refusing all negotiation, the exhibitors put the Institute in the position of having to enforce the protection. In this way they stress their opposition to a law which penalizes them for benefit of a group which received fabulous "loans" from the deposed Peron dictatorship, which the State can never recover.

2 Yank Pix Tops At Tel-Aviv B.O.

Tel-Aviv, July 2.

Two American pictures lead at the wickets here with a record number of performances. One is "King and I" (20th), which after 10 record weeks in a first-run house, continues successfully in a smaller cinema. The other is "War and Peace" (Par), now in its 10th week at a large first-run.

This record has a parallel only in the run of two Indian pix recently shown in Israel. They are "Awara" (The Vagabond), which after a 21-week run in Tel-Aviv now is playing in Jerusalem, and the other "Shree 433," which went 20 weeks.

Newly arrived pix here include "High Society" (M-G), French "L'Homme et l'Enfant" (with Eddie Constantine), Jean Renoir's "Elena et les Hommes" in Tel-Aviv, "Oklahoma" (RKO), after five weeks here now is in Jerusalem and "Written on the Wind" (U) now in Haifa.

Judge's Own Idea?

San Francisco, July 9.

It was a press agent's dream, but it was for real.

Municipal Judge Clayton Horn found five women guilty of shoplifting last week and then put them on probation providing (and here's the p.a.'s dreamy part):

1) They attend "The Ten Commandments" at the Stagedoor Theatre;

2) They return to court Aug. 6 with 200-word essays on the lesson they'd learned from the Eighth Commandment, "Thou Shalt Not Steal."

Stagedoor owners Irving Ackerman and Herbert Rosener and manager Jack Allen all swear it was the judge's own idea.

Franzosi Joins RKO

Buenos Aires, July 2.

Victor Franzosi, former Columbia manager in Argentina, has been appointed to head RKO's office, replacing Hugo Stramer, who goes to Paramount, in turn replacing Robert Graham, transferring to Australia.

Franzosi was with Columbia for 26 years.

Pakistan Cinema Shortage Grows

Karachi, Pakistan, July 2.

The key cities of Pakistan are feeling the pinch of a cinema shortage. With the local film studios turning out one picture a week on the average and restricted renewal of imports of pix from India, many productions are awaiting release because a number of cinemas showing English language pix exclusively are being offered tempting terms by distributors to switch over to screening Pakistani and Indian films.

This cinema shortage is being felt in Karachi and Lahore particularly. In Lahore, there are four cinemas that exhibit English language pictures exclusively. But recently two of them have been intermittently showing Pakistani and Indian pix. If this happens then the big foreign distributors will get playing time of only 10 to 15 weeks a year whereas previously they used to have 30 to 40 weeks. The big foreign distributors will thus be forced to sell only selected pictures.

The shortage of pix theatres has resulted in exhibition of film on cinema rental basis in Lahore. Previously exhibitors ran the films on percentage basis which was fixed on a sliding scale according to the quality of the film and the standard of the theatre. All of which has boosted the take.

Rome Exhibs Try To Boost Biz Via Oldies

Rome, July 9.

Product-shy Roman exhibitors are trying a large number of reissues in local theatres, most of them getting the first-run plushery treatment. While some of the revived product is vintage, other comeback items are very recent. Two of last season's hits, "Picnic" (Col) and "Love is Many Splendored Thing" (20th) are currently re-playing the circuits. Ditto three Mark Hellinger productions, "Brute Force" (U), "The Killers" (U) and "Naked City" (U), are also getting circuit dates. Paramount is digging back into the past to come up with "Love Letters" and "Northwest Mounted Police," both past hits here.

Metro is bringing back "Boom Town," which reopened at the Adriano, Rome's largest theatre, as well as some other oldies. A certain number of recent Italo-mades are reappearing in firstrun showcases, too.

Anzac Showmen Pretty Morbid

Sydney, July 9.

Over-zealous and fiscal-minded governmental officials are seen becoming show biz's Number One menace via infliction of new taxes on a populace already well imposted according to Aussie showmen. Increase in bus, train and trolley fares is helping keep the once-keen femme matinee-goer right in her home zone these days, hence a falling off generally in city cinema matinee trade. As in America, cost of ordinary foodstuffs, plus the weekly tax deduction, has average family man groggy. Thus leaving very little for entertainment. Where once the worker was able to afford at least two visits weekly to the cinema, today he only goes once every two weeks.

Business is presently pleading with the government to ease up. Newspapers, too, are concerned about an unemployment increase, due to companies which find it impossible to operate on rising overhead, attributed to drastic import restrictions.

Lowering of the living standard of the average Aussie worker, the fallout in department store trading are all depressants.

A Sopping-Whopping Toddy

By BARY BARNETT

London, July 9.

The unpredictable British climate changed from a sweltering heatwave to a chilly downpour for Mike Todd's "fabulous" open air party at the Battersea Pleasure Gardens, London's riverside Coney Island, following the London preem of "Around the World In 80 Days." Around 2,000 guests lined up in the rain to get Todd's insurance against the elements—2,000 plastic raincoats—before going on to enjoy the fun of the fair, and sample food and drink from the corners of the globe. Estimates ranged from $84,000 to $210,000, but the exact figure was not divulged by Todd.

Guests began to arrive at the Astoria picture house in London's Charing Cross Road an hour before the scheduled time, and by then, hundreds of police were controlling a crowd that could easily rival that of a Coronation. In the street, men in Victorian clothes paraded up and down with sandwich boards advertising the picture. The temperature was up in the 80's. Inside the theatre, guests, who paid as much as $280 for a seat, in aid of the Newspaper Press Fund—the event raised about $42,000—waited for the arrival of the Duchess of Kent and Princess Alexandria, while two military bands played.

During the show, the audience applauded spontaneously at the appearance of a star or at the camera work. At the final curtain applause went on for several minutes. Outside, the crowds were still there although it was midnight and rain was falling heavily. A convoy of buses waited to take the guests along to Charing Cross pier where river boats were laid on for the journey to Battersea. Women in evening gowns were soaked through as they queued to get aboard, and the salons were packed tight. Hundreds of gatecrashers tried to get into the amusement park, and quite a number were successful.

All the side shows and rides were manned by barkers in Victorian costume. The food ranged between fish and chips served up in newspapers dated 1872, to hot dogs, hamburgers, popcorn, doughnuts, prawns from Suez, Chinese egg rolls, steak and kidney pie and champagne. London's never before seen a party like it—rain or no rain.

ENGLISH THEATREMEN WEIGH VIDEO CLIPS

Liverpool, July 9.

Exhibs here can't make up their minds as to whether film excerpts on British television whet customers' appetites or not.

Some go to see a particular film because it has been mentioned on video, said E. Finlay, local exhib, but it was possible they would have eventually gone to see it irrespective of television.

Henry Simpson, presiding at exhibs' section meeting, said some of them felt that tv programs would be more beneficial to cinemas if they were more on lines of trailers used in cinemas.

When film clips were televised on London release, it was little advantage to subsequent-run exhibs who might show the film three or even six months later, he said.

Italo Exhibs to Cut Outlay for Publicity

Rome, July 2.

A sharp reduction in publicity expenditure may be one of the future consequences of the current Italian exhibition crisis, which recently forced the shutdown (still in force) of all Naples theatres every Wednesday. An AGIS (exhib association) spokesman this week outlined several means by which peninsular exhibs expect to pare down their overhead and face the crisis with a new long-range program: limitation of working days, reduction of screening hours, pare publicity expenses and cut the number of pix taken for release.

Expenditure cut threat is worrying the Italian Publicity Federation (FIP), which last week held an emergency meeting to face the current situation. It was decided that a renewed effort should be made to remind exhibits about the value of publicity, pointing out that now more than ever an effort should be made to recapture defecting patrons before it's too late.

Legit Season in Ankara

Ankara, July 2.

The five state theatres in Ankara, namely, the Kuchuk, the Opera, the Buyuk, The Third Theatre and the Chambre presented 1,176 performances for 26 different productions last season. As usual the season started on the first of October and ended the last day of May.

Among plays presented last season the most popular, according to their runs were: "The Rainmaker," "The Wooden Dish," "The Fourposter," "The Matchmaker" and "Ondine."

The new opera productions included Bellini's La Somnanbuia, Donizetti's "Don Pasquale," Verdi's "Rigoletto" and the world premiere of Necit Kodalli's Turkish opera "Van Gogh."

Yank Films Still Top Italian B.O.

Rome, July 2.

Yank productions still lead in the money stakes at the Italian boxoffice, recent figures reveal. Updated statistics for the 16 key city firstruns show 19 features topping the 100 Million Lire mark ($150,000). Of these, 16 are U.S.-made, three are Italian and one is a French production.

Far in the lead, according to this late tabulation, is "Trapeze" (UA), with over $562,000. This is followed by "Picnic" (Col), "Bhowani Junction" (M-G), and "The Conqueror" (RKO). All four leaders are Cinemascopers, in color.

Next on the list is the low-budget Italo pic, "Poveri Ma Belli" (Titanus), made for $100,000 and so far totaling $225,000 in first-run money. It's just ahead of "Guys and Dolls" (M-G), "Diabolique" (French), "Enchantment" (M-G), "Monte Carlo Story" (Titanus), and "Man In The Gray Flannel Suit" (20th).

Also among the top rankers are, in order of strength: "Moby Dick" (WB), "High Society" (M-G), "Man Who Knew Too Much" (Par), "The Swan" (M-G), "Souvenir D'Italie" (Rand-Athena), "Bus Stop" (20th), "King's Jester" (Par), "Oklahoma" (RKO) and "Blackboard Jungle" (M-G).

Caterina Valente Set For Hour Telecasts; Unusual for Germany

Frankfurt, July 9.

Reluctance of Hollywood stars, as of some years ago, to commit themselves to television series is echoed in Germany. That fact gives significance to the contract of Caterina Valente to have her own video series starting Sept. 10 on the German government-controlled video.

German tv talent has been hodgepodge—partly old movies, partly live variety by performers native to the medium. An occasional playlet is telecast with film personages.

Miss Valente's deal is precedental because of her status as first in film musicals and first in song generally within Germany. (She's German-Italian). Her series is with the Sueddeutsche Rundfunk for full hour airings. She'll sing and emcee and have guests.

Miss Valente has had filled bookings in N. Y. and Las Vegas cafes as well as throughout Europe.

'King' Tops in Perth

Perth, July 2.

"King and I" (20th) is a topper in this key city, with "War and Peace" likewise moving into top money class. Lineup includes "Trouble With Harry" (Par) and "Somebody Up There Likes Me" (M-G).

Mex Down To 3 Studios But Labor 'Pleased'

Mexico City, July 9.

Rather than face the threat of the private owners, the Emilio Azcarraga syndicate, to demolish the Charabusco Studios, most modern in Mexico, and plow up the land for residential dwellings, the Government is withdrawing from its own Clasa Studios. These have operated at a deficit paid by the Government and this "favoritism" was bitterly excoriated by Azcarraga some months ago when the Charabusco fate hung in the balance.

As presently contemplated Clasa stages close down July 31 and its labs by October. Erasure of Clasa leaves Mexico with two studios, Tepeyac and San Angel Inn, other than Azcarraga's.

Shrinking of the number of studios actually delights the craft unions, according to Felipe Palomino, secretary-general of the technical-manual workers locals of the Picture Production Workers Union (STPC). Calling abolition of studios (first the Azteca, now Clasa) "not any sign of decadence in the picture industry, but a wholesome reorganization." Palomino sees more and longer work for his folk with concentration of pic treatment upon the three studios. He cited the work capacity of the three surviving plants as 100 features annually—Churubusco, 50; Tepeyac, 30; San Angel Inn, 20. Churubusco has 12 stages and can shoot six pix monthly; Tepeyac has ten stages; San Angel Inn, six stages.

Foreign Works Dominate; Ready 'Tables' for B.A.; French Mime Marceau Due

Buenos Aires, July 2.

Legit imports are flourishing here with productions from England, France and the U. S. on the boards. Impresario Francisco Petrone is rehearsing Terence Rattigan's "Separate Tables" for which he's signed Ana Arneodo and Eva Donge for top roles. Producer, who put on Eugene O'Neill's "Long Day's Journey Into Night" before its acclaim in the U. S., has suspended the play's run at the Odeon to make room for French mime Marcel Marceau. Latter's been booked there for July.

Narcisco Ibanez Menta has passed 100 performances of Jean Anouilh's "Ornifle," translated from the French by Maria Elena Ramos Mejia, and is rehearsing French playwright's Fritz Hochwalder's "Sur la Terre Comme Ciel." Likewise, Delia Garces has done excellent business in Graham Green's "The Living Room" at the Empire. But due to prior film commitments she must withdraw from the cast, necessitating the play's closing.

Film actress Mirtha Legrand is to take her first flyer in legit via a provincial tour in "The Moon Is Blue" and "Ocupe Toi d'Amelie." If the venture proves successful, she may appear later at the Odeon for a late spring season.

At Berlin Fest, Yankee Showmen & Bureaucrats Not Wholly Compatible

By HAROLD MYERS

Berlin, July 9.

Berlin Film Festival jury selection of "12 Angry Men" as the best picture was acclaimed and had been forecast. Any other choice would have been unpopular. The fact that it also received the Catholic Film Prize gave the Henry Fonda production a double walkover victory.

The film to collar the largest number of prizes was the Associated British entry, "Woman in a Dressing Gown." In addition to Yvonne Mitchell's award as best actress, it got the International Film Critics nod as best pic, and was runner up to the Fonda film for the Catholic award.

It's become almost a habit for the Disney Organization to walk off with the top documentary award, and this year's prize-winning entry, "Secrets of Life" maintained their run of victories. Berlin has been a pushover for them year after year.

America made an important impact at the Festival, both socially and commercially. The annual MPEA party was the gala event of the festival, and the presence of special reps from Washington in the persons of Russel B. Turner of the Information Agency, and Nathan D. Golden, of the Dept. of Commerce, added special recognition to the occasion.

There was, however, some evidence of a behind-the-scenes clash between U.S. industry and U.S. government reps. According to inside info, Turner had received advice from Washington to collect any prizes accorded the U.S., and insisted on keeping that brief. The industry, for its part, felt it was entitled to take the credit, particularly as there was a strong likelihood of Fonda returning from the Riviera. Industry got its own way, even though Fonda did not show up at the last moment.

British Outfit Sets Deal With E. German DEFA

Berlin, July 2.

Kenneth Rive, head of the British distributing outfit, Gala Films, has closed an exclusive fiveyear deal with DEFA, the East German film producing organization. Under the pact, Rive has the first refusal to the UK and Commonwealth rights of the entire DEFA output. Deal also gives him sole facilities in the export of British pix within the East German territory. All British producers seeking an East German release will have to negotiate via Gala.

Rive recently negotiated a similar deal with the Russians in Moscow, and is the sole UK distrib of all the Soviet output. He also controls a small chain of first-run art houses in the West End of London.

BELGIUM POLLS PIX HISTORIANS

Unique attempt to establish "the greatest motion picture of all times" will be made in conjunction with the Universal and International Exhibition at Brussels, Belgium, next year. (only one world's fair every six years is now authorized by the nations).

Plans for the event, one of three separate competitions that are to be part of the Brussels Fair, were disclosed in Gotham last week by Jacques Ledoux, curator of the Belgium Film Library. Ledoux has charge of this particular project and also of the planned international experimental film competition.

Organized separately is the World Film Festival, for which Belgium is trying to obtain authorization from the International Federation of Film Producers Assns. Fest will be similar in character to Cannes and Venice.

Purpose of the quest for the best films of all times, according to the official text, is to "draw world attention to the great films of the past and to combat prejudice which causes the cinema to be regarded as a fugitive and perishable art."

As a preliminary, some 50 film historians all over the world will be asked to nominate their favorite 30 films from all countries, covering the period from 1895 to 1955, or 60 years. The pictures with the most votes then will be compiled into a master list from which a second jury, consisting of artists from various fields (but not the cinema), will pick the top 12 in order of their importance. There'll be seven personalities on that second jury.

Ledoux said he, personally, wasn't convinced of the wisdom of picking a top film, adding that, within the top dozen the differentiation would be slight. However, he commented emphatically, "from a publicity point-of-view, I think the picking of a winner is absolutely essential, and I quite approve of it."

The head of the Belgian Cinematheque held that, to him, the type of picture that won top honors made little difference, since the main emphasis was obviously on cinematographic values. He said this held true, too, should pictures like "Potemkin" or "Birth of a Nation" cop the prize.

The Cinematheque de Belgique has a large collection of old films, but—at the moment—no facilities for screening them, Ledoux reported. He hoped that the situation would be changed by next year. Outfit recommends outstanding pictures to the some 200 cinema clubs in the country. It is not permitted to circulate films itself.

'BABY DOLL' EVADES ARGENTINE BANNING

Buenos Aires, July 9.

Warner Bros. released "Baby Doll" here yesterday (8) on the eve of Argentine's July 9 National Independence Day, at the Metropolitan, Normandie, Ideal, Premier and Suipacha central first-runs, day and date with 5 big neighborhood houses, an unusual day-dating for here:

This puts an end to rumors that the Tennessee Williams picture would be nixed by local censors or the National Screen Institute.

Censorship at the moment is a sensitive question. This refers especially to clerical Cordoba, where a "morality Commission" recently banned two Swedish pictures "A Summer with Monica," "The Horse Traders' Daughters," the French version of "Lady Chatterley's Lover" and the Italian "The Tower of Nesle," all of which were exhibited without trouble in this metropolis.

Screen Institute sees all releases to classify them as to what age classes should be allowed" to view them.

France-Italy-Germany Teamplay Speeds Europe's Film Community

Rome, July 9.

Another step in the direction of a European Film Community is claimed to have been made by the permanent three-nation committee charged with laying the groundwork for a Continental Film Pool following a get-together in Berlin during the Film Festival in that city. Principal step would be substitution of current two-nation coproduction pacts with three-nation agreements, as a kernel for the proposed Pool uniting European countries' pic industries in a common tie.

According to an official announcement, agreement was reached in Berlin on the following points: (1) a proposal to substitute with a single tri-partite agreement the current bilateral pacts binding the Italian, French, and German pic industries; (2) adoption, within the proposed tripartite pact, of the "most liberal" of the clauses in the current bilateral agreements; (3) braking of rising production costs currently threatening production everywhere; (4) adoption of a common standard in regard to the laws governing employ of foreigners in each of the three countries; (5) similar common fiscal standard to be adopted by pix in co-production and taxes on personnel engaged in such activity.

These points will be elaborated into a common pact to be submitted to the joint committee at its next meeting, slated for Sept. 24, 25, and 26 somewhere in Italy, after which it goes to the respective governments for final approval into law.

Present at the Berlin meeting were Messrs Eitel Monaco, Alfredo Guarini, and Lidio Bozzini for Italy, Messrs Walter Koppel, Wolf Schwarz, and Schoene for Germany; and Messrs Frenay, Deutschmeister, and Poire for France.

Nottingham Test

London, July 9.

England is having a heat wave, and picture houses are having a slump. So, to combat the weather, the manager of 978 seater theatre in Nottingham, belonging to the Gaumont group, cut his admission prices by three and four British cents—with the consent of the company.

If it pays off, the policy might well be adopted elsewhere.

British Film Biz Down, Salaries Up 3%; Cinema Admissions Decline 5.9%

London, July 9.

Gross takings down by 1.5%. Wages and salaries up by 3%. These are the contrasting highlights emerging from the Board of Trade's annual survey of the motion picture industry here.

Gross receipts during 1956 exceeded $291,000,000, as compared with $296,000,000 in 1955. Actual paid admissions were off by 6.9%, but the difference was partly made good by the increase in seat prices introduced half way through last year.

Paid admissions in 1956 amounted to 1,101,000,000 - as against 1,396,000,000 in 1950, the year in which the BOT began its annual surveys. The downward trend has been evident in the number of paid admissions each year, but not in the total of gross receipts, mainly because of fluctuations in seat prices and the scale of admission tax.

Although gross takings were down, the industry's contribution in admission tax showed a rise of approximately $1,400,000 to $95,000,000. That figure represented about 32.5% of the b.o. receipts. Film hire, at around $66,000,000. showed a slight drop on the previous year. British pix received about $21,500,000 in film hire, equal to 32% of the total rental payments.

After meeting all their statutory overheads, and film rental charges, exhibs wer left with around $123,000,000, a drop of 2.7% from 1955.

A separate breakdown of distribution costs shows that they accounted for 20% of the totall rentals in 1956 compared with 19% in 1955. The share paid to producers amounted to approximately $39,500,000 or 5% less than in 1955. The British producers share, however, jumped from $11,750,000 in 1955 to $12,600,000 in 1956. After deduction of direct distribution expenses and payments to producers, distributors were left with $12,880,000. That total represents a drop of 1% from 1955.

Hungarian Documentary First Taxfree Film

Frankfurt, July 9.

Moved by sympathy for the Hungarians and the desire to spread the story of their fight for freedom throughout West Germany, the Munich city authorities have just set a trend by allowing the first full-length film to play in Bavaria completely free of theater admission taxes.

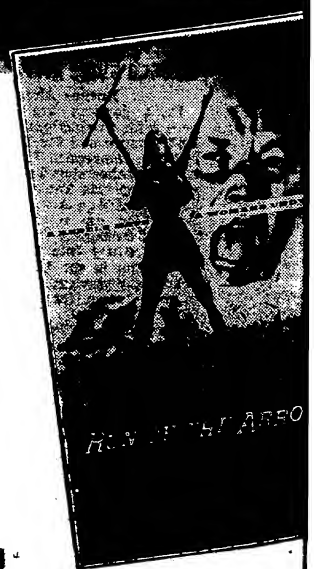
Pic is the Karpat-Union film release of "Hungary in Flames," which the German Film Classification Board tagged as "especially outstanding," meaning that it is eligible for some reduction in box office taxes throughout West Germany. But the 100% tax-free rating is one that has never before been allowed in postwar Germany.

Film is documentary on the heroic struggle of the Hungarian people for freedom and independence.

Yanks Ignore Legit Portion Of Venice Fest

Rome, June 25.

An unusually varied group of companies will perform at this year's International Theatre Festival at Venice, 16th of the series. Program is entirely dedicated to the work of Carlo Goldoni, and will be performed by legit groups from Italy, France, Portugal, Poland, Rumania, Germany and Yugoslavia.



Fest kicks off July 5 with Goldoni's "II Campiello," as staged by Carlo Ludovici, performance being timed to coincide with the 250th anniversary of the Venetian author's birth. Foreign troupes will follow in turn, with the Bochum Shauspielhaus performing "La Vedova Scaltra"; Poland's Nowa Huta Theatre Company staging "Arlecchino Servitore di Due Padroni"; the Teatro Experimental de Oporto (Portugal) giving "Il Curiso Accidente"; and the French company of the Grenier de Toulouse presenting "A Locandiera."

Others at Venice will be "I Rusteghi," done by the Rumanian Popular Theatre, and "Le Baruffe Chiozzotte," as staged by the Zagreb National Theatre. Fete will wind up its multilingual run with another Italo-language staging, by Luchino Visconti, of Goldoni's "L'Impresario di Smirne."

Goldoni commemoration continues during the summer, with a convention of University Theatre Groups scheduled for Aug. 5-13. Repped there will be Barcelona's Teatro Universitario Experimental, Zagreb's Studensko Eksperimentalno Kazaliste, the Leeds (Britain) University Co., and the Venice Ca' Foscari University Group.

Terms From 3 'Bidders,' But Mosaik Bankruptcy Crisis Still Continues

Berlin, July 9.

Though, by consent of the creditors and their executive committee, the bankruptcy proceedings against Mosaik Laboratories have been delayed for another two weeks, the situation has now definitely reached the critical stage. If, within another week, no proposal is put forward, Mosaik may well go into bankruptcy.

At the creditors meeting in the Tauentzien Palast here recently, three groups advanced propositions. One came from the Geyer Laboratories and Emile J. Lustig, the latter representing a U.S. group. Idea here is to take over the entire complex owned by Ernst Wolff. Proposition provides for the small creditors to get a quota of 35% (to be paid within a year) with the big creditors (primarily the rawstock suppliers) to be satisfied with another 35% within a period of five to seven years. All this is conditioned on aid from the Berlin Senate amounting to 750,000 DM.

Second proposition came from Riva-Film (Munich) which is willing to help. No details were given. Outfit is believed headed by some one who once worked for Wolff. Third offer finally cames from the UFA, with which Wolff has negotiated in the past. UFA simply indicated that, should the creditors apply to UFA, the company was willing to negotiate.

In the past, there's been some doubt whether, if UFA enters the picture, the American companies which do most of their dubbing at Mosaik, would be willing to continue to do so.

Wolff's debts, tied up with the bankruptcy of the Allianz distribution outfit, amount to around 1,500,000 DM. He insists that any settlement provide him with a chance to pay back his debts over an extended period. The Geyer-Lustig plan calls for such an arrangement in the form of rents for the Mosaik property. Group would not participate in Wolff's management in the long run.

Decalog Grind

St. Paul, June 9.

"The Ten Commandments" opened here this week at Paramount's Riviera on a continuous non-reserved seats policy, but with adult prices upped to $2 and $1.50 for main floor and balcony, respectively. Grind starts at 9:30 a.m. daily.

DeMille picture has had one previous engagement in the territory. With a reserved seat policy and the adult night admission $2.65 it ran for 13 weeks at the Minneapolis Lyric where the engagement was exclusive for the territory and there was only one performance a night along with the daily matinee.

In addition to St. Paul "Commandments" also opened this week, too, in Duluth, Minn.; Fargo, N. D., and Sioux Falls, S.D., with the same non-reserved seat policy as here.

Robert J. Enders of D.C. Expands to N.Y. & Coast

Washington, July 9.

Robert J. Enders agency has expanded its film production setup and has now established branch offices in New York and Hollywood. This has been necessitated by the number of film contracts signed in the past few months, according to Enders.

Enders is turning out both 16m for tv and 35m films for industry and government. In Washington, it has just completed a series of 13 35m, 15-minute pix for the Civil Defense Administration and starring Herbert Marshall.

A production crew leaves for Europe on July 15 to shoot location shots for "Ambassadors With Wings," a half-hour, black-and-white 35m picture on the Civil Air Patrol International Cadet Exchange. Ex-Cello-O Corp. is picking up the check. A second Ex-Cello-O pic, a tinter on the forthcoming National Boy Scout Jamboree at Valley Forge, Pa., is in the works.

The new Hollywood office is presently working on the new "Saturday Evening Post" tv series "Best of the Post." The New York office handles negotiations with authors and tv adapters.

Designers Seek Pact

Hollywood, July 9.

Negotiations between newly-certified indie Screen Designers Guild and Motion Picture Producers Assn., for initial pact covering some 50 pic industry costume designers, assistants and sketch artists, are currently under way. Future bargaining with Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers and Alliance of TV Film Producers is contemplated, after present bargaining is settled.

Guild was named recently by National Labor Relations Board as collective bargaining rep for costumers in major studios, after unopposed certification election.

TOP COURT'S OBSCENITY' RULINGS (4) MAY--OR MAY NOT--INFLUENCE PIX BIZ

Recent bookdealer cases which drew U. S. Supreme Court rulings, holding that "obscenity is not within the area of constitutionally-protected speech or press," has divided film censorship lawyers as to the impact of the decision on the motion picture.

Some lawyers felt that the verdict, not directly related to films, nevertheless might set a precedent for future cases coming up to the Supreme Court, particularly where the reason for banning was given as "obscenity."

Other barristers disagreed, maintaining that the Court, in its series of decisions (there were four), had ruled in an area that was not particularly applicable to films or the pre-release censorship of pictures.

On the whole, however, it is thought that the court's ruling will serve as a useful legal prop for the remaining state and municipal censors and might make the censor battle more difficult in the future.

The lawyers drew hope from some of the qualifications in the opinion written by Justice Brennan, and in the dissenting opinons entered by Justices Black and Douglas, both of whom warned that the decision had given the native bluenoses "free range over a vast domain."

The Court's majority opinion, relating to state statutes under which "obscene" literature can be banned, held that such statutes "do not offend constitutional safeguards against convicitions based upon protected material." It cited various opinions to support its contention that "obscenity is not protected by the freedoms of speech and the press." It said that, implicit in the history of the First Amendment was "the rejection of obscenity as utterly without redeeming social importance."

Yet, Justice Brennan also wrote:

"Sex and obscenity are not synonymous. Obscene material is material which deals with sex in a manner appealing to purient interest. The portrayal of sex e.g. in art, literature and scientific works, is not in itself sufficient reason to deny material the constitutional protection of freedom of speech and press. Sex, a great and mysterious motive force in human life, has indisputably been a subject of absorbing interest to mankind through the ages: it is one of the vital problems of human interest and public concern."

The Court recognized that the terms of the various obscenity statutes are not precise. But, the decision went on, "This Court . . . has consistently held that lack of precision is not itself offensive to the requirements of due process."

In past decisions, the Supreme Court made it plain that there were certain areas in which film censorship might be permissible, despite the ruling in the 1952 "Miracle" case in which it classed motion pictures with radio and the press as a medium of communication, and therefore eligible for protection under the First Amendment.

New Cases Coming Up

It was noted that, in a footnote to its decision of last week, the Court made reference to the 1915 Mutual Film Corp. case, which established the basis for film censorship in the U.S. It did not refer, however, to the "Miracle" nor to the "La Ronda" case in New York State, which affirmed the "Miracle" decision and deprived New York State censorship of much of its former scope. "Obscenity" is virtually the only grounds on which a film can be banned in N.Y. State today.

Two films are due to test the Supreme Court's current censorship mood. This fall, the Court will be asked to overturn decisions in Chicago and New York, where "Game of Love" and "Lady Chatterley's Lover" respectively were banned in the version in which they were submitted. In Chicago, it's a police censor. His powers were upheld by lower Courts.

One of the prime arguments of film lawyers in the past has been that, if the pre-censoring of pictures was illegal, the vagueness of the censors' statutes also was a factor. Several cases were, in fact, decided for film distributors on the strength of that argument. Last week's decision is apt to throw new light on the question.

Schwartz of DCA

rector had been sent to London so as to weed out the most glaring "Britishisms" from the script. Film is doing well in several U.S. situations currently.

While both showmen noted that American exhibitors were still revealing a very definite resistance to foreign films, they felt that DCA was able to get depth coverage. Example cited is the French "Wages of Fear." "We got volume," reported Wormser. "True, the picture didn't earn very much, but at least we sold it wherever we could." "Wages" should end up with a $175,000 gross outside the N.Y. firstrun.

Schwartz said the big-city audience for imports definitely had grown, "particularly in New York, and for the simple reason that people had been exposed to these pictures. It's just a matter of getting them used to it."

90 Stockholders

DCA, which has some 90 exhibitor stockholders, doesn't hand out cash advances, but gives guarantees on the pictures for which it contracts distribution. It's been doing very well with two recent releases, "The Green Man" and "Gold of Naples"; also with an American rock 'n' roll film which it financed and which Warner Bros. is handling abroad. On "Battle Hell" it expects to get two or three times the gross which a similar British Films, "The Dambusters," got in the U.S. Company is packaging Wilcox's "My Teenage Daughter" and a dubbed German import, "Die Halbstarken" (retitled "Wolfpack") for the commercial market.

With a comparatively large organization to support, and considering the percentage of inevitable failures, Schwartz and Wormser stressed the need for volume. Original intention had been to release fewer films. DCA still hopes to find a firm to do the animation work on "Finian's Rainbow," on which the soundtrack has been recorded. Animation costs quoted to date have been too high.

Emphasising its capacity to get playdates, despite obvious limitations, Wormser said that on "Rock, Rock, Rock," its rock 'n' roll opus, DCA would get some 10,000 dates and expected to gross $800,000 domestically alone.

Deport Frisco Chinese Exhibitor

26 Years in U.S. on Wrong Identity—Theatre Called Showcase for Commie Propaganda

San Francisco, July 9.

The wealthy owner of the World Theatre, on Chinatown's edge, has agreed to leave the U. S. after pleading guilty to entering the country 26 years ago on a fraudulent passport.

Lee Ying Get, 42, also known as Fong Ying, was banished by Federal Judge Louis Goodman, who suspended prison sentence on condition that Lee depart within 60 days.

State Dept. and customs agents testified Lee entered the U. S. by posing as a local Chinese's son when he was actually a son-in-law. The fraud was repeated in 1951 when Lee filed application for a passport to Red China. This brought about the inquiry which culminated in the Federal suit to oust Lee.

Lee's partner, Lawrence Low, took a Fifth Amendment before a House un-American Activities subcommittee last winter when asked if their theatre was a distribution point for pro-Soviet films.

In recent years the World has shown Russian, Chinese and some Filipino pictures, mostly distributed by Artkino.

The World's lobby display of stills from Chinese films often shows women being tortured by soldiers in the uniform of Chiang Kai-Shek's army, then being rescued by guerillas in Chinese Communist uniforms.

Federal agents told Judge Goodman their investigation proved "there is a substantial connection between the defendant and the Chinese mainland." Evidence included a diary from Lee's home in which he described himself as a new type of "progressive revolutionist."

The agents said there was no evidence that Lee was a party member, but insisted his activities in recent years showed consistent sympathy with Communist causes. These included using his theatre for benefits for the Red-slanted People's World, Coast version of The Daily Worker.

Bert Brecht Row

Minister Heinrich von Brentano said that although he had once been a Brecht admirer, the author's later works were comparable to those of the ultra-Nazi writer, Horst Wessel. That aroused the ire of West German publisher Peter Suhrkamp, who handles Brecht's works, and he wrote an open letter arguing that Brentano's attitude was reminiscent of the Hitler era, and concluding, "How can poetry survive if politicians treat it so frivolously?"

The Foreign Minister replied by citing some of Brecht's pro-Communist statements, charging that the late dramatist's political writings were not only tactless but infamous and concluding, "How can freedom survive if poets throw it away so frivolously?"

The majority of the local press seems to favor Brentano, but a few scribes argue that the whole situation is unfortunate, on the ground that art subsidies and politics should be kept apart, and that there should be a clear distinction between poetry and the drama on one hand and the state on the author.

Court, 4-3, Finds 'Garden of Eden' Wrongly Censored; Minority Bitter, Sees State Stripped of Powers

Albany, July 9.

A 4-3 decision Wednesday (3) by the Court of Appeals upholding a finding of the Appellate Division that "Garden of Eden" is not "indecent" and that the Board of Regents erred in refusing the nudist-colony picture a license, found the State's highest tribunal sharply divided on what is censorable, under recent U.S. Supreme Court rulings.

The majority, in an opinion written by Judge Charles J. Desmond, held that "By a series of decisions handed down the last five years (starting with Burstyn v. Wilson, where the denial by the New York State motion picture division of a seal for "The Miracle" as "sacrilegous" was invalidated), the U.S. Supreme Court has stricken down as unconstitutional nearly all the grounds for license refusal listed in sections 122 and 122-a of the New York Education Law."

Judge Adrian P. Burke, in an opinion for the minority, declared that "Inasmuch as the majority have completely brushed aside a clearly defined, reasonable Legislative standard of decency with respect to nudity for reasons of their own, and inasmuch as some have declared that this State's licensing system for motion pictures is unconstitutional if applied to deny a license on any ground other than obscenity, without the slightest shred of specific authority, but merely on the basis of conjecture, we are compelled to dissent. We believe that their decision virtually strips the Legislature of power entrusted to it by the People of the State of New York.

Radio's Own Ad Bureau 'Working On' Exhibitors; Slogan: 'More for Less'

There is tangible evidence that the film companies and theatres are shifting a hefty portion of their advertising budgets to radio. According to the Radio Advertising Bureau, indications are that the motion picture industry will employ radio for the exploitation of pictures 30% to 35% more this year than it did in 1956.

The trend "back" to radio is not the result of a sudden awakening. It is part of a deliberate and intensified campaign on the part of the RAB, the promotional arm of the radio industry. The RAB represents some 850 independent stations as well as the four radio networks.

The RAB has assigned Irving Trachtenberg "to work" on the film industry. As part of its campaign, the RAB is stressing the "how to element" and is subtly advising the filmites how to present their announcements. The RAB claims that the film companies as well as their advertising agencies—through the lack of knowledge—haven't used radio enough—and haven't used it correctly. It's charged the same techniques have been employed year in and year out.

The radio industry's chief pitch is that it can deliver more impressions at less cost to the motion picture industry. It points out, for example, that at the local level the film biz is married to the local newspapers for its advertising because it depends on the dailies for the free publicity. It's the contention of the RAB that the public does not turn to the newspaper amusement section unless it has already made up its mind "to go to a movie."

AD-SHOUTING AIRPLANES NEED ONLY LICENSE

Houston, July 9.

City Council, after mulling over the subject for more than two months, came up with an ordinance placing only minor restrictions on the use of airplanes equipped with loudspeakers for advertising purposes.

The ordinance allows such planes to operate as close as half a mile to a hospital.

Only one other restriction was placed on such advertising. It may not be disseminated on Sunday.

Otherwise the situation is unchanged, except that now the operators of such planes must take out permits from the city tax assessor-collector. The permit is $5 a flight or $25 for six months.

The measure provides a fine up to $200 for each violation.

Cowles Monopoly Of News Hit On DST 'Imbalance'

Minneapolis, July 9.

Minneapolis daily newspapers, both Cowles' owned, are accused by an independent exhibitors' spokesman, Harold Field, circuit owner and Exhibitors Trade Assn. (nee North Central Allied) board chairman, with having been unfair to daylight saving time opponents during the fight over it in the Minnesota state legislature.

Minnesota never had fast time except during the two World Wars when three shifts of workers lessened its injurious boxoffice impact.

Field hit out at the dailies in a lengthy letter to the editor which the Star published without any comment. It read, in part:

"I feel that the only newspapers in a large metropolitan area had a moral responsibility to present both sides of the issue. When neither your news columns nor feature writers presented any of the arguments against DST, it was morally mandatory for you to present both sides in taking an editorial stand.

"A comparison of your coverage with that of your Des Moines sister newspaper (Field owns a large Iowa theatre circuit) indicates that while they presented the argument's pros and cons fully, your paper in all of its columns practically ignored the adverse arguments except for an occasionally deeply buried line. A day or two before the bill's passage was virtually assured, you finally did present a complete story.

Our theatre organization actively opposed DST. Not only did we know it would be bad for our business, but we also presented to the legislative committees all of the other arguments against DST, including the parental problem of getting small children to bed.

"It was our contention that the DST plan in a farm area, in the Minnesota latitude and longitude was a bad thing for many in the state even though they had not been made aware of the problems that would arise." (Viz, by the only newspapers in town).

Anti-Checking Law-Maker To Chain Drive-In Meet

Austin, July 9.

Eddie Joseph, prez of the Texas Drive-In Theatre Owners' Assn., has named Preston Smith as chairman of the 1958 convention of the group.

Smith, a Senator in the Texas Legislature, and a former prez of the ozoner group, who owns a group of theatres in Lubbock, sponsored Texas' bill to ban from the state those nefarious agents of the northern distributors, boxoffice checkers who do not disclose their presence to a theatre.

MEMBER SUES MEMPHIS LOCAL RE HIS FINES

Memphis, July 9.

Malco Theatre projectionist Pat Grace has filed a suit against the Memphis Moving Picture and Projecting Machine Operators, Local 144 and its officers asking an injunction to restrain the local from collecting over $500 fines assessed against him.

Grace states that on June 5 a resolution was passed by the union here that anyone refusing to picket in the strike (the nabe houses here are in their 20th week of striking) of the union against some theatres would be fined '3, and after that would be fined $25 each time. The theatre projectionist says that at the meeting discussion became "so heated and tempers flared to such an extent that the presiding official ordered the sergeant at arms to lock all doors and let no out." He stated that he had to forcibly make his way out and that after he left he learned that a motion was passed which he termed "completely frivolous and that he was fined $250 for allegedly overstepping the authority of the business representative and that this charge is baseless and untrue."

Grace said he refused to picket because of the "unfair and undemocratic treatment administered to him by the union and its officers. His bill states that since Jan. 4 when the strike began "affairs of the Memphis Local have worsened to the point that all democratic processes have been abandoned." He also stated in his complaint that the international union has "disapproved the Memphis Local's resolution which would assess fines."

Reade Circuit's 20 Days To Amend Thus Far Nixed Plea Against Loew Inc.

A $1,200,000 treble damage antitrust suit brought by Walter Reade Theatres, as owner-operator of the Woodbridge, N. J., Drive-In, against Loew's Inc. and Loew's Theatre & Realty Corp. was dismissed last week by N. Y. Federal Judge Richard H. Levet. But although tossing out the action on motion of the defendants, the court permitted the Reade chain to file an amended complaint within 20 days.

The Loew outfits successfully contended that the complaint failed to comply with certain federal rules which state that allegations must be "simple, concise and direct." Reade charged that Loew's and other distributors had imposed a system of "unreasonable" clearance upon the Woodbridge ozoner. Named co-conspirators but not defendants in the action were Stanley Warner and RKO, among others.

TWO KINDS OF SELL FOR RANK IN FRISCO

San Francisco, July 9.

In a bid for both carriage trade and the neighborhood crowds, Rank Film Distributors of America is trying a new ad approach in its six-theatre campaign for "Reach for the Sky." Campaign is put together by Irving (Bud) Levin.

"Sky," double-billed with "Triple Deception," is the first Rank release under the new U. S. distrib setup to reach Frisco.

First day's ad in the local sheets, put out by Rank's N. Y. office, is conventional, strongly resembling "Spirit of St. Louis" promotion. Second day's ad consists of cartoon-style line drawing done by Levin's Frisco artist, Williamson Mayo. Third day again reverts to conventional material prepared by Mort Goodman's Hollywood agency. The fourth day sees Mayo's allegorical brush-and-ink sketches returning in the ads.

Bill is breaking simultaneously at two houses of Levin's San Francisco Theatres, Inc., and four United California houses. It's the first time that Levin has tried combining N. Y.-Hollywood-Frisco ad campaigns.

Hero Worship, Latin Style

By MARNELLE THOMSEN

Caracas, July 9.

Mexico's famed comic Cantinflas' visit to Venezuela was a civic blowout. Perhaps the most popular Spanish-speaking star in South America, he was here in connection with the local premiere of the Todd-AO "Around the World in 80 Days."

Fans did not mean it irreverently in quipping that while Mexico's Marie Moreno (as he was born) was caravaning through Caracas in an open car to the tumult of the multitude in rural areas of the country it was Corpus Christi Day and "Christ's coffin" was being paraded.

Mobs greeted Cantinflas at the airport as a hero. His visit included a sponsored television appearance for Pampero Fruit Juices Co. and a charity date for the Venezuela Boys' Town. Latter called for actor to perform his popular burlesque of a bull fight with a live toro.

"My money?" he answered the crowd, "I've never had time to count it."

"Bulls?" he answered, "are better with onions than horns."

"Marriage? Every once in a while."

"Films? So far I've done 20."

Statue of Madonna Creates Censorship Vexation for Cochran's 'The Cry'

Rome, July 9.

Steve Cochran's locally-made "The Cry" (Il Grido) has run into censor trouble, with the affair flaring up into a cause celebre via some additional sideline incidents. Pic stars Cochran, Alida Valli, Betsy Blair and Lynn Shaw, among others. It was made in this country by an American company, Robert Alexander Productions, in association with the Italian company, Franco Cancelllieri-SPA.

Though it's claimed that the script passed censorship without much trouble, film in its final form failed to make the grade. Censor body here asked that three cuts be made. First was a kiss between Cochran and actress Dorian Gray on a bed. Second involved some dialogue, considered irreverent, regarding the purchase of a "miraculous" statuette of a Madonna at a town fair. While it's claimed that producers would have agreed on these two cuts, the third, which showed a young child happening onto a love scene between Cochran and Miss Gray, was considered so vital to the plot development they refused to trim.

Director Michelangelo Antonioni also added that he would take his name off the picture, which he also helped write, if the scene were yanked.

Two groups have intervened. One is Italian Film Writers Assn, which has sent an official note of protest to the government film office asking that the veto on "Il Grido" be revoked and that new censorship laws be studied and approved to "eliminate controversies such as the present one and to give authors some guarantee provided for by the Italian Constitution."

Similar complaint was lodged with the Italo pic office by the Italian Film Club and signed by some of Italy's top filmmakers.

In the midst of the uproar, a semi-official Italian industry source points out that the case is principally a technical one and could easily be solved. It's noted that the incident has snowballed mainly because of the pic's productive structure, in which the foreign rights are held by Cochran's group, while his Italian partners have the local release rights. Rather than involving Cochran with Italo censorship and government offices, the comment goes on, the only thing Cochran needs is an export permit and his controversy (and $5,000,000 suit against the Italo government) is ended.

Case, first of its kind, does however focus attention on problem of co-produced pix whose foreign release becomes dependent on Italo censorship laws.

SET DESIGNER WANTED BY U. S. SIGNAL CORPS

The United States Army Signal Corps, which operates the largest film studio in the east, is on the prowl for a theatrical set designer. Job pays $5,915 a year and calls for a motion-picture art director to work at the Army Pictorial Center in Long Island City, N.Y.

Applicants, says the Army, must have a total of five-and-a-half years experience in the design of settings for theatrical productions, at least three years of which must have been in motion picture production. Appointments can be arranged by calling RAvenwood 6-2000, Ext. 238.

Sues K.C. Star On Single Rate For 2 Editions

Kansas City, July 9.

Suit for $150,000 treble damages has been filed here by Edward Golden against the Kansas City Star. Action in U. S. District Court is on issue of "forced" use of display advertising in both morning and evening editions of the newspaper whereas Golden desired for his best interests to advertise only in the evening paper. The Star is the evening edition, the Times the morning edition.

Golden until recently operated the Vogue Theatre as an art film house in the midtown area. Difficulty of obtaining suitable product, advertising problems and other adversities closed the house several months ago, he said.

Star's advertising policy long has been to provide insertions in both a morning and an evening edition at a single rate. Efforts of Golden and others were directed at getting this rate split, but heretofore have been of no avail. The policy was the crux of a case in which the Star recently lost a decision to the Justice Dept. which charged monopoly practices.

Probate Lamont's Will

Albany, July 9.

Harry W. Lamont, former chief barker of Albany Variety Club and for the past two years co-chairman of its Heart Fund, bequeathed $500 to the latter (for Camp Thacher) in a will admitted to probate here last week. Value of the estate of the long-time exhibitor, who died suddenly at Alexandria Bay, June 20, was estimated at more than $100,000.

His widow, Mildred, and a younger brother, Robert, receive most of it. In addition to joint property valued at $25,000, Mrs. Lamont was given one-half of her husband's stock in the Lamont Theatre Service Inc., headquartered in Albany.

Farr's Audrey Gesture

Houston, July 9.

Jack Farr, owner of the Trail Drive-In Theatre here held a "Cameron, La. Day" at the ozoner to gather food supplies to rush to the victims of Hurricane Audrey. Patrons who brought canned goods or clean, used blothing for the two days, were admitted free.

Farr had a film truck standing by which rushed the food and clothing to the victims of the disaster.

CARS ON TV: 'HI TEST, PLEASE'

ABC's 'Tryout Spot' for NBC

Time was when ABC-TV was the recipient of NBC's programming "castoffs," but the situation has reversed itself within the past few weeks. No less than six former ABC-TV program entries have moved to NBC-TV in this period, five of them slotted as regular fall entries and a sixth as a summer replacement.

All six represent shows that were either cancelled on ABC at the end of this season or which ABC was unable to sell. However, NBC has either sold all or part of each of the five fall entries or has had them brought in by sponsors. Shows are "The Californians" (half sold to Singer), "Amateur Hour" (brought over by Hazel Bishop), "The Vise" (brought over by Sterling Drug), "Omnibus" (two-thirds sold, to Union Carbide and Aluminum Ltd.), "Treasure Hunt" (which becomes a daytime strip) and "Dollar a Second" (serving as a summer replacement).

The ABC-to-NBC program shuttle follows by a few months a major shift of top ABC personnel to NBC, with former ABC prez and now NBC programs & sales exec v.p. Bob Kintner calling the signals on both the personnel and program switches. List of key people included Bob Lewine, nighttime programming v.p.; Don Durgin, sales planning veep; Jim Stabile, business affairs exec; Chick Abry, eastern sales manager; and Dean Shaffner, sales development exec.

Two ABC entries which NBC wanted badly earlier this spring it couldn't get. They were the Lawrence Welk show and "Rin Tin Tin." Kintner had discussions with the sponsors of both shows, but ABC succeeded in retaining them by offering a better deal than Kintner was willing to submit.

NBC-TV's 'Hey, Look at Us' On Topdog Rating Status in Daytime

NBC-TV this week claimed a clearcut rating superiority over CBS-TV in daytime television, with its new topdog position even taking into account the faltering "Home" show in the averages. Web, citing Nielsen date for the first June report, came up with a 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. average rating of 6.3 vs. a 6.1 for CBS-TV. Using ARB ratings, the dominance was greater, 7.1 to 5.9.

The network, overcoming CBS' objection to previous NBC claims via the inclusion of the "Home" ratings, nonetheless omitted its other daytime stanza, the 7 to 9 a.m. "Today" show. But its reason was that Nielsen doesn't rate the CBS-TV Jimmy Dean and "Captain Kangaroo" programs and therefore it has no basis for comparison (CBS takes Nielsens on Dean and "Kangaroo," but these aren't made available to the other webs or subscribers).

Naturally, inclusion of the "Home" stanza tends to downgrade the overall averages for NBC, so that the web's "entertainment" daytime programs enjoy even a stronger superiority to the CBS competition. The NBC 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. "entertainment" block outrate CBS on the Nielsens by 7.3 to 6.6 and on ARB by 8.5 to 6.0, while

Libby-Owens Coin For 'Perry Mason'

CBS-TV is three-quarters of the way home on the "Perry Mason" series as the result of a decision last week by Libby-Owens-Ford to cast its programming lot with Columbia after buying a quarter of the NCAA football lineup on NBC-TV. Latter had entered a strong pitch vs. CBS and "Mason" for the rest of the Libby-Owens biz, but the glass company and the Fuller & Smith & Ross agency decided for CBS.

Deal now leaves just an alternate-Saturday half-hour open on the 7:30 to 8:30 mystery stanza, since Purex earlier contracted for an alternate-week hour. CBS considers the "Mason" show its toughest sell of the season, since the show will in part buck Perry Como on NBC in a "Perry vs. Perry" battle. Libby-Owens is taking the 8 to 8:30 portion, against Como.

Libby-Owens decision leaves NBC-TV still holding the bag on alternate-week sponsorship of "The Californians," which it had been pitching against "Mason." Earlier, Singer signed for the skip-week of the Tuesday at 10 western. Apparently, Libby-Owens decided it was a better bet to buck Como than to compete with "$64,000 Question."

WCBS-TV's Hot Summer

WCBS-TV, the CBS flagship in New York, is racking up the biggest summer sales in its history. June national spot and local business ran 22% ahead of same month in 1952, while July revenues thus far are running ahead of last year's mark.

Upbeat is due mainly to increased sales in the post-11 p.m. period, covering news, weather, sports and feature films, according to general sales manage Frank Shakespeare Jr.

CBS Radio Perks With $2,200,000 New Gross Biz

Upbeat in network radio continues at a hot pace, with CBS last week pacting another $2,200,000 in gross new business via nine new sponsorship deals. Three of the nine were for quarter-hours in "Arthur Godfrey Time," with Armour & Co. buying one a week plus a second quarter-hour every fourth week and Seeman Bros. and Angostura-Wupperman buying singleton quarter-hours in Godfrey for 26 weeks each.

Vick Chemical set an 18-week schedule of 126 "Impact Plan" weekend-nighttime five-minute segments for a September start. Ralston-Purina bought five and a half of the web's seven-and-a-half minute daytime segments per week for 13 weeks. Best Foods bought five of the seven-and-a-half-minute units per week for 23 weeks and also bought six "Impact Plan" segments a week for 26 weeks.

American Home Products picked up two five-minute units of "Wendy Warren" per week for 13 weeks, while B. F. Goodrich bought 12 "Impact Plan" segs for the Labor Day weekend. Alcoa bought an eight-week sked alternating two seven-and-a-half-minute units with one "Impact" unit each week.

'MEET McGRAW' AS P&G CANADA ENTRY

Toronto, July 9.

Procter & Gamble of Canada Ltd. have secured Dominion rights to "Meet McGraw" and teeoff Thursday (11) for a 31-station coast-to-coast tv network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. and independent outlets on an 8-8:30 p.m. slot.

Mystery-adventure series stars Frank Lovejoy and replaces the "Jane Wyman Theatre,"

AUTOS SOLO AS SHOW 'PIONEERS'

By GEORGE ROSEN

Automobile sponsors are not only reemerging as the No. 1 spender in tv next season (after a two-season sluffoff), but what makes it all the more interesting is that almost without exception it's the car makers who are perpetuating the "snazzy models" in program formats.

The soap and the food sponsors, and for the most part the cigaret advertisers, who are the runnersup in tv program appropriations, lean heavily on sliderule, cost-per-thousand techniques and are primarily concerned with mass audience pull at the lowest possible cost. They "buy safe."

But oddly enough, the auto sponsor is playing it differently. Not that he has an aversion to big audiences, which he'll gloat over as much as the next guy. But basically he looks for the big splash, the show that will get talked about and, even if doesn't pull 'em into the Top 10 Nielsen bracket, will tend to generate excitement. Where the auto sponsor is concerned, it was ever thus, dating back to the initial allegiance when Pat Weaver introed the specs on NBC and CBS followed suit. It remained for Ford, Oldsmobile, Chrysler, et al., to keep the spec cause alive.

Next season's tv buys represent a "hangover in spades" on the same basic philosophy, not so much in terms of embracing the outsize shows, but in ferreting out the new personalities and divorcing themselves from the cliche. Just as Ford last season came up with tv's only new toprated personality—Tennessee Ernie Ford—it's the same automaker who is siphoning $5,000,000 into one of NBC-TV's most ambitious ventures for next season, the hour-long Monday night "Crisis" series.

Like Ford, Olds has always played it the "brave" way, and when CBS-TV announced its new "Big Record" hour show for next season, it remained for Olds to climb abroad, to complement its stake in the series of Jerry Lewis hours specials on NBC next season. Chevy, which built Dinah Shore into a preeminent tv status, is going the whole route to the tune of $12,000,000 for a full 52-week schedule of hour Sunday night shows—20 with Miss Shore and buying the reminder sight unseen (they haven't even been plotted yet, but such is Chevy's faith in the concept of big programming.)

It was the $5,000,000 out of the General Motors coffers that made "Wide Wide World" possible, and GM will be back, same time, same show (but with a new format.) It'll be Pontiac coin that will bring Mary Martin back to tv next season in the two-hour "Annie Get Your Gun" spec and AC Spark Plug that will foot the bill for Walt Disney's "Mark of Zorro" series. Both Chevy and Buick are going after the new faces—bankrolling the Pat Boone and Patrice Munsel shows respectively.

L. A. Top Cops Sue For $3,000,000 as Result Of Mickey Cohen TVcast

Los Angeles, July 9.

Los Angeles Police Chief William H. Parker and Intelligence Squad Captain James Hamilton filed libel and slander suits in Superior Court over the Mickey Cohen interview on the Mike Wallace program. Parker asked $2,000,000 plus $100 attorney's fees while Hamilton asked $1,000,000.

Suits are particularly pegged on rebroadcast of kinescope, charging malice in statements by Cohen describing Parker as a "sadistic degenerate . . . thief . . . " Named as defendants were AB-PT, Philip Morris, N. W. Ayer, Wallace and Cohen.

CBS' Unique Status in Electronic Journalism; Takes on All Comers

CBS-TV has taken the lead in a new form of worldwide electronic journalism that has left the other networks far behind. Nothing daunted by the strong Congressional and Presidential criticism of its Khrushchev interview, the web in the past two weeks has wrapped up filmed discussions with two other "doubtful" foreign statesmen. India's Nehru and Yugoslavia's Tito.

Within the past year, the web has had a lineup of foreign heads of state comprising Khrushchev, Nehru, Tito, China's Chou En-Lai, Egypt's Nasser, Israel's Ben-Gurion and Burma's U Nu, all in interviews either with U. S. newsmen or with Ed Murrow via "See It Now." Their political complexions have varied from Communist to "independent Communist" to "neutralist" all the way over to pro-West, with a few odds and ends in between.

Admittedly, CBS has gotten into something of a hot spot via the airing of what some Congressional critics have called "propaganda." But the web, somewhat wiser after the Khrushchev incident, is now moving cautiously only via the use of "discussions" following the programs, as in the case of the post-mortem June 30 on the special Tito edition of "See It Now."

But beyond the inconveniences, CBS is emerging as the undisputed strong-man of television journalism. Having built a demonstrably superior spot-newsgathering organization over the years under John Day and occupied the No. 1 spot in that field without dispute, the network is developing on a new front, with its "See It Now" team on the one hand and public affairs operation under Irving Gitlin (reporting to news-pubaffairs veep Sig Mickelson) on the other as the country's top electronic developer of news stories.

Pubaffairs operation, with key men Gitlin in N. Y. and Ted Koop and Ted Ayers in Washington, has moved into the news field in no-holds-barred fashion as to hold down the other side of the news picture—the story "development" operation and the news-in-depth arm for the web. No other network has been able to touch CBS on this score — principally because there's no similarly integrated public affairs operation such as Mickelson's at the other webs and because management hasn't given the news-public affairs boys the free hand that CBS has.

Apart from the straight-interview and panel treatments, CBS has moved into the in-depth area on other fronts. Web's radio documentary on the Galindez-Murphy case was such an example and is blueprinted as the forerunner of many such programs.

Bing Back on Radio

Hollywood, July 9.

Bing Crosby is returning to radio in October, on CBS, with Ford the probable bankroller.

Crosby exited CBS last December, after being on radio for 25 years. His new program will be five-times-a-week, with the 15 minutes devoted to singing and gab.

Life Mag Teams With NBC Radio On Feature Strip

NBC Radio and Life mag are getting together on a new 15-minute nighttime news feature strip titled "Speaking of Life," which will dovetail with the web's well-established Morgan Beatty "News of the world" in the 7:30 to 8 p.m. Monday-Friday period.

Life moved into the picture both as coproducer of the strip and as one of the sponsors, taking on one of the three nightly commercial minutes five times a week. Show was planned as an NBC-only production with "Life Around the World" as title, but Young & Rubicam heard about it and immediately bought in on sponsorship for Life mag. Then Life and NBC got together on the coproduction arrangement. Original title couldn't be cleared, so web then settled on "Speaking."

Oops, Wrong Mag

"Speaking of Life," the new NBC Radio-Life mag news-features strip, was originally titled "Life Around the World," which looked like an ideal title for the 7:45-8 p.m. show.

But NBC ran into a matter of title clearance on the original and had to change. Title is owned by a magazine—but not Life. It's David Lawrence's U.S. News & World Report, which uses it in a global roundup column.

Series, which will be produced by Charlie Speer (ex-"Today" and "Wide Wide World") will move into the 7:45 to 8 weeknight period starting July 29, and will utilize some 15 feature stories a week, about 10 of them in conjunction with Life and five NBC originals. Features, mainly human interest stuff but pegged on major news stories, will be done live or tape or both, with the cooperation of Life staffers. Some of the same features appearing in the mag will be used on the show, but with a fresh slant.

Stanza will replace "One Man's Family," which will probably be moved into the afternoon to join the rest of the NBC soaps in the web's "serial block." The nighttime lineup will then comprise the Beatty newscast and "Speaking of Life" as a hand-in-glove hard news-feature slotting at 7:30-8, segueing into "Nighttime" at 8 to 9:30.

FRAMER SERIES ON GOTHAM INDUSTRY

Walt Framer Productions is joining with the New York Board of Trade for a new half-hour television series on the Board's behalf titled "Let's Look at New York." Series will cover Gotham industry, via "progress reports," biogs of leading New Yorkers and live film displays of manufacturing processes at work. Deal was set between Framer and Robert Dowling, Gotham theatreowner and producer who is the Board's president. No station set for the show yet.

Plymouth Axing Groucho on Radio

NBC Radio loses its last single-sponsored half-hour entertainment show come September when Plymouth-DeSoto Dealers will drop the AM version of Groucho Marx's 'You Bet Your Life." Show, which has been on the web since October of 1950 when the televersion was adapted for radio also, has occupied a second-rate position of late anyway, having occupied the Saturday afternoon 12:30-1 spot. Last show is Sept. 21, and NBC hasn't yet decided whether to sustain it.

Network's only other single-sponsor half-hour (other than religious and farm-news shows) is "Telephone Time," which has already checked off for the summer. Bell Telephone hasn't yet made up its mind whether to return in the fall or not, and additionally is listening to pitches from the other webs. CBS recently lost its last entry in the single-sponsored class, when Liggett & Myers dropped "Gunsmoke."

Upswing in NBC Radio Fortunes, Forge Ahead on Sponsored Hours

A heavy upturn in use of network radio plus the drastic changeover in NBC programming since the first of the year have combined to give NBC a substantial lead in total weekly sponsored hours over CBS. NBC assumed this lead in May and has maintained it over the past three months.

Total sponsored hours on NBC for the first week in July amount to 32 hours and 25 minutes, compared with 25 hours and 48 minutes on CBS. In June, it was 34 hours and 30 minutes for NBC and 26 hours and 8 minutes for CBS; in May, it was 27:56 for NBC and 27:17 for CBS. Indicative of the drastic upturn in NBC's fortunes is the fact that in January, the web had only 14 hours and 55 minutes, compared with CBS' 25 hours and 3 minutes.

NBC computes sponsored hours by converting its participations to time segments. That is, a one-minute announcement is equal to five minutes of sponsored time; a 30-second equals three and a half minutes of sponsored time, and a six-second announcement is equated to one and a half minutes of sponsored time. CBS doesn't sell announcements; its smallest time sale is a five-minute segment, so no conversion is necessary.

CBS, confronted with the NBC data, made no effort to refute it but did question whether the sponsored hours compilation has any particular significance. It doesn't equate to billings, CBS points out; it doesn't reflect the size of station lineups and even includes some lineups of less than 20 stations. Finally, CBS maintains, there's little basis of comparison even if the six-second and 30-second conversions are acceptable because CBS doesn't sell anything less than the equivalent of a one-minute commercial. Nor does CBS sell religious programs, with these accounting for two hours on NBC.

Whatever the value of the sponsored time compilation, it is indicative of an amazing reversal in NBC's fortunes. The July total of NBC sponsored hours is up 57.8% over last July, and represents a 36.0% share of the network radio total as contrasted with 23.0% a year ago July.

For that matter, while total four-network sponsored time is up only 0.9% over last July, a three-network computation shows it up by 17.8%, with the difference attributable to the decline in the fortunes of Mutual over the past year. Latter's sponsored hours are down by 39.1% from last July. The ABC-CBS-NBC total, however, is 74 hours and 50 minutes, compared with 63 hours and 25 min-

Figaro (50% NBC) Reelects Board

All officers and directors of Figaro Inc., the indie production firm in which NBC has a 50% interest, were reelected by the company's board at a meeting Monday (8).

The board also approved Figaro's entry into legit production and the company will launch its activity in this field with Carson McCullers' "Square Root of Wonderful," which is scheduled for a Broadway bow this fall. In addition, Figaro, originally organized as an indie feature film production firm, will begin production of live and filmed television shows in association with NBC.

Figaro has completed its first feature film—"The Quiet American," which United Artists will release shortly. It expects to begin work on a as-yet-unannounced new feature in several months. "Good Old Charley Faye," originally scheduled as the second feature on Figaro's program, has been shelved temporarily.

Officers reelected include Joseph Mankiewicz, prexy; Emanuel Sachs, executive veepee; Robert Lantz, veepee; Earl Rettig, treasurer, and Richard Reiss, secretary. In addition to the officers, the board consists of Bert Allenberg, Alan Livingston, Abraham Bienstock and James Denning.

Joe Levine to WHDH-TV

Boston, July 9.

Joe Levine, tv and news editor of the Boston Traveler, is shifting to the paper's new tv'er, WHDH-TV, which is targeted for a September start as ABC-TV's affiliate here. Longtime newspaperman will head the station's news and film departments.

Levine left the Traveler this week for a month's vacation, and starts with WHDH in August.

Cecil Brown's Got Some Valuable Tape—Talks With Ousted Red Leaders

Partially by luck, ABC's news department was on the spot in recent days for two important yarns, one international and the other a hot domestic issue.

Commentator Cecil Bhown, has just returned from a month in Russia. While there, the network reports, he interviewed three of the four men ousted from the Presidium by Premier Khrushchev—before they got the boot. Statements by Malenkov, Molotov and Shepilov are being used in comparison to the ensuing events.

Yesterday (Mon.), as southern Sen. Richard Russell complained openly of mass media's failure to supply space and time for the pro segregation movement's views, network Washington chief John Secondari was on hand. After the session, he offered the senator time on "Open Hearing" Sunday (14) afternoon, and the offer was immediately accepted.

15 SCRIPTERS PACTED FOR EVE ARDEN SHOW

Hollywood, July 9.

Eve Arden Show, originally "It Gives Me Great Pleasure," starts shooting at Desilu July 24 with a total of 15 writers signed to do scripts.

Inked by producer Edmond Hartman and director John Rich are Hugh Wedlock, Howard Snyder, Everett Greenbaum, Martin Ragaway, Jack Douglas, Marvin Fisher, Joe Quillan, William Cowley, Peggy Chantler, William Davenport, Jim Fritzell, Sherman Marks, Leo Townsend, Seaman Jacobs and Sy Rose.

NBC Taps Cartoonist For Senate Filibuster

Leo Herschfield, vet newspaper cartoonist and show biz caricaturist, has been signed by NBC News on a special assignment. He'll cover the anticipated filibuster in the U.S. Senate on the civil rights Bill, with his sketches to be used on the Chet Huntley-Dave Brinkley "NBC News" telecasts.

Herschfield was tapped because the Senate won't permit camera coverage of its proceedings.

Kirsch Search

WRCA-TV, the NBC flagship in New York, has turned what until now has been strictly a station promotion stunt into a revenue-producing sponsorship entry. Kirsch Beverages has bought a seven-week campaign of 210 announcements on the station in a "Search for Miss No-Cal," the "most sparkling girl" in the Gotham area.

The Kirsch campaign stems from the station's own annual "Miss WRCA-TV Contest," which has been running for the past six years. Beverage outfit not only bought the announcements and WRCA-TV promotional support, but took on the station's actual contest format, involving semi-finals weekly at Palisades Amusementt Park in Ft. Lee, N.J. Kirsch stunt promotes its No-Cal line of soft drinks, of course.

Kirsch "Search" starts next Wednesday (17), with the first semifinal the following week.

Fort Worth—There were 605,000 television sets in the Fort Worth-Dallas area as of July 1, according to Harold Hough, Director of WBAP-TV.

WGN Cuts Some Fancy Chi Capers In Biz, Audiences

Chicago, July 9.

While two of the network o&o's here are experiencing a protracted business doldrum, the indie WGN is operating at an alltime high, both in billings and ratings.

For the fifth straight month a June ARB analysis of quarter-hour firsts cross the board found WGN-TV the second toprated station in Chi (WBBM-TV is the first), and in May the company's combined gross billings for radio and tv reached its highest figure in history. It's reported to be over 4% better than March of this year, the previous high month for WGN, Inc.

Gain is largely attributed to an increase in the number of national advertisers, principally from Ben Berentson's New York staff, which was expanded last fall. While billings for the first five months of 1957 are over 12% higher than the same period last year, the gross income from the New York ofice is up 26.4% for the period.

Baseball—the Cubs and White Sox telecasts—hypoed afternoon programming, and feature films at 10 p.m. ranked number one in the ARB summary for the full seven days in the same spot. Average quarter-hour rating for the entire week was 24.0 for WGN-TV, second to WBBM-TV's 35.9. Station had five of the 10 locally toprate syndicated films, "Highway Patrol," "Superman," "City Detective," "Don Ameche Presents," and "San Francisco Beat." Highest-rated daytime program, whether local, live, film or network, was WGN-TV's "Lunchtime Little Theatre," with an average quarter-hour rating of 8.3 or 63% of the viewing audience. No Curtains on Comics

Beverly Hills.

Editor, VARIETY:

The tv columns and magazines keep telling us that we have reached the end of the era of of comedians on television. When you break it down who are we actually missing next season that we have had this past one? Jackie Gleason, Sid Caesar has been offered a bi-monthly show but turned it down. He will be back on the air by January.

Starting the season then will be Burns & Allen, Jack Benny, Lucille Ball & Desi Arnaz, Phil Silvers, George Gobel, Groucho Marx, Bob Hope, Jerry Lewis and you will find heading the guest list Martha Raye, Lou Costello, Lou Holtz, Buddy Hackett, Ed Wynn and dozens of other top drawer comics.

It looks to me as though America will be laughing so loud it just won't hear the funeral march.

Love and Laughter.

TWO-THIRDS OF TRANSFERS IN TV

Washington, July 9.

A goodly portion of the nation's radio and tv stations changed hands during the last 12 months and their new owners shelled out around $75,000,000 for the facilities. More often than not, the buyers were multiple owners or companies which became multiple owners as the result of the deals.

Television sales accounted for better than two-thirds of the total dollars involved but the number of stations sold was small compared to that of radio. About 40 video outlets were sold while at least 200 radio facilities found new owners. In many cases, radio and tv stations jointly owned in the same community were sold as a package. There were also some big package deals of radio and tv stations in different cities.

$15,750,000 Time-Life Buy

The 12-month period was notable for the $15,750,000 purchase by Time-Life of the Bitner stations, putting the publishing firm in the ranks of multiple owners with the full complement five V's. The year saw the rise of J. H. Whitney & Co. in the tv field through acquisitions of three stations at a cost of more than $14,000,000, giving the financier his fourth facility. There was also a further expansion into top markets by Storer Broadcasting Co., with purchase of a station in the Philadelphia area.

Although tv stations continued to command fancy prices, one of the biggest deals involved a radio facility—WNEW in New York which brought $5,160,000 in the sale to DuMont. There were other radio stations which sold for more than $500,000.

Robt. Sarnoff Bullish on Europe TV Prospects, Champions U.S. Stake

Like Good Old Days

NBC Radio last week found itself with a temporary embarrassment of riches, so much so that it had to politely ask several sponsors to transfer their business from the weekend "Monitor" show to weeknight spots. Situation was strictly a temporary one, with "Monitor" availabilities due to open up again within a week or so, but the NBC boys were sweating for awhile.

What happened was that the network, anticipating the usual number of contract expirations at the end of June, went ahead and booked new business for the show on the basis of the percentage of cancellations last year at this time. However, the anticipated number of cancellations failed to materialize, and the network found itself actually oversold on the show. It then ruefully had to ask some of the advertisers to move into weeknight spots for a week or so, until availabilities started opening again.

European television "is at the take-off point for the type of expansion we had in 1950," and its present set circulation of 10,000,000 will double within three years. That's the opinion of NBC prez Bob Sarnoff, just back from a four-week tour of England and the Continent.

In his newest "newsletter" to radio-tv editors, Sarnoff observed that "the economic facts of life weigh heavily in favor of privately-owned, commercially supported services in the future" in Europe, even though most European setups are Government-owned and controlled. "Many governments simply don't have the money to support a national service of the scope and type their people seem to want," he said.

The Europeans seem eager for a live-programming link with the American continent, Sarnoff said, but they would "not welcome an indiscriminate flood of American tv product." He cited program quotas, currency exchange restriction and the tightness of American dollars as practical barriers, but "more important, there would be an emotional rebellion against loss of national identity if any foreign product was dominant in any European nation."

But they do welcome "an electronic tie to us as a means of generating new interest in new programming, and of generally expanding the scope and importance of their service." Sarnoff said such shows as "Wide Wide World" and "Peter Pan" would lend themselves to intercontinental broadcast, and cited the airing of the NBC Opera version of "La Traviata" on kinescope in seven countries as having been welcomed by the European public.

On the specific side, Sarnoff termed West Germany "the real television comer of Europe," with 32 transmitters reaching 85% of the population and a "bobtailed" commercial network which supplements the national service "and which appears to be spreading rapidly." In France, Sarnoff stated,

Flash! Network Prexy Enlists Aid Of Station Reps; 'Can Live Together'

For the first time publicly, a network executive solicited the support of traditional arch enemies, the station representatives. Robert Eastman, prexy of ABC Radio, said to them that while there were "certain fundamental antagonisms" existing between groups there was also "an area of understanding and common objectives."

Eastman, having come a few months ago to the network from John Blair, a radio representative, said the immediate target is to build radio into a billion dollar industry.

Underlying aim of the talk before the Station Representative Association yesterday (Tues.) was to get the support of its membership for the eight hours of live variety programming planned by ABC for fall. Eastman promised to "eliminate improper methods in our operating of the American Radio Network," ABC's new title.

He expressed the network's new policies in regard to alleviating the differences between the groups:

Sorry, Right Number

NBC's Moscow expert, Irving R. Levine, was cut off on a telephone interview the day of the Soviet top echelon shakeup and, in characteristic British understatement, the London operator explained to the NBC monitors (and the world at large), and with proper decorum albeit fully manifesting his vexation:

"The Moscow operator is very uncooperative."

The NBC newscast proceeded without a Moscow pickup.

Howard Miller's NBC-TV Dickers

Chicago, July 9.

While the future of NBC-TV's "Club 60" won't be determined until July 16, it's known that MCA has pitched a Howard Miller package as possible replacement for the musical daytimer, and the web is interested.

Miller is the top-rated Chi disk jockey, generally regarded as one of the most influential in the music biz, who recently terminated his exclusivity with the local CBS outlet, WBBM-TV. He was also broached last week by Jerry Chester of Pat Weaver's new Program Service net to helm a Saturday night Chi origination from the Aragon Ballroom, tentatively set for an Aug. 24 kickoff. Miller evinced interest but signed nothing.

Meanwhile "Club 60," emanating from NBC's studios here, is trying to disprove the ratings services with an organized campaign for an audience show-of-hands via the mails. Dennis James vehicle is dangling an RCA color tv set, a hi-fi set, and 10 Polaroid Land cameras as bait for the best letters on "Why I Like Club 60." At this writing, the mail count is reported at over 18,000.

FRISCO PREPS FOR AFTRA POWWOW

San Francisco, July 9.

About 150 AFTRA delegates are expected to gather here July 25 for the union's four-day national convention.

Scheduled for discussion are pay-tv, tv-tape, educational tv and closed-circuit industrial tv.

Two hottest topics of discussion are expected to be the AFL-CIO Code of Ethics—prediction here is that the code will be rejected because it isn't strong enough—and the unfair-station clause in AFTRA contracts.

Among delegates coming to Frisco are Bud Collyer, Peggy Wood and Ethel Barrymore Colt.

Up Lew Arnold In Par TV Setup

Hollywood, July 9.

Lew Arnold, general manager of KTLA, has been promoted to veepee and board member of parent Paramount TV Productions, it was disclosed by Paul Raibourn, prexy of PTP and veepee of Paramount Pictures. Arnold replaces Bernard Goodwin, who resigned to take up full time post with DuMont Broadcasting.

New KTLA exec lineup will give Arnold almost complete local autonomy in the Paramount TV setup, especially with decision of DuMont board earlier this week to pass up station purchase deal. Arnold's predecessor, the late Klaus Landsberg, while a PTP veepee, was never a board member.

Under new KTLA setup, Arthur Israel Jr. will be Arnold's N. Y. liaison with prexy Raibourn.

$1,650,000 Into NBC-AM Coffers

Some 15 sponsors kicked in $1,650,000 in net new business and renewals on NBC Radio during the past week. Breakdown shows 11 new orders and four renewals.

Biggest chunk of new biz comes from Grove Laboratories, with an order for 30 one-minute and 30-second commercials a week over a 26-week period for its cold remedy and for 10 five-minute "Monitor" musical segments a week for 20 weeks for Fitch hair products. Also included is an extension of its summer schedule on "News of the World" for another seven weeks.

Other new business included Equitable Life, for 100 six-second chain breaks a week for eight weeks, via Kenyon & Eckhardt; Vick Chemical for 30 six-second

Speidel Not So Hot About 'Price'

NBC-TV's Monday night picture, which at one point seemed all set via Speidel's alternate-week order for "The Price Is Right" in the 7:30-8 spot, is now up in the air again. Speidel may shift its coin to Saturday night at 10 in an alternate-week arrangement with Pharmaceuticals Inc., in which event "Price" will be dead and NBC will have to find a new show for the period.

Should Speidel switch, one possible Monday night replacement is "My Friend Flicka," for which NBC committed with 20th-Fox for 39 new films. However, web won't sustain "Flicka" and must first find a sponsor before it firms it for the spot. Even if Speidel decides not to move to Saturday night, and retains the Monday time it's by no means certain that "Price" is set. Show is only half sold, and NBC may want to try something else.

If Speidel does switch to Saturday, there's still the problem of a show for that spot. One possibility is "Truth or Consequences," another panel show called "What's the Use." Pharmaceuticals hasn't been able to make up its mind, and the presence of a second sponsor may make a satisfactory choice even more difficult.

WRCA-TV's Anti-TV Kick: 'Get Out Of the House, Go to the Movies'

A top television station is advising its listeners to get away from the television set and into a film theatre. WRCA-TV, the NBC flagship in New York, is plugging the "get out of the house and go to the movies" pitch via spot announcements and integrated plugs, but is hardly getting a cent out of it.

Plugs, which amount to an anti-tv kick, are part of a "Gotham Film Festival" commercial package which the station is offering to film studios and theatre chains at nearly one-quarter of card rates. But to add insult to injury, even though the station has had only a couple of takers, it is airing sustainers anyway, in the hope of pulling in some business later.

Package delivers 10 spots, comprising five 20-second announcements and five 10-second ID's, in various time categories, for $1,500 net. Same schedule on the card rate totals $5,125 gross. Moreover, "Film Festival" buyer can also purchase any other additional time at a 50% discount. The announcements themselves are surrounded by other integrated plugs, including a Saturday afternoon "movie directory" billboarding up to 10 different pix and their theatres, flash announcements, institutional announcements, plugs on air-conditioning in theatres in weather reports, plus all-round promotion on various shows like Dick Joseph's "Passport," the Leon Pearson commentary series, the Johnny Andrews-hosted feature film shows, the Tex & Jinx show and the Hy Gardner show.

Television industry in N.Y. is somewhat dubious about the campaign itself—the idea of providing special treatment for a competitive industry, and at some 29% of card rate at that. But what really has some tv execs sore is the fact that WRCA-TV is airing the spots even when it has't any clients for them—hitting television over the head and gratuitously at that.

R. J. Reynolds Taps ABC's 'Wire Service'

R. J. Reynolds has an order in for Monday at 8 over ABC-TV for a half-hour version of Don Sharpe's filmed series, "Wire Service." Meantime, Max Factor has placed an order for the same time on the same web, but ABC cannot accept it until it learns the final disposition of the cig order, which is expected to be forthcoming this week.

Factor is considering "Those Whiting Girls," with Barbara and Margaret Whiting, now doing a summer CBS stand. Also under consideration are two other film packages, it was reported.

Those Barter Deals on Upswing As Syndicators Eye 'Operation Mop-Up'

In the midst of a healthy syndication market, with skein sales aimed at the advertiser and/or station, there appears to be a parallel growth in barter arrangements.

With few exceptions, key spur to the barter arrangement from the syndicators viewpoint has been to get another ride on old product or to effect a mop-up operation. Usual deal involves purchase by the sponsor of programming, with stations exchanging a schedule of spots for the programming, be it either features or half-hours.

Principal drawback from station's point of view—and their station reps—is that no money is exchanged, with the sponsor getting a "free" spot ride for the programming. But despite this factor, stations always in need of programming, have been going along with the pattern—especially if the advertiser had not been a buyer of spot tv in the past. Stations also have utilized the exchanged "free" spots in off-hours, precluding the crowding out of any paid biz.

Latest to get on the barter bandwagon is Exquisite Form Bra, which last week inked a projected deal with National Telefilm Associates. Deal, still in the exploratory stage, was spurred by the barter deal engineered by International Latex with Matty Fox's C & C Super on RKO product. NTA, in exploring possibilities of the national deal, will use features (excluding 20th-Fox product) and half-hour telefilms. It will set up a separate barter sales force for the arrangement, aimed at hitting a potential of 95% of the U. S. tv homes over a two-year period. The projected contract, which calls for a schedule of payments to NTA from Exquisite—the only level money is exchanged in such arrangements—was negotiated by Grey Advertising, repping Exquisite.

Previously, Charles Antell, via Paul Venze Associates of Baltimore, concluded a deal with Screencraft for "Judge Roy Bean," under which Antell will get exclusive use of the skein in 50 U. S. markets. Antell, a large barter outfit, will utilize the "Bean" show for barter arrangements with stations. It also is talking with Screencraft for a similar deal with "The Mickey Rooney Show."

Paul Venze Associates, agency for Antell, now is using approximately 40 properties, half-hours, features, cartoons, westerns, etc., nationally for trading Antell spots for programming with stations. This library of programming is a composite of ABC Film Syndication, Bagnall, Interstate, NBC Film Sales, Official Films, as well as from other sources, to which the Screencraft shows will be added.

George Sidney Teams On New Cartoonery

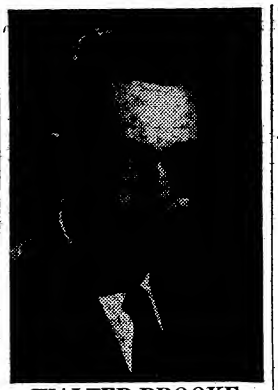
Hollywood, July 9.

George Sidney, Columbia exec producer, and William Hanna and Joe Barbera, ex-MGM cartoon toppers, have formed new cartoonery, H. B. Enterprises Inc. New firm has plans for eventual feature-length cartoon feature, but will do teleblurb, theatrical and industrial animation work at present. Sidney is prexy and Hanna and Barbera, veepees, with quarters at Kling studios.

New outfit has no connection with George Sidney Productions, through which he is releasing, via Columbia, his feature schedule of "Jeanne Eagels" and "Pal Joey" (latter in association with Essex Productions). Hanna and Barbera were first associated with Sidney in making of MGM's "Anchor's Aweigh." Pair also made Metro's "Tom and Jerry" cartoons.

'Harbor Command' Set in 83 Cities

"Harbor Command," Ziv's Wendell Corey starrer slated for fall airing, now has 83 markets inked, prior to its release to Ziv's field syndication force. About [illegible] 70 markets are forecast to be sold within the next 30 days, by sa' v.p. M. J. Rifkin.



In preparation for the big push this week, sales meetings were held in New York with Jack Gregory, eastern divison sales manager; Ed Broman, midwestern division sales manager; Len Firestone, New York City sales manager; and Al Unger, Chicago sales exec.

Among the markets which have already been sold, there is a 55-city spread for Hamm's Brewing. Major western markets including Los Angeles, San Francisco, San Diego and Portland are set for Miles Laboratories.

Prospective Scripters See 'Maverick' Pilot

Hollywood, July 9.

To acquaint prospective scripters for series with running characters and themes, Warner Bros. tv department last week held unique private screening of "Maverick" pilot for 110 writers and literary agents. Reportedly, this is first time such a screening has been done, especially for writers.

Hub TV Stations' Premiums in Bid For Feature Auds

Boston, July 9.

Battle for feature film audiences is on in this territory with WNAC-TV, WBZ-TV in Hub, and Channel 10, Providence, R. I. all beaming big movie packages in the late late hours.

WNAC-TV is running special promosh campaigns around its films. For "Laura," Sunday (7), they had Louise Morgan on her tv show giving away gift boxes of perfume and cologne to femmes named "Laura" tieing up with a [illegible] in the film in which a perfume scent is recognized by Dana Andrews playing a detective.

In addition, WNAC-TV is giving heavy air promosh plus newspaper ads for its films. With all the films being shown from the 11:15 to 2 p.m. or later times, and competing, late show viewers are having a field day picking their films.

WBZ-TV cut the "Tonight" show recently in favor of films, pointing out that a survey showed Hub late viewers prefer movies. Channel 10 has been on the late show film kick for some time WNAC-TV is pulling some of its big ones up to vie for the aud. Latest was the 20th Century Fox Film, "Crash Dive," with Tyrone Power, Dana Andrews and Anne Baxter.

Carl Barth Upped

Hollywood, July 9.

Producer Julian Lesser has upped Carl Barth to assistant producer on his "Bold Journey" telepix series.

Barth replaces Bruce Campbell, who left to enter feature pic production.

Breweries Still Hopped Up About Telefilms As 2d & 3d Year Skeds Roll

Breweries, looming virtually as large as ever as regional sponsors for syndicated skeins, at this point have kicked off new production on two established skeins, and figure importantly in new production on a third.

Ziv went ahead with third year production on "Highway Patrol," after inking a renewal deal with Ballantine Beer for 24 Eastern markets. MCA TV just announced Falstaff Brewing renewing "State Trooper" in upwards of 70 markets, thus putting that series into second year production.

National Telefilm Associates, although it lost a 67-market Socony-Mobile spread on "Sheriff of Cochise" when the sponsor decided to go network despite rating strength of show, has decided to go ahead with second year production on "Cochise." National Brewing Co., which has the skein in 15 eastern markets, is expected to pick up the skein for the second round.

5 Day Labs Pix Buy

An order for the final nine weeks of ABC-TV's Sunday night "Hollywood Film Theatre" came in from 5 Day Laboratories to the tune of one participation weekly. Buy commences on the 7:30 to 9 feature film show on July 21.

Grey handled the pact for 5 Day.

WB's $15,000,000 Expansion in TV To Keep Pace With Production

Hollywood, July 9.

With four shows slated for network airing via ABC-TV comes the fall, in addition to other projects, Warner Bros. currently is engaged in a $15,000,000 tv film production program.

Concurrently, studio, in light of the upbeat in tv films, has begun a building expansion program, which calls for the early construction of a $1,000,000, two-story building, exclusively devoted to tv.

Four networked shows sold include "Cheyenne," one hour western with General Electric picking up tab, "Sugarfoot," and "Maverick," both hour shows, with American Chicle and Kaiser Aluminum lined up as sponsors, Kaiser taking "Maverick" and the other going to American Chicle. "Code 45," another outdoor action adventure, but this one a half-hour series, is being sponsored by Campbell Soup.

In addition, WB has closed a deal with Bell Telephone for the filming of four one-hour tv science specs. Studios commercial-industrial film department, only organized a year ago, today boasts a large number of clients, including Eastman Kodak, Lever Bros., RCA, General Motors, Kellogs, General Electric and Procter & Gamble.

As part of the building program, three sound stages at the Burbank Studio were remodelled and converted for tv last week.

'Min,' 'N'west Passage' Next on Metro Agenda

With the Colgate deal for the "Thin Man" only to be put into contract form, Metro TV is moving ahead on other two pilot projects "Min and Bill" and "Northwest Passage."

Peggy Wood now is definitely set as Min, the role made famous by the late Marie Dressler, with Chill Wills playing opposite her. Production on the pilot is set to roll on the Metro lot Aug. 12. Buddy Ebsen has been selected as one of the leads in "Northwest Passage," slated to go into pilot production the latter part of next month. Charles (Bud) Barry, v.p. in charge of tv, will be on the Coast in connection with pilot shooting and to attend the Loew's board of directors meeting there.

Colgate's "Thin Man" deal calls for Colgate sharing residual rights in the series up to $10,000 per episode.

Chunky Expands On 'Legionnaire'

For the second successive year, Chunky Chocolate will sponsor "Foreign Legionnaire" in approximately 15 eastern and midwestern markets. Repping client in the Television Programs of America regional deal, with skein under new pact slated to kickoff in September, was Grey Advertising.

Chunky sponsored "Foreign Legionnaire" in over 14 stations last fall. This year, the series will air in 17 markets, in six of which Chunky is buying the program directly from stations, which in turn previously acquired series from TPA in syndication.

In New York, Chunky will "double expose" skein over WABC-TV, on Wednesdays at 6 p.m., starting Sept. 18. The second air day will be Saturdays, tentatively set at 6 p.m. Other markets include Kansas City, Indianapolis, Boston, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Wilkes-Barre, Buffalo, New Haven, Schenectady, Cleveland, Detroit, Philadelphia, Baltimore and Chicago. Series stars Buster Crabbe and son, Cuffy.

Manhattan TV Corp.'s Alaska, Hawaii Deals

Hollywood, July 9.

A deal for the distribution of the Atlantic Television Corp. feature package in 11 western states, Alaska and Hawaii, has been made by Manhattan Television Corp. The package includes "The Champion" and "Home of the Brave"

Deal also reactivates Manhattan Television Co., a subsid of Manhattan Film International. Other deals are pending for half-hour syndicated properties. Plans also are being made by Manhattan for the production of a half-hour series based on "Pet Show," now in its fifth year on KTLA, Los Angeles.

Guild's Foreign Subsid

Guild Films, which has done spotty foreign selling up to this point, established a foreign subsidiary this week to concentrate more on overseas co-production and sales. Arthur Gross, assistant to Guild prexy Reub Kaufman, becomes managaing director of the new company, Guild Television Internacional S.A.

Company is already working on three overseas co-production deals, one of which will probably be in England, where Kaufman went last week.

Hyde's 'Be My Guest'

Hollywood, July 9.

Buddy Hyde has formed his own company, Buddy Hyde Productions, and plans a half-hour color travel-interview show, "Be My Guest."

Tony Karis is associate producer.

Mansfield, Saltzman's 'MBI' Series With TPA; Locallied in Miami Beach

A pilot project for a new series, titled "MBI," short for Miami Beach Investigator, is planned by indie producers Irving Mansfield and Harry Saltzman, with Television Programs of America acting as co-producer.

Mansfield, now setting script, says contemplated series will avoid murder and mayhem, accenting fight against confidence men, card sharps, etc., with the police rather than a private eye getting credit for the sleuthing. There also will be a good deal of location shooting, upplaying the resort city locale.

In neighboring Miami City, Martin Stone of Stone Associates has announced plans for a telefilm series based on the files of the Miami City police, a department separate and distinct from that at Miami Beach.

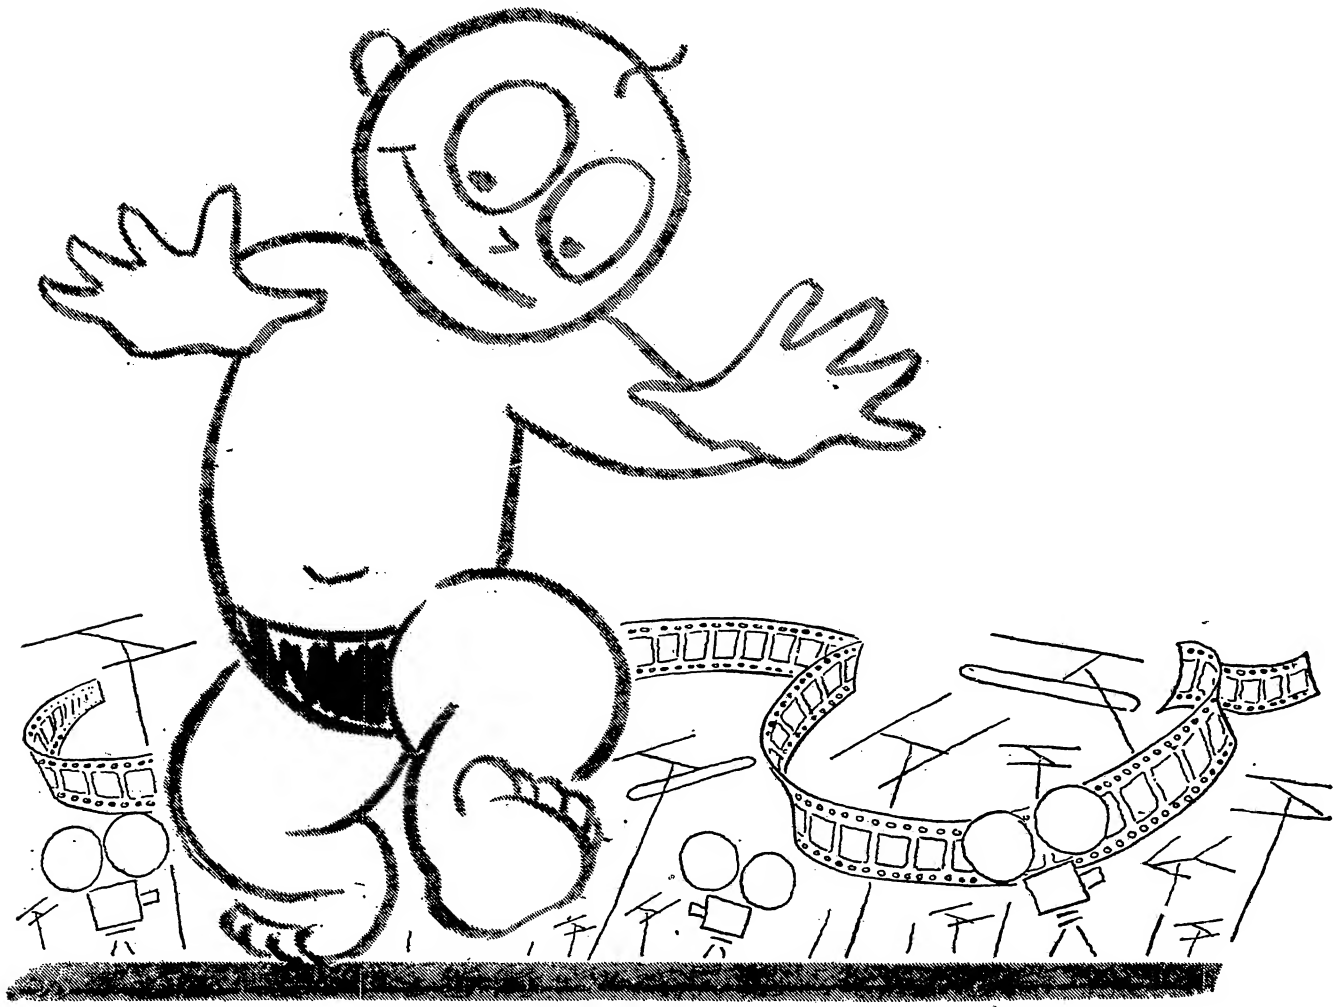
Bennett to London On 'Chan' Telefilms

Hollywood, July 9.

En route to London to take over new duties as co-producer-director of TPA "Charlie Chan" series is Charles Bennett, named last week. Under pact with TPA, Bennett also will script several teleplays for series, lensing in London with J. Carroll Naish starring.

Previously, Bennett performed similar chores on TPA "Count of Monte Cristo" series, also lensed at National Film Studios, Elstree.

More 'Cochise' Sales



National Telefilm Associates, prior to production on the second series of "Sheriff of Cochise," has ticked station sales in nine markets. Those inking for the new batch of 39 episodes include KYW, Cleveland, WTVN, Columbus, O., WSM, Nashville, WLWI, Indianapolis, and WNAC, Boston.

On the feature front, NTA has wracked up additional sales on its "Big 50" package of 20th-Fox pix. New sales include WOD, Grand Rapids, Mich., WHAR, Akron, O., KBOI, Boise, Ido.,and KFVS, Cape Girardeau, Mo.

WFAA-TV's UA Bundle

Dallas, July 9.

WFAA-TV has just added a package of post '48 United Artists features to its film library. Included are "The African Queen" with Katherine Hepburn and Humphrey Bogart, "Moulin Rouge" with Jose Ferrer and Zsa Zsa Gabor and "Night of the Hunter" with Robert Mitchum and Shelley Winters.

VARIETY - ARB City-By-City Syndicated Film Chart

VARIETY'S weekly chart of city-by-city ratings of syndicated and national spot film covers 40 to 60 cities reported by American Research Bureau on a monthly basis. Cities will be rotated each week, with the 10 top-rated film shows listed in each case, and their competition shown opposite. All ratings are furnished by ARB, based on the latest reports.

This VARIETY chart represents a gathering of all pertinent information about film in each market, which can be used by distributors, agencies, stations and clients as an aid in determining the effectiveness of a filmed show in the specific market. Attention should be paid to time—day and time factors, since sets-in-use and audience composition vary according to time slot, i.e., a Saturday afternoon children's show, with a low rating, may have a large share and an audience composed largely of children, with corresponding results for the sponsor aiming at the children's market. Abbreviations and symbols are as follows: (Adv), adventure; (Ch), children's; (Co), comedy; (Dr), drama; (Doc), documentary; (Mus), musical; (Myst), mystery; (Q), quiz; (Sp), sports; (W), western; (Wom), women's. Numbered symbols next to station call letters represent the station's channel; all channels above 13 are UHF. Those ad agencies listed as distributors rep the national sponsor from whom the film is aired.

U.S. TELEPIX O'SEAS BONANZA

Everybody's Got That Global Gleam

Telefilm foreign managers are on a touring spree, girdling the globe for new biz possible co-productions, or shooting abroad, and a fresh sizeup of the tv markets.

Latest to join the trek are Television Programs of America's Manny Reiner, slated for another trip to Europe, and Sam Gang, of National Telefilm Associates, set for a tour of the Latin American market.

Currently in Europe is Ed Stern, prez of Ziv International, while Leon H. Cagan, ABC Film Syndication foreign manager, now is touring Latin America. Recently returning from a trip to the continent was Charles Rosenblatt, foreign exec with Hollywood Television Services, Republic subsid.

NTA's foreign topper Gang, scheduled to leave for Latin America Tuesday (20), will have the freshly Spanish dubbed "Sheriff of Cochise" for sale. In addition, he will have a group of features, subtitled in Spanish. Among those which will be peddled for tv south of the border are "High Noon," "The Men," "Cyrano de Bergerac," "Gulliver's Travels," "Good Sam," "Trio" and "Encore."

TPA's Reiner left yesterday (Tues.) for Europe, with visits to London and Paris slated, before his return in about three to four weeks. TPA has "New Adventures of Charlie Chan" being shot against a European background. Prior to his departure, Reiner announced TPA's first sale in Guatemala. Program involved is Spanish version of TPA's "The Count of Monte Cristo," which will be sponsored by Instrumentos Musicales, in Guatemala City, starting in August.

Reub Kaufman, prez of Guild Films, is in Europe to set up a permanent production unit there.

Bakers' Dough 3d Tallest Among TPA's Sponsors; Foods in Lead

Bakeries jumped from fifth to third place among the roster of categorized sponsors riding Television Programs of America telefilms during the first half of 1957, as compared to the half-year period in '56.

The two largest industry categories, both last year and in 1957 are food products and breweries, in that order, according to the TPA survey.

Commenting on the analysis, confined to TPA program sales, exec v.p. Michael M. Sillerman pointed out that the leading five categories in local syndicated film sponsorship are all industries selling products for home consumption—food products, beer, bakeries, dairies and retail stores and supermarkets. Situation spotlights telefilms' power in delivering sales at the local level in what is probably the most competitive sales field in the country, according to Sillerman.

Part of the increase in bakeries use of telefilms can be attributed to the great number of companies sponsoring "Hawkeye and the Last of the Mohicans." Included are Langendorf Bakeries, Bell Bakeries, Fla.; Ideal Baking, Tex.; Tasty Baking, Baton Rouge, La.; and Alstadt & Langlass Baking, Ia. "Hawkeye" is also strong in dairies and supermarkets. In addition to "Hawkeye" programs included in the analysis were "Don Ameche

Miami Hot For Features on TV

Miami, whose stations now are unreeling with Metro and other top pix product, evidences itself as a strong picture-on-tv town, according to the latest VARIETY ARB Feature Film Chart, published in this issue.

The top five pix tabulated in the resort city show an average ARB rating range from 27.4 to 18.9, with virtually all opposing programming topped by the features. "Destination Tokyo," on top of the feature rating heap with a 27.4 on May 12 from Sunday at 10:00 p.m. to 12:30 a.m., beat its cinematic opposition on WCKT, which had "Thirty Seconds Over Tokyo," which drew an ARB average of 9.8. Other high ratings went to "Honky Tonk," with a 23.3, "The Bribe," with 22.9, "Bad Bascomb," 22.6, and "A Night at the Opera," 18.0 all Metro pix telecast on WCKT. Only opposition programming to beat the five cinematics was "Robin Hood" on WTVJ which hit a 25.1 in its half-hour against an ARB average of 23.3 for "Honky Tonk."

'Cortez' Vidpix Series

Hollywood, July 9.

Pilot film on a new vidpix series, "Cortez, the Conqueror," will be shot by Chester Erskine Productions in Mexico.

Erskine is currently negotiating for studio space in Mexico City, where interiors will be lensed. He will shoot locations outside Mexico City, in actual spots where Cortez fought many of his battles in the conquest of Mexico.

TV Webs Caution 'Lay Off Violence' On Oater Telepix

Hollywood, July 9.

With a record rash of oater vidpix on the way, some network censors have already warned producers they'd better limit the violence. Some continuity acceptance departments fear a tendency to toss in violence to bolster a weak story.

Bob Wood, head of Coast continuity acceptance at NBC-TV, already had discussions with producers about such upcoming properties as "Wagon Train" and "Restless Gun." He pointed out they must particularly watch violence in the early nighttime slots when youngsters are watching, and emphasized NBC doesn't want "violence for the sake of violence."

Bill Tankersley, editing director of CBS-TV on the Coast, said the network's ban against excessive violence also applies to such mellers as "Climax." Killing is out if there isn't a definite reason for it," he said, but noted more latitude in shows like "Gunsmoke," which is on at 10 p.m. Saturdays.

Lotsa Location Shooting On Dick Boone Series

Hollywood, July 9.

Shooting schedule on next 13 Filmaster Productions "Have Gun, Will Travel" segments, toplining Richard Boone, will involved 26 days of location lensing. Company will shoot the CBS-TV series at nine different California locales, from Sonora to Lone Pine.

Filmaster production v.p. Glenn Cook also disclosed that firm has set up location library at California Studios hq, consisting of 3,000 volumes plus a morgue of 60,000 stills and travel folders. Firm will make library available to ad agencies and vidblurb producers as well.

NO LACK OF SPONSOR COIN

By MURRAY HOROWITZ

American telefilms abroad, wherever there is commercial sponsorship along U. S. lines, are attracting a wide variety of sponsors, many of them American firms or subsids selling in foreign markets.

Ziv, one of the pioneers in the international field, has a sponsor list riding from Mexico to Canada to Australia. Screen Gems and to a lesser degree other outfits also have disclosed a wide sponsor list.

This is the rundown:

Ziv in Canada tells of some 20 sponsors riding skeins. "Highway Patrol" running in 16 Canadian markets is supported by Dow Brewery in Montreal; Stott Aluminum in Sydney, MacCosham Storage in Calgary, Irving Oil in St. John. Sealy Mattress has "Science Fiction Theatre," running in 12 markets, in Edmonton, Calgary and Winnipeg, while St. John Propane Gas has the skein in St. John.

Other sponsors on Ziv shows in Canada include: Alberta Gas, Templeton's Drugs, Virene Department Store, Freeman-Wilson (Dodge-De-Soto dealers); Williams Bros, Department Store, Imperial Lumber Co., Alpha Milk and others.

In Mexico, Procter & Gamble has renewed the stripping of five Ziv shows, for example. In Puerto Rico, the 10 Ziv shows there are sponsored by International General Electric, Esso, Sears Roebuck, Procter & Gamble, Pet Milk and National Biscuit. In Venezuela, Procter & Gamble is sponsoring four Ziv skeins, along with Sears Roebuck, Venezolana de Tabaco, Transit Advertising, American Standard Brands and International General Electric on others.

Screen Gems has Max Factor in Argentina on "All Star," and in Mexico, Corn Products, Bristol-Myers and Nestle on "Jungle Jim," "All Star," and "Rin Tin Tin," respectively. In Puerto Rico for Screen Gems, there are Libby's, Stokely-Van Camp, Goodyear and India Brewing; Esso Standard Oil in Guatemala; the same company in El Salvador; Remington Rand in Colombia; Max Factor in Brazil; Kraft Cheese, Kelloggs, Cadbury Chocolates, Coca-Cola and Tom Piper Foods in Australia.

Tanabe Pharmaceutical, Harris Confectionary, and Teikoku Rayon in Japan; Max Factor sponsoring "Patti Page" in the Philippines, and Pepsi Cola riding "Rin Tin Tin" in Thailand.

Closer by in Canada, the Columbia Pictures subsid lists H. F. Ritchie, Ltd., Ford Motor Co. of Canada, Bristol-Myers, Canada Safeway, Singer Sewing Machine, Robin Hood Flour, Simoniz Wax, Templetons, Ltd., Alka Seltzer, Hazel Bishop, Kelloggs, Electric Shop Co., Saskatchewan Power, Kelloggs, Imperial Tobacco and Dupont of Canada riding a variety of skeins.

In the Latin American markets, ABC Film Syndication skeins have such sponsors as Kraft, Bendex and Supreme Appliances, Ford Motor Co., and Cerveceria Quauhtemoc, local brewers. Fleischmann's Yeast is sponsoring "Hopalong Cassiday," distributed by Freemantle in Colombia and General Foods sponsoring the same series in Mexico. Johnson & Johnson and Wildroot are riding on "Robin Hood" in Canada and Fry-Cadbury, Ltd., and Savage Shoes on "Sir Lancelot" in the same market, both skeins distributed by Official Films.

Television Programs of America also has a rundown of sponsors riding TPA shows abroad, including Pepsi Cola on "Stage 7" in Cuba, and on the same series, Borden in Puerto Rico, Corporacion Nacional Electronica in Mexico, Pan American Airways in Brazil. Lever Bros. is co-producing "Tugboat Annie" with TPA in Canada and Lipton Tea and Brylcreem is co-sponsoring "Hawkeye and the Last of the Mohicans" in Canada. Others riding TPA shows include Nabisco on "Count of Monte Cristo" in Mexico, Campbells Soup in Puerto Rico and Bristol Myers in Venezuela, all on the same show.

Lack of Residual Formula Not Hampering Post-'48 Pix Releases

More and more post-'48 pix are finding their way on tv, despite the lack of agreement on a residual payment formula with the various Hollywood guilds.

United Artists has a group of 52, toplined by such cinematics as "Moulin Rouge," "African Queen," "Suddenly" and "Red River." National Telefilm Associates bought three post-'48's from Stanley Kramer, "High Noon," "Cyrano de Bergerac" and "The Men," and with the foldo of the Kaiser Aluminum top feature hour-and-a-half Sunday programmer on ABC-TV, on which they were initially slated, NTA is planning to use them on its film network comes the fall.

Allied Artists recently made a deal with Signet TV for distribution of seven features released theatrically during 1955. Package includes "Las Vegas Shakedown," "Port of Hell" and "The Tip-Off."

Each package was understood to involve a different deal, or an intent to make a deal, with the guilds which have contractual agreements with producers acknowledging residual rights in all pictures made after August, 1948 and marketed to television. Kramer, when he sold "High Noon," "Cyrano" and "Men" to NTA made a deal with the guilds, a deal, according toa NTA exec, by which "we as distributors of post-'48 features can live with."

The NTA exec felt that there would be similar Kramer deals with the guilds which will open up additional post-'48's for the tv market.

But the floodgates probably will remain closed until the majors reach an overall residual formula agreement. The biggest block to any such pact is said to be the majors' insistence that pictures released theatrically must show a profit, or at least return their costs, before residual payments from tv are shared in by the guilds. Majors argue that pix carried on their books at a loss, are poor pickings for profit-sharing when they're released on tv, a position hotly contested by the guilds.

United Artists, not a producing company but solely engaging in distribution, has not been forced to contend with the position of the majors, making various arrangments with the guilds as representative of the producers. Indie producers, as well as distributors to tv, also are free to make their separate deals with the guilds. Currently, Associated Artists Productions is talking with the talent guilds for a dozen post-'48 Warner Bros. pix. Guilds, it's reported, are asking for three times the coin they got from Matty Fox who paid them for a batch of post-'48 RKO pix he's selling to tv. Demands are higher because all the Warner pix are A pix, and Guild negotiations generally are based on budgets of the pix involved. Fox paid around $750,000, the directors and writers over $200,000 in the RKO deal.

Shades of Sat. Aft.

Hollywood, July 9.

KTTV is slotting Screen Gems package of 31 former theatrical serials Across-the-board as an afternoon strip hosted by Dick Whittinghill. Starting this week KTTV will show three chapters of different serials each afternoon, with succeeding chapters on following days, a la nickelodeon days. Pitch is for summer moppet trade, station admits.

Screen Gems package consists of serials made by parent Columbia Pictures, plus a number acquired in purchase of Hygo TV backlog six months ago. Among latter are quite a number of U-I serials.

Among stars and players of various serials in the package are Jackie Cooper, director Sidney Miller, Lon Chaney, photog Peter Gowland, producer Mike Frankovich (as a narrator), Donald Woods, Ruth Roman, Leo Carrillo, George Dolenz, Dick Foran, James Craig, Reed Hadley, Peter Cookson and Bela Lugosi.

Metro TV Eyeing Foreign Market For Pix Backlog

Metro TV now is surveying the foreign field for sale of its backlog of Metro pix, with Canada being the initial target.

Key to the Canadian market, from Metro TV's point of view, is a deal with Canadian Broadcasting Corp., an arrangement either covering CBC network exposure or CBC o&o stations. Talks on the possibility of such a deal have been held by Richard Harper, Metro TV sales manager. CBC, at this stage, is said to be in an uncertain state, with the government-owned and operated network reflecting the recent change in the Canadian elections. Budgets still are not firmed up, for one thing. Metro will not go into the Canadian market with its old pix unless it can make a deal with CBC, covering the o&o's in Toronto, Halifax, Montreal, Ottawa, Winnepeg and Vancouver, maintaining that only the above-mentioned markets could pay the prices sought by Metro. Present plans are not to dump the whole library of some 725 features in the market, but to assamble a package varying from 25 to 150 pix. Metro feels that as time goes along Canadian market will grow, bringing with it as time goes along upped prices and the ability to absorb more pix.

The same approach keys Metro's plans for other foreign market, with Metro waiting for a propitious time to step in with pix for tv when better prices can be obtained. Canada, though, represents the foreign area in which Metro feels it can get its feet wet first.

Hildegarde Hostess Of 'Int'l Show' Series

First venture of recently formed Telecast Pictures Corp. will be "The International Show," starring Hildegarde as hostess, narrator and performer in a tv film series, aimed to encompass comedy variety and drama formats.

Plans call for each show to have its own story lines and to be filmed in different cities throughout the world, utilizing native talent. Cities slated to be included are Paris, New York, Copenhagen, Madrid, Rome, Bangkok, Buenos Aires, and Tokyo.

Falstaff Stout On 'Trooper' Series

Falstaff Brewing has renewed second year sponsorship of MCA TV's "State Trooper" in more than 70 markets. Deal, set via Dancer, Fitzgerald and Sample, is for the full 52 weeks.

Shooting on the second series of 39, starring Rod Cameron and dealing with Nevada law enforcement cases, will begin this month. Location shooting will take place in Las Vegas, Boulder Dam, Reno, Lake Tahoe, Mojave Desert and other places.

Since its syndication debut last January, skein has enjoyed a good rating history, hitting the Top 10 in March and April American Research Bureau reports in upwards of 60 markets for March and April. In '56, Falstaff, the fourth-ranking brewer in the U. S., had it in the same 70 markets, now renewed.

VARIETY - ARB FEATURE FILM CHART

VARIETY's weekly chart, based on ratings furnished by American Research Bureau's latest reports, on feature films and their competition covers 120 cities. Each week, the 10 top-rated features in a particular city will be rotated.

Factors which would assist distributors, agencies, stations and advertisers in determining the effectiveness of a feature show in a specific market have been included in this VARIETY chart. Listed below is such pertinent information regarding features as their stars, release year, original production company and the present distributor, included wherever possible along with the title. Attention should be paid to such factors as the time and day, the high and low ratings for the measured feature period and share of audience, since these factors reflect the effectiveness of the feature, and audience composition, i.e. a late show at 11:15 p.m. would hardly have any children viewers, but its share of audience may reflect dominance in that time period. In the cities where stations sell their feature programming on a multi-stripped basis utilizing the same theatrical throughout the week, a total rating for the total number of showings for the week is given, the total rating not taking into account the duplicated homes factor. Barring unscheduled switches in titles, the listed features for the particularly rated theatrical filmed show are as accurate as could be ascertained from a multiplicity of station and other data.

Tele Follow-Up Comment

Mike Wallace Interview

Mike Wallace was a big issue in Steve Allen's life on Sunday (7). Wallace was ribbed on Allen's time and latter came over to Wallace to submit to a half-hour interview on ABC-TV. It was a setting that called for blood. The rivalry between Ed Sullivan and Allen is bitter as reflected in the ratings. Sullivan earlier had been quoted as calling Allen and his colleagues "cry babies and punks."

Unfortunately, the heat that was generated prior to the broadcast failed to ignite on the show. Allen seemed to walk away from every issue. He tried hard to be a "nice guy" and not hurt anybody. He laughed off the whole thing, as "something Ed said when he was angry." As far as ratings are concerned, Allen stated that the point pileup is largely determined by the calibre of the guests, which, actually, is not entirely true.

He spoke in generalities on the subject of awards which is about all that this subject deserves and toward the end of the show, tried to prove that he likes everybody from Pegler to Cantor. Allen had been quoted as saying sometime ago that Cantor was unfunny. It's not true, he declared, Cantor is a funny man. Jose.

Steve Allen Show

Although he had a lineup of names for his NBC-TV Sunday night (7) layout, Steve Allen carried the stanza with a virtual one-man show. Besides handling the emcee chores and part of the commercials, he played clarinet with Benny Goodman, performed in a half-dozen sketches, did some impressions and seemed to turn up with every act. As usual, Allen proved himself a slick performer who knows what to do with the right material. When the material isn't there, as in a lifeguard routine with Peter Lawford and a baby-naming bit with Yvonne De Carlo, his casual style of comedics salvages as much as possible of the situation.

One of the best things on the show was the parody of the Mike Wallace type of interview, particularly apt since Allen was due to guest on the Wallace program that same night. Allen played Wallace with two of regular crew of actors taking off on the eccentric subjects, including one funny bit with double-talker Al Kelly.

The "name" performers were not particularly standout. Benny Goodman with a rhythm quartet backing, blew his clarinet without any particular excitement and his closing rendition of "St. Louis Blues" didn't swing enough. The best part of the Goodman turn was his clarinet duo with Allen who played the Goodman role in the Universal biopic.

Miss De Carlo registered okay in her vocal of "The End of A Love Affair," but the impact mostly derived from the fact that she could sing at all. Lawford had little to do in his sketch with Allen which stretched a couple of jokes too far.

Irwin Corey, the nitery comic, came close to hitting big but his type of routine requires more time in which to develop. Corey went off with a neatly staged madcap race amidst the video cameras. Herm.

Alcoa Hour

A fine performance by Anne Bancroft, playing the comely wife of a Belgian resistence fighter in "Hostages of Fortune," made the past Sunday (6) night outing of the "Alcoa Hour" interesting viewing. More than the lines and plot outline, she conveyed the emotionality of a troubled woman in a terrible fix.

The play's locale was a small Belgian village occupied by the Germans during the last war. The Nazi commander, portrayed by Charles Korvin, and his staff stayed at the inn operated by Miss Bancroft. The plot turned on Miss Bancroft becoming pregnant when her husband, a resistence fighter kept in hiding at the inn, was supposedly dead. The Nazi major, upon learning of Miss Bancroft's pregnancy, claims the child as his own—out of spite in being rejected by the woman. This leads the entire village to turn against Miss Bancraft whose lips are sealed out of fear of exposing the resistence movement. Scenes of the Allies storming the European beachheads and Miss Bancroft expressing hope that things will be as they were before the occupation closed the drama, a bit irresolutely but effectively.

John Secondari penned the teleplay, depending too much upon contrivances to carry the play forward. Rip Torn, playing the husband and resistence fighter, was effective. Competent performances were turned in by Joe DeSantis, as the Belgian doctor, and Harold Vermilyea, as the grandfather. But the real standout who, unlike the others in the cast, studiously veered away from theatricality, was Miss Bancroft. Horo.

U.S. Steel Hour

If live tv is going to hold the fort against film, especially in the face of the demise of a number of one-hour networked dramas, it will have to offer better plays than that of "Side Show," telecast last Wednesday (3) evening on the "U.S. Steel Hour," via CBS-TV.

"Side Show," dealing with an unscrupulous woman and an unusual friendship between a wrestler and his partner, in a carnival setting, was hackneyed and for the most part unbelievable. Some of the situations were raw, without lending anything to the drama. And the lines scripted by Shelby Gordon in his original teleplay were cliche ridden.

The most moving part of the one hour was the relationship between Hercules, the wrestler, portrayed by Nehimah Persoff, and his young partner Reed Morgan. But the rest taxed one's credulity. Lisa Daniels, with an eye on Reed Morgan, spurred by an urge to lift herself from the backwash of life in a cornball town, joins the carny. She has a tempestuous affair with Reed and turns him against his wrestler partner—his adopted father. But her plot appears so obvious, apparent to everyone but to her beau, that all the episodes are telegraphed and of little interest.

Additionally, little advantage was taken of what would seem the colorful carny atmosphere. Horo.

Climax

Eddie Bracken carried off a startling tour de force with a complete character switch, which could easily open up a new can of career beans for this talented performer. Bracken abandons his familiar milquetoast characterization on last Thursday's "Climax" to play a Connecticut Yankee, complete with bucktoothed grin, steelrimmed glasses and a rube hairdo. That he can make this maniacal creature a person of chilling menace speaks well of his dramatic ability.

Outside of the impressive Bracken switch-casting, the John McGreevey adaptation of Marie Baumer's play, "False Witness" isn't too sturdy. However, smart, suspenseful direction by Paul Nickell helped things along, despite predictable plotting.

Story had Agnes Moorehead, grande dame head of a wealthy family, panic after accidental death of her drunken son-in-law, Dean Harens. Harens was abusing her daughter, Gloria Talbott, at their country lodge when Miss Moorehead slapped him across the chops, toppling him over a railing and down a cliff. She attempted to conceal the facts, but puts herself in Bracken's power. He's their handy man, who witnessed the incident, but threatens to tell the cops the death was deliberately planned. Eventually, Bracken has taken over the family life completely, shutting off phone service and firing the family cook.

However, good-guy brother of the dead man, John Baragrey, turns up and soon senses things aren't right. He captures Bracken in act of setting fire to the hunting lodge, in a murderous attempt to wipe out both Baragrey and any evidence of foul play.

Miss Moorehead trouped solidly as the mother, but couldn't conceal that the role didn't always make sense. Same applied to Miss Talbott, who otherwise came across attractively as the distraught daughter. Baragrey was properly stalwart and perceptive. Harents and Helen Mayon, the understandably puzzled cook, were okay. Kove.

Set Final Auditions On 'B'fast Club' Chirper

Chicago, July 9.

ABC's "Breakfast Club" is bringing back two of its on-the-air auditionees this month as finalists for the girl singer vacancy on the 24-year old radio show. Julie Vernon returns on July 15 for a week, and Jeril Deane on July 22. Mail reaction will affect the final choice.

Don McNeill, show's host, returns from vacation on Monday (15) in time for the final auditions.

(Benton & Bowles)

A little brightness crept into the summertime television picture over the weekend with the bow of the filmed version of Goodson-Todman's veteran package, "The Web," which will do summer duty for Procter & Gamble in place of the Loretta Young show. It's tough to tell about the future on the basis of a single stanza in an anthology series, but the preem "Web" film was a good solid notch above the ordinary whodunit. With a rash of the mystery shows already on the air and more due by fall, this auspicious beginnng should stand "The Web" in good stead in the sponsor sweepstakes.

While hardly a topnotcher—a little too much haziness in the script, some overplaying and too high a pitch in the direction from the start were the chief faults—this "Web" stanza came across with a maximum of interest and suspense, plus the ingredient that most tv whodunits lack — that keep-'em-guessing quality up to the final moment.

Norman A. Daniels script concerns an innocent looking young guy who confesses to killing an exgangster in self-defense. He's thrown into a panic when he's freed by the police because witnesses blow up his confession. Audience is kept guessing throughout as to whether the guy did or didn't commit the murder, whether the witnesses are real or phony, whether the young guy is going to get killed in revenge and a couple of other odds and ends. It's all cleared up in the end, of course, when it turns out the cops set up the phony witnesses to scare the guy into leaving town with the money he stole from the gangster whom he bumped strictly for robbery.

Dan Barton, as the heavy, overplayed too heavily at some points, but created a genuine portrait of a frightened man. If the genuineness of the portrayal was misleading to the viewer, that's all part of the whodunit game. Robert Burton as a canny cop was just right, and the supporting cast was fine. Tony Leader's direction was at the screaming level from the outset, and a somewhat slower start with a more gradual buildup would have been more effective. Charles H. Schneer's production credits were topnotch. Chan.

PANTOMIME QUIZ
With Dorothy Hart, Robert Clary Peter Donald, Gypsy Rose Lee, Arnold Stang, Betty Kean, Milt Kamen, Orson Bean; Mike Stokey, emcee; Terry O'Sullivan, announcer
Producer: Stokey
Director: Joe Dackow
30 Mins., Fri., 10:30 p.m.
TIME, AMOCO, HAMM BEER
CBS-TV, from N.Y.
(Y&R, Joseph Katz, Campbell-Mithun)

Mike Stokey's "Pantomime Quiz" has a special claim on summer television. "My Friend Irma," "Mama" and "Person to Person" has each been spelled for the hotspell by the half-hour program, with the Edward R. Murrow vis-a-vis sidestepping for Stokey a second time, behind the same sponsors. The show has something on the ball, yet it is not the quiz itself; the way Stokey's gang plays charades is a mite too stylized and rapid to appeal as entertainment, much less to approximate the game played by just plain folk in the living room. But what the stanza does have is abundant exuberance coming from the eight persons who make up the two teams. To watch a beaut like Dorothy Hart cut up, or Gypsy, Rose Lee, Betty Kean, Peter Donald, Orson Bean, Arnold Stang, Milt Kamen and Robert Clary was engaging video, most of the time, when the program returned last Friday (5) night.

One problem faced by the panelist, most of them at least, like first-timer Stang, was whipping into the phrenetic state needed to play this furious charade. His initial enthusiasm was about as real as a crepe paper tie, and he wasn't the only one. It held for Miss Lee and Miss Kean, Bean and Kamen, and it could very well have been that vets Clary and Donald and Hart looked at themselves initially as sideshow freaks, as well, though it didn't show. Before long, however, they all genuinely were caught up in and enthusiastic about beating the clock and the other side in completing the charades. Art.

VIC DAMONE SHOW
With Peggy King, Robert Strauss & Harvey Lembeck, Peter Lawford, Mata & Hari, Roger Williams, Bert Farber orch, Johnny Olsen, announcer
Producer: Lee Cooley
Director: Byron Paul
Writers: Laurence Marks, Arnold Horwitt
60 Mins.; Wed., 8 p.m.
KELLOGG CO., OLDSMOBILE
CBS-TV, from N. Y.
(Leo Burnett, D. P. Brother)

Summertime's been Vic Damone's "regular tv season" over the last few hot weather semesters. This trip, he's not officially a hiatus pinchhitter minding the store for the absentee owner. Arthur Godfrey has given up his "Friends" lease on the 8 to 9 slot after all these years and the period will be inherited in September by "The Big Record" starring Patti Page. Thus, Damone has been called upon to serve as an extended lead-in to the much touted "Record."

This variety excursion is about par for the summer course. The headman is a pleasant singer to whom, however, intros and patter do not come effortlessly. He can just about get by in the non-chirping departments. Apparently there will be much energy devoted to "production" trappings in spots where simplicity would be the better part of valor. Still, one swallow on the eve of the "Fourth" does not make a whole series, and the show may settle down to one of those innocuous offerings.

As per the preemer, the heavy reliance will be on guests of the stripe of Peggy King (ex-George Gobel), new comedy twain of Robert Strauss & Harvey Lembeck (latter of the Phil Silvers show), terpantomimist team of Mata & Hari, Hollywoodite Peter Lawford, etc. For the starter-offer the budget exceeded the results for the most part.

Strauss & Lembeck are of the Runyonish school of comedics. This sketch had 'em cavorting at an overpriced "Hilton" hotel for a tame affair lacking spirited material. Each is a good practitioner of the low comedy school, but how they emerge as a team will depend largely on their scripts.

Peggy King is attractive enough, and with poise and small charms, to cover any deficiencies in the tonsil dept. She lit out nicely on "Baby Won't You Please Come Home" and then was joined by Damone and chorus in "Trolley Song" (with prop trolley added) after self-cued patter. Mata & Hari, always reliable and inventive, took off on a silent picture caper highlighted by deft slow motion shenanigans.

The show's star was in and out with vocalistics, mostly standards, supported in spots by a dance group. Near the finish he did a medley of so-called "requests" that apparently will be permanently formatted. There was prime piano accomp here by Bert Farber, the show's batonist. This included the title song from "An Affair to Remember" (20th-Fox) with the singer in on it for Columbia Records which drew the characteristic plug. Damone carried on some corny tomfoolery with Peter Lawford, the latter "failing" to show after the first intro and later prancing onstage for an exchange of courtesies with the host.

Opening salvo after Damone's bow-in song had "The Story Princess," surrounded by juves, detailing the four steps in the physical life of the American flag—keved to the eve of Independence Dav—with "God Bless America" serving as finale to the segment. Roger Williams scored in a piano session with "Moonlight Love" (Clair de Lune), a briefie that registered.

Damone's show runs sustaining during the first half, with Kellogg Cereals and Oldsmobile in skip-week on the second half-hour. Trau.

NAT KING COLE SHOW
With Nelson Riddle Orch, Randy Van Horne Singers, Frankie Laine
Producer-director: Bob Henry
30 Mins., Tues., 10 p.m.
NBC-TV, from Hollywood

The only difference between Nat King Cole's previous 15-minute series and his current half-hour jaunt is that he has more time to fool around. And that's what was basically wrong with his opener last Tuesday (2).

The 30-minute span gave him time to fool around with guest Frankie Laine in pop tune parodies of how it would be if vocalists took over all tv programming. It was a weak bit that ran too long.

The show was its best when it stuck to the format established in Cole's quarter-hour Monday slot on the same net. The pattern was to put Cole up there and let him sing with a minimum of superfluous shenanigans For the most

MEET McGRAW
With Frank Lovejoy, others
Producer: Warren Lewis
Director: John Peyser
Writer: E. Jack Neuman
30 Mins., Tues., 9 p.m.
PROCTER & GAMBLE
NBC-TV (film)
(Benton & Bowles)

First of the new season's sleuths began his snooping last Tuesday (2) on NBC-TV, following, by a night, another dick on CBS-TV. There was next to no difference at all in the basic elements or consummation of "Richard Diamond," a CBS summer replacement, and the NBC entry, "Meet McGraw." Both are of that heavy breathing, long-suffering detective type, in which the hero knows all even though he pretends to be quite human—that means sometimes he's frightened.

It's formula stuff, and that both are cut from the same "mould" might be attributed to two events: Benton & Bowles, which seems to play its tv cards mostly along stock telefilm lines ("bread and butter," some folks call it), selected both programs. And the producers, while corporately separate, got their training in the same place, you would say. Four Star Films did "Diamond" and Don Sharpe, who was once a partner in Four Star, was partly responsible for "McGraw," in which Frank Lovejoy stars.

Tough McGraw, the viewer is expected to believe, has replaced the dog as man's best friend. In the manner of Thin Man, who's going to hit tv next season, incidentally, and the Norths, who hit tv several seasons past, McGraw is not a paid private eye; rather, he's more a snooper, who does it for kicks. Apparently, McGraw is carrying the burdens of all humanity on his shoulders, and that's why he bucks the cops all the time and also why he finds it so hard talking. One-punch (all wrist action that boy) McGraw winds up a murderer, and then mysteriously walks off into the future.

Talent of director John Peyser, whose early shots were stark yet unpretentious, that of actors like Lovejoy and James Edwards, as a philosophical barkeep in New Orleans, were wasted by the E. Jack Neuman story. But Neuman was no more at fault probably than the masterminds interested in riding to a mass audience on the crest of a ripple. Art.

HIGH-LOW
With Jack Barry, host; Burl Ives, Patricia Medina, John Van Doren, panelists
Producer: Al Freedman
Director: Charles S. Dubin
30 Mins., Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
FORD
NBC-TV, from New York
(J. Walter Thompson)

"High Low" is an adaptation of the poker variation in which quiz contestant competing against a panel has his choice of bucking the panelist with the highest number or the one with lowest number of answers to a given multiple-answer question. If he chooses high, he can triple his money; low, he can double it. If he can't match the number of correct answers, he loses all of his earnings.

Show, which NBC has been trying to sell for next fall without success but which it has landed as a summer entry for Ford in place of Tennessee Ernie, has some intriguing possibilities. A good deal of shakedown is needed, since it moves somewhat slowly and unevenly. But the premise seems sound.

One problem is the overambitiousness of both contestants and panelists. Asked a simple question, they tend to dress up the answers, giving a fullscale rundown of a literary plot when only one word is needed. This is one of the slower-uppers that needs to be curbed. As another element, quizmaster Jack Barry fills between contestants with some conversational bits with the panel (one, with Burl Ives doing a bit of dittying, was rewarding), but these too are uneven because of the timing. Barry and producer Al Freedman might suggest to the panel that they hold their answers to a minimum and expand on them during the conversation periods.

Barry, doubling over from "Twenty - One" with producer Freedman (show's also a Barry & Enright package for NBC), is at home with the format and keeps a firm and pleasant hand on the proceedings. Panelists are bright and affable — Ives is pleasant and knowledgable, Patricia Medina is the eager but charming and John Van Doren is a chip off brother Charlie's block.

As the show shakes down and some of the kinks work out, and also as the money starts to mount, "High-Low" should emerge as one of the more rewarding summer entries and ought to be able to awaken some last-minute sponsor interest for the fall. Chan.

Preview Of a Deal To Be Made Next Month

By CARROLL CARROLL

The Producer walked into his office at 11 a.m. His secretary had everything ready. Steaming hot coffee, black, was in his cup with two saccharin tablets on the side. She handed him his morning miltown and a glass of water. He took the pill. Just the feel of it sliding down his throat soothed the jangle he always had after every visit to his analyst. He sat down, dropped the saccharin into the coffee and glanced at his mail. There was nothing but that bill from his Internist. He'd put off paying this for eight months. He hated to pay doctors who couldn't find anything wrong with him.

"Any other mail?" he asked.

"Just some statements from stores and a letter from your mother. I threw them away."

"Put this with them." He handed her the doctor bill. "I ought to get a business manager," he said.

His secretary agreed. "You're too big a man to waste your time throwing away your own bills."

"Say," he said, as if suddenly struck by the idea he'd been mulling over on the way to work, "Have we still got that script from that writer? That script with the idea for that series? Have we still got it?"

"You told me to send it back three weeks ago," his secretary said.

"Well, get it for me! Don't just stand there!"

She went to the file and after about 15 minutes of rummaging around, found the script. "Is this the one you mean?" she asked, "The one about the guy who works for the electric light company and the idea of the series is that you follow him around and do a series of stories about the adventures he has reading meters and things like that?"

"That's it. The writer writes pretty good, doesn't he?"

"Do you think so?" the girl asked.

"Don't you?"

"Well, I thought you said you did."

"If I did, I did! What do you think?"

"I agree with you!"

"Well, then don't just stand there. Get that writer on the phone and tell him I want to see him. The guy writes well. But who wants to buy a series about an electric light company service man?"

"Wouldn't it be kind of impressive to have on the title, 'From the Secret Files of The California Edison Co.'?"

"Are you going to tell me what to produce? Get this! No secretary is indispensable, even if you have been with me almost two months! You could be replaced! So please don't tell me what to do and what you think. I'll do the thinking! You just do what I tell you."

"Yes, sir," the girl said. She had an old mother to support.

The producer glanced through the script. "Now I remember what it was about this that I didn't like. The name Edison makes people think of Edison. And, when they think of Edison they think of deafness. Edison was deaf, wasn't he?"

"Yeah," said the girl. "He got deaf when he was Mickey Rooney and he got deafer when he grew up to be Spencer Tracy."

"That's what I thought. Imagine what the Motivational Research Boys are going to say about that! They'll say the word Edison suggests deafness and who wants a series on tv that would suggest deafness to people because that might appeal to them as way of escape. And, if they escaped, who'll watch the series? So, the whole idea stinks! See what I mean?"

The girl scratched her head with her ball-point pen and clogged up her piggy-back re-fill.

'Make It an Eastern'

"Couldn't you get that writer to switch it to an adult Western about the adventures of a traveling blacksmith who goes from one Pony Express Station to another half-soling horse-shoes, or whatever it was a blacksmith did, and sort of falling in love with all the Pony Express riders' sisters and sweethearts and things like that?"

"It's been done," said the producer. "But, we might make it an Eastern! Say, there's an idea! One guy, the bad guy, comes out of the old Lindy's and the other guy, the good guy, comes out of the other Lindy's and they slowly walk toward each other in the middle of Broadway, both loaded with cheese-cake . . . no I think that's been done, too! Did you call that writer to come in?"

"Oh yeah. When I was out looking for his script."

"How soon'll he be here?"

"Well, he was on the operating table when I called. He was having his appendix taken out. But his wife said he'd get dressed and come right over."

"How about that! These writers make more dough! Having his appendix taken out! Here I am a producer for five years and I still have mine."

"I should think he'd be afraid to take a chance having them out. How does he know he can write as good without them?"

"All writers are crazy! Faddists! And when you tell them what they do is silly, what do they answer I'll tell you what! They say a writer has to have all kinds of experiences. What experiences do they need? We producers tell them what to write and they write it. Believe me, if I could write, I'd never talk to a writer."

"I kind of liked the idea he had for the title of his series even if you don't think the idea is good."

The producer looked at the girl in stunned amazement and then looked at the title page of the manuscript that outlined the idea for the series and included the first three scripts. In capital letters it said "SHOCKING—THE STORY OF A CAL ED MAN." What's that coughing in the outer office?" he asked.

The girl peaked through the door. "It's that writer."

"Tell him I'm in a meeting. Tell him I'm sorry I disturbed him. But tell him I'm very anxious to see him. Tell him to go back and get sewed up and be back here tomorrow at this same time."

At exactly the same time the next day, the writer showed up. Exactly 90 minutes later, he was in the producer's office. The first thing the producer said to him was, "I don't know how you writers ever expect to get along in the world of business. Never on time. You've got to learn to live in this world. You just can't be a bohemian and expect to get work in a 100% American medium like tv."

"Well, I figured you're interested in my series about the Cal Ed man and I just had this operation and so . . . well, here I am. The only reason I'm late is that your girl out there wouldn't talk to me for 90 minutes. Finally she had to. She got stuck on a word in a crossword puzzle and figured I knew the word. I did. It was Punctuality."

"That's one of the things I want to talk to you about, son. No one's going to understand what you're writing about if you use those big words. They're all right for crossword puzzles, but not for tv scripts. Now about this series. . . ."

"You mean you're really going to produce "Shocking?"

"Didn't you read my letter when I sent it back to you? I can't do anything like that, son. You write well, but you're not realistic. And that's why I sent for you. I think you need the money . . . I mean, I like the way you write . . . and I've got a series all laid out, . . . that's right down your alley."

"Thanks," said the writer, "But I sort of hoped to get my own series on the air. You know, have a little property of my own going for me. And that's why I sent "Shocking" to you. I mean with your production know-how you could turn it into really something! I mean that first script is just what you do best . . . the one about the electric service man who comes to the house where the young wife is going frantic because her husband is bringing the boss home to dinner and the electric stove doesn't work and the refrigerator has conked out and she doesn't know what to do because her husband will lose his job if it isn't a great dinner because he's told the boss what a wonderful cook his wife is although she doesn't know how to cook at all . . . I mean, isn't that right down everybodys' alley?"

"Believe me, kid," the producer said, "It's nothing! Now would you like to hear the Idea I have that I'd like to have you write?"

Sewer Stuff

"We'll talk money later. That's unimportant. The thing to do is to get the idea right. Now here's the idea. It's called 'DIRT—THE STORY OF A DEPARTMENT OF SANITATION MAN.' Great, huh? And then under that we add . . . From the Secret Files of the Department of Sanitation'."

The writer was about to say, "It stinks." But he rubbed his appendix scar and said, "How did you see it developed, sir?"

"Oh, now wait a minute, kid! That's the writer's job. I gave you a great series idea. All you have to do is write it. My God! Does the producer have to do everything?"

"But the Department of Sanitation deals with sewers, sir. What can you get out of a sewer?"

"I'll tell you," said the producer, rising to pace his office. "I'll tell you in one word!"

The writer looked around to see if the secretary was still in the room because it always embarrassed him to hear that word spoken in front of a girl.

"The one word is what Jackie Gleason got out of a sewer. The one word is Art Carney! Now do you see what I mean? Now do you see why I'm a producer and you're just a writer? You need to tie things to a star. And if I have to do all the work myself and share the profits with you writers, I'll do that, too, because I believe in the television business! Now get this for an idea for the first script of the series . . . get this and think of Art Carney all the time. He's the Department of Sanitation man and he traces a clogged sewer right up to this apartment where there's this young wife who is going frantic because her husband is bringing his boss home to dinner and the sink is clogged up so she can't wash yesterday's dishes so they have nothing to eat on and she doesn't know what to do because her husband will lose his job if it isn't a great dinner because he's told his boss what a wonderful cook his wife is although she doesn't know how to cook at all . . . well jeez . . . what more is there to do? Write it."

The writer felt his scar again and said, "And we'll go 50-50 on the package?"

"50-50! Are you crazy! Write it! It's all my idea! If you do a half-way decent job, I'll pay you scale, maybe a couple of dollars over. If not, well, I'll just have to get some guy who can do the job. The trouble with you writers is all you know about is writing. It's us producers who have to do all the thinking and take all the risks. Sometimes I wish I'd become a writer. That's the life. You walk into an office like this, a guy like me hands you a solid gold idea on a silver platter and just for a little writing you make yourself two or three hundred dollars. Is it a deal?"

The writer thought about his wife, a tall athletic girl who'd jumped center for four years for Swarthmore and was now well on her way to presenting him with their fifth child. He thought of himself, "Either I'll have to take this job or Janice is going to have to turn pro and join the World's Only Pregnant Girl's Basketball Team and pick up a little bribe money."

"Well," said the producer, "What's the answer. You could have been half finished the script by now."

"I am," said the writer. "I mean I am going to take your deal!"

They shook hands and the writer walked out of the office drying his hand on the side of his trousers.

A Viewer Revolts

Oh, I am one of the millions
Just a patient, average slob,
Who suffers the silly commercials
Along with the rest of the mob.

I seldom talk back to the sponsors
When they hawk their boring wares;
And I've even learned to ignore 'em
With a "who the hell really cares."

But there's one snide, weasel gesture
That's damn near got me sunk—
It's that hypocritical fol-de-rol
Against seeing beer be drunk!

A Look Into 2007 A.D.

By HAL KANTER

Hollywood.

Fifty years from now, the entire population of America will be employed in the advertising business.

This blanket statement was not coined by an economist, advertising executive or business analyst. I just make it up myself.

Journals reflecting the shape of American life today and outlining the shape of the future indicate the increasing encroachment of automation in our lives and the resultant growth of leisure time at our disposal.

With leisure comes the great movement toward recreational activities. With those activities come the needs for facilities, equipment and transportation. With the needs comes the scramble for the consumers' dollar. With the scramble come the methods of dollar procurement. The methods invariably mean advertising in one form or another.

Existing advertising agencies will grow to the size of General Motors and new ones will blossom on the land like the buffalo herds of old. Manpower will be siphoned from other industries, seduced by the charcoal sirens of Madison Avenue as they seek more and more men to fill the cavities in their labor pools.

America will stop manufacturing hard goods, stop growing food, stop weaving and spinning and fermenting and building and brewing and canning and moulding and producing. America will import everything from the rest of the world.

The man who today sows wheat will be writing copy 50 years from now. If he has no talent for writing copy, he will be a time-buyer. If he has no gift for wheedling choice time segments, he will be a layout man. If he can't do that—if he can't do anything but sow wheat—he'll be one of a vast army of guinea pigs employed by the ad-men for motivational research. He will be wired, dipped in chemicals, dressed in litmus paper jockey shorts and tested four hours a day.

Nobody will be working more than four hours a day. Three days a week. And there will be millions of employees late to work anyway.

The result of all this will see at least five major networks functioning 24 hours a day. That means five shows a day: the rest of the time will be filled with spot announcements, dramatized commercials and various other forms of advertising. (Already, today, a large agency is working on a two-hour show to introduce a new product. The show will be "a two hour commercial so subtle the audience won't realize we're selling," to quote a vice president in charge of mass deceit.)

The street car, rapidly disappearing from the American scene, will make a comeback in outrageous numbers. It will be brought back by the need for areas in which to display car cards. Failing this (and it might fail if the Germans are too busy making atomic razors to turn out street cars for us), private citizens will find their own automobiles equipped with card racks. Minions of the advertising agencies will change the cards every week.

All services in America, 2007 A.D. will be free: laundry, cleaning, gardening, cooking, everything. People who perform the services will be employed by the ad-men. Forerunners are in evidence today: my shirts are wrapped in a laundry envelope which unashamedly advertises a local insurance agency. The stiff cardboard backing lists the telephone numbers of local termite exterminators, garages and pharmacists, among others.

All the foregoing prophecies are the result of an idle afternoon's conversation with my newsboy (a Foote, Cone man of Tomorrow). If you doubt the probability of the possibilities, stick around and see.

'So Let's Play Gin Rummy'

By HARRY BANNISTER

(NBC V.P. in Charge of Station Relations)

After 10 minutes chit-chat about nothing in particular, the station character tries gallantly to unload on me both his phobias and his ulcers. He casually mentions that he'd like to cut away from the Perry Como Show for a spate of triple-spotting.

As I fall backward in an unsimulated swoon, my left leg trips the lever which releases the spray of smelling salts which revives me. (It took months for the brilliant engineers to make this gimmick work.)

Gulping a few times I inquire weakly, "What was that you said?" And he answers blithely, "You know, the Perry Como Show. I need a minute and 15 seconds for three spots I just sold and that seems like the right place for it."

"That's what I thought you said," and over I go again, to be revived once more by the blessed spray.

The telephone rings and it's long distance from a translator operator in Moose Meadows complaining bitterly about a newly affiliated station 195 miles away which will cut in on his racket.

This is a switch but it switches even more when the conversation reminds my station character that research just took 117 homes away from him in Choochoo County where he throws a .01 microvolt signal.

He smiles brightly and says, "Tell you what I'll do. I'll make a deal with you. Gimme that extra break in Perry Como and I'll forget all about Choochoo County."

My arithmetic ain't so good but this equation somehow seems inequitable.

Once more the phone, and it's a big wheel in the Government who complains because at his summer cabin in the Santa Rosa Mountains he can't get any picture on his tv set. He admits that there's no electricity on the premises, but still thinks NBC should be able to do something. I promise to investigate the possibility of shooting a signal with guided missiles.

The phone again and it's my old pal from Station WOOPS in Crunchy Chasm who says he'll carry the News if he can recover 8 o'clock Sunday night. I swoon again and my left leg trips the lever which releases the spray of smelling salts which revives me.

The connection gets broken so my caller gets no new ideas from this conversation. Instead he says, "Well, that completes my business—let's play Gin."

By this time I'm exhaling the perfumes of smelling salts and after a few deals, he leaves, $15 poorer.

I shut the door, douse the lights and nap for 20 minutes. Thinking always makes me sleepy.

Portents for the New TV Season

'Fear Complex' of Agencies, Sponsors, and Desire to 'Play It Safe' Seen As Major Factor in Hindering Program Initiative; Continued Mediocrity May Swing Sentiment Toward Pay-TV

By GEORGE ROSEN

Is television running scared?

If, as so many in increasing numbers believe, tv as an entertainment medium is going into the new season at a new high in mediocrity, the inevitable conclusion is that the advertiser and the agency are determined to "play it safe." Better, they say, to invest in the cliche than the controversial. "Don't pose any problems for us, we've got enough as they are" would appear to be the underlying keynote in formulating the '57-'58 program schedules.

There can be no question that television in the past has greeted new seasons with more sparkle, more ingenuity and certainly more initiative. How come then, many are asking, this fear, this frantic desire to "play it safe," which seems to have gripped an industry hell-bent to eschew any excursions into new realms or to help rekindle the kind of enthusiasm and excitement that abounded in the medium only a few short seasons back?

Just Like Ike

There are those who are inclined to view it as part-and-parcel of the "national temper" originating within the White House precincts itself; a sort of Madison Ave. reaffirmation of the Eisenhower credo not to tamper with anything that might possibly border on the controversial. What is happening in the area of entertainment programming—the devotion to the western, the family-type show, the variety stanza and other escapist forms to the almost total exclusion of anything remotely resembling "think" formats, is viewed as merely an extension of the Presidential frown on the kind of initiative that prompted CBS to deliver the neatest trick of the tv decade through its own inventiveness and enterprise in setting up the full-hour interview with Soviet boss Nikita Khrushchev. If there are those who, whether justifiably or not, maintain that CBS was on the side of error in its failure to recognize in advance the overwhelming repercussions from such an interview and committed the sin of not offering an immediately-after rebuttal to the Red chief's manifestos, the fact remains that CBS, in one fell swoop, showed the U. S. and the world at large the immense potential of television as a mighty force in creating better understanding among the peoples of the world.

Perhaps most symptomatic of the current Madison Ave. anxieties and the "don't burden us with troubles" attitude that's becoming more and more prevalent is the experience encountered in recent weeks by CBS Films, which has just put on the market three new series. These are the Merle Oberon half-hour skein based on the Foreign Legion (specifically dramatizing the motives behind the men joining the service); the "Gray Ghost" series recounting the experiences of Major John Mosley in the war between the states (actually it comes off as a western-type show with a Civil War background), and a series on "Colonel Flack," which once enjoyed a showcasing on DuMont.

It's CBS' unalterable conviction, for whatever it's worth, that the three shows individually and collectively represent a departure from the cliche-ridden staple, that each has been vested with singularly offbeat formats enhanced by qualitative production not generally associated with vidpix entries. Yet to CBS' consternation and bewilderment, the responses from the grey flannel suiters along Madison Ave. can be summed up thusly:

1.) "Col. Flack in his own blustering way may be good natured and even lovable; but he's a sycophant who lives off others. This is not the American way of life. It wouldn't jell without sponsor's message."

2.) "We don't question that you have a fast-moving, entertaining adventure series on the Foreign Legion. But that's too close to Algeria for comfort. We don't want to get embroiled in that kind of situation."

3.) "We'll grant you that the 'Grey Ghost' is a superior western. But what do you want us to do? Start the Civil War all over again? It can only get us in trouble." That's what the man said.

P.S.: All three shows are still on the "availability" list.

Conservatives Take Over

And so television goes into '57-'58 with as tried-and-true a schedule as even the staunchest conservative could possibly hope for. There can be little doubt but that much of what has been happening has been motivated by a fear complex, notably within the agency precincts. Which perhaps accounts for the reason why so few agency people are reluctant to make decisions on any program buy, with result that the client himself—on the very highest level—renders the ultimate verdict. It's this passing-the-buck, unfortunately, that's perpetuating a brand of hucksterism that could bode ill for the medium's future.

In answer to the criticisms of mediocrity in abundance, there is, of course, some validity to the arguments of the defenders of the tv realm who protest that such categorical lambasting of the medium is hardly justified. In the words of one top network executive: "Let's look at the situation realistically. Only a moron today looks at television hour upon hour, indiscriminately, regardless of content, and expects everything to be good. People have become selective in their viewing. And if they can sal-

SNOW IN SINGAPORE*

By MORT GREEN AND GEORGE FOSTER

(Author's Note: The story behind the story of the success of the current Perry Como tv show every Saturday night is the story of two of its writers, Mort Green and George Foster, whose tremendous and insignificant contrbution to the popularity of the Como show is not generally known. This, then, is the story of those two lovable and well-dressed writers, Mort Green and George Foster, who, although they are semi-geniuses and close personal friends of the authors, would want only the truth to be told. What follows is the truth with a smidgeon of poetic license.)

Mort Green and George Foster, unlike most comedy writers, were born Siamese twins. However, and this is a scientific oddity, they were the only Siamese twins born completely separated from each other. They also had the rare distinction of being born by different sets of parents and at different times. Mort Green is the older by almost a year and a half, which is a record for time between the birth of any twins, Siamese or American. George Foster, by a strange circumstance is exactly almost a year and a half younger than Mort Green. He is so much younger than Green, his name is even different.

As a matter of fact, very little is known about their early days, since their past is shrouded in mystery. What has been ascertained, however, is that opponents of the government decided to spirit away one of the twins. Since they were born so far apart, a snafu developed, and each twin was kidnapped and spirited away, leaving France without a king.

Well, sir, by a strange coincidence both George and Mort turned up in America. Mort wandered about the streets of Nutley (N. J.) until he was three years old. Then, tired of a life without purpose, he joined the Lafayette Escadrille where he and George hit it off real well, even though they did not know that they were related by birth.

After touring for several years with the Lafayette Escadrille under several nom-de-pieds, they plunged into a succession of madcap escapades. During the 20's the adventures they had reads like something out of F. Scott Fitzpatrick.

For awhile George was the Neil Hamilton of the 20's. He became a white-collar model. Mort learned a four-letter word* and played the kazoo with Beiderbecke's Original Dixieland Band. Mort to this day modestly discounts his prowess with the kazoo because of his big lips.

Why the Boys Eat at Lindy's

In 1927, George, on a silly dare, flew the Atlantic Ocean. Actually, he was loaded on bathtub gin, especially tubbed for him in St. Louis. This accounted for the name of his plane, "The Spirit of St. Louis." And it is a matter of some bitterness to the boys that nowhere in the history books does it mention that George Foster was the first man to fly non-stop, New York to Paris, without a plane.**

In the early Thirties, Mort was almost elected President of the United States. Unfortunately, his name was not proposed at either the Republican or Democratic conventions.

Then, a few uneventful years. George swam back from Scotland, and became, in succession, head of the NRA, Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and, in 1939, led the National League in batting with an average of .395.

During this time Mort held such varied jobs as: Acting Emperor of India, 1935; Chief Sea-Scout, 1936-1938; Traffic Manager of a drive-in, split-level Temple in downtown Tel-Aviv, the Congregation B'nai Cadillac; and in 1939 was made an honorary C.P.A.

In the early Forties, George Foster successfully fought off a whole army—The American Army. Mort was then serving a term at Alcatraz for failing to destroy the tax stamp on a pack of cigarets.

Both boys were married in 1941, luckily not to each other. George, for the woman of his choice, selected the daughter of a Halvah king, and life since then has been one long Joyva. Mort married the daughter of the architect for Fort Knox, and insisted that the dowry consist

 The true story is this. The plane, piloted by Mort, flew alongside George in case he should falter, as in the case of Channel swimmers. As they neared Europe, George, loaded with Scotch, unthinkingly took a left turn and landed in Scotland, where they only believed one fifth of his story. Mort, a sneaky sort at best, continued on in the p' ne, landed at Le Bourget, impersonated Charles Lindbergh and became internationally famous.

Television Breaks Through 'Public Service' Barrier

By MERLE S. JONES
(President, CBS Television)

For a full hour on Sunday afternoon, June 2, a substantial portion of the American people had their first opportunity to see Nikita Khrushchev, leader of the Communist Party—to hear the tone and inflections of his voice, and to observe his mannerisms and reactions under the close questioning of CBS News correspondents on the CBS Television program, "Face The Nation."

As a result of this experience, I think it can be categorically stated that millions of Americans gained their clearest impression to date of the nature and personality of one of the major world figures of our time.

Apart from its intrinsic value and excitement, this event seems to me to point up a growing and important trend in television—namely, the increasing popularity of the so-called "public service" program. More and more of these programs are charting new and exciting paths in broadcasting and are leaving unforgettable impressions on the viewing public. The Kefauver and the Army-McCarthy hearings are two historic examples.

In recent years, however, there has been a marked change in both the concept and techniques of public service programming. By definition, useful information is a basic ingredient of this type of programming. If it can be entertaining at the same time, so much the better; but in actual practice this has been the exception rather than the rule.

Today, however, the element of public service might well be attributed to such interesting and informative programs as "Air Power," the 26-week series depicting the history and development of aviation; or "You Are There," the Peabody Award winning program dramatizing the memorable events of history; or "The Last Word," which examines seriously (but with humor) the origins and usage of the English language. Moreover, it could surely be argued that the various "See It Now" programs dealing with Suez, desegregation, Puerto Rico, and automation were as interesting to the public as they were in the "public interest."

'Public Interest' Base Broadens

The fact is that the public's interest has substantially broadened year by year. Thus the "public interest" may no longer be confined within the fixed boundaries of typical news, forum and discussion programs. Who is to say that when "Camera Three" presented the distinguished American poet, E. E. Cummings, or when Ed Murrow interviewed Admiral and Mrs. Nimitz on "Person to Person" the public interest was not substantially enhanced?

There is, I believe, a close correlation between the increasing complexity of the times we live in and the increasing demand for information. The more complicated life becomes, the more we want to know about it, and the more we turn for this knowledge to those who are accepted authorities in their respective fields of endeavor. The chief impetus behind the increasing popularity of the so-called "public service" program in recent years has been the public's growing thirst for information of all kinds—political, social, economic, scientific and cultural.

A secondary but equally vital factor is the inherent nature and power of television as a medium of communication. In the brief span of a single decade, television has drastically altered the process of transmitting and absorbing information. It has made this process easier and more palatable than ever before. And it has done this by giving it human dimension.

Clearly more people are interested in seeing an American President or a leader of the Soviet Union on television than in reading about them. More people are inclined to watch on television the construction of an earth satellite than to learn about it through a newspaper or magazine article. And I think it also may be said that more people will come away from these television experiences with a deeper sense of understanding and appreciation.

Through its ability to present the nature of reality and personality in their varied aspects and manifestations, television has gone far toward eliminating the line between information and entertainment—between the so-called "public service" program and the "entertainment" program. It has broken the "public service" barrier. Actually, there is nothing more "entertaining" to people than other people—nothing more absorbing than being able to see places and things they have never seen before.

This point of view has always deeply influenced the programming activities at CBS Television. Indeed, I like to think it has been responsible for much of our programming achievement and reputation.

This fall, we plan to make further strides in this direction with the presentation of a number of major program series, in which we hope to combine the best elements of public service and entertainment. I have in mind such programs as "The Seven Lively Arts" and "Twentieth Century."

These new programs, we believe, will reflect and be responsive to the ever-broadening base of the public's interest. For in the last analysis, television's permanent challenge is to match year by year the constantly maturing taste and interest of the American people.

'Program Service' —An Interim Report

By SYLVESTER L. WEAVER JR.

On April 10 of this year, I made a speech in Seattle, I talked about some of the things that I felt would be good for television in general and for the people in television—the advertisers (they pay for the service), the stations (they transmit the service), the program interests (they make the service), and the public (they receive the service or turn it off).

A new network, called "Program Service," came of that talk. And this is an interim report, some 10 weeks later.

The broad strokes, for the readers who gnaw through the first few paragraphs and skip to the punchline, are these: we have signed a few but made arrangements with almost all the great independent stations in the great bellwether markets of the U. S., namely, New York, Philadelphia, Washington, Hartford-New Haven, Detroit, Indianapolis, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis-St. Paul, St. Louis, Dallas-Ft. Worth, Denver, Los Angeles, Seattle, Miami. In addition, we have time cleared under arrangements in Baltimore, Cleveland and Cincinnati. We expect independents to cover Boston, Buffalo and San Francisco next year. The extent of this coverage is remarkable. Two thirds of all the homes in the country are in the coverage areas of the above cities.

TV's 'Supermarket'

Thus, the size of the market we offer is huge. But more than the number of homes is the importance of this "Supermarket" in our country. Once the first national coverage job is done for most brands and companies, whether in magazines or in network tv operation, then the next intelligent spending of national advertising funds will flow to us in coming years. Why? Because, our markets are where the brands will live or die, where they must fight out the battle of share of market and the real tough selling. Our markets will usually mean, even on our shorter live lineups, upwards of 50% of all sales in a given category. But far more importantly, we will deliver every dollar to fight for the sale. For we first of all will only use the major markets, and we secondly will charge for those markets the real market value of the station's time, not an inflated network must-buy price. Result: every dollar works at full efficiency, in the right place and only the right place, and at the right price and only the right price. Compare this with the spending of additional national budget dollars in buying additional network shows. Most of your time money will be working to give you more coverage in smaller markets which you don't want, and to buy the same markets at higher must-buy network affiliate rates than you need to pay. We've got it made.

Participation Sales

When the power of our offering sinks in and all our data is processed by the evaluation groups in advertising, then we will begin to deliver a largish schedule of programs of many different kinds, night and day, to our affiliates. We will build some of these shows, and sell them both individually, and on a participation basis, because we again want to make our advertising dollars work at their most efficient, and frequently, the most efficient dollar is the dollar that buys a one-minute advertisement, and no more . . . in that show. The compulsion of the 15-minute buy is a radio hangover. Where it makes sense, we too will use it, but where it is more efficient to sell a barrage of one-minutes in show after show, or give new small advertisers a chance to use our great medium through the one-minute spot form, we will have it for sale.

Our shows will attract the big audiences, and beam out at the special interest audiences. On our drawing boards we have several hours of daytime shows, ranging from the big circulation-personal selling of a "Ding Dong School," to broadcasting's first interviewer, Mary Margaret McBride, where the buyer is aiming not at the lowest cost per thousand, although that's awfully low, but the lowest cost per convinced new customer of probably any show on the horizon. We will be announcing new daytime attractions from time to time, and they will go on the air, as they are sold, or largely sold. Program Service is a commercial network, and proud of it.

Our nighttime shows have not yet really begun to be uncovered. We have announced only our "Saturday Night Party," but more are on the way. "Party," 10:30-12 p.m. Saturday night, is a producer's dream, in its locale. Even Cecil B. DeMille might have hung back from building the Aragon Ballroom, with its floating white clouds, its Moorish turrets, and double stages, one behind the other, at the end of the huge studio . . . er, ballroom.

The coverage of this huge Saturday night offering and the showmanly plans to get conversation, exploitation, as well as big name bands, recording names, and the man Harper's magazine calls this month, "America's leading disk jockey," Howard Miller, together with the man-in-the-box commentator, the mobile recording room, and other gimmicks all point to this as quite a program.

'Comedy Theatre'

Other shows below the waterline of our iceberg which has been so little revealed are numerous, but not too to mention. For instance, next year, or maybe even before, we would like to see a couple of daring advertisers go with us for a Top 10 Trendex position on a show on our Independent stations on Sunday night at 9, where we have a highly styled and highly individual piece of theatre ready for unveiling called "Comedy Theater," and offering some great names but in some new forms. Information on request.

On the same night, a public service program schedule is being worked out, although I have given my earlier plan for a program called "Controversy" the heave-ho since too many people have appeared as the originators of it, and I am busy enough as a network with four men without litigation or even explanaton.

On other nights, we have several biggish shows getting readied including two major dramatic entries that would make any network pant to entrap them, both destined for Top Tendom, and several personality ventures that should knock the spurs off their probable competition, not only because they will offer the magic of people communicating to people out of the box, just as most successes have for 30 years previously in this broadcast medium, but also because there are new forms that one can try if one doesn't have to stride along with the cement shoes of the network must-buy money commitment—must-buy program policies, must-buy network rates way over national spot rates in top markets, must-buy lineups way beyond the major battleground for sales, must-buy below-the-line policies that push prices skyward. We will do and dare, and naturally flop as well as hit. But the result will be, as always, that those who try get the hits, and the hits build the audience, and the audience builds the business and the rates and the leadership position and all the rest of the chain reaction.

Looks to Wider Horizons

This is a program business, and to the program interests, particularly the independent program companies, the artists and their managements, the writers and producers, the creative interests of all kinds, the tremendous flow of money from the advertisers to a new enterprise that keeps time costs low and encourages all kinds of program experimentation and development will mean not just that another 33% of the available time slots for programs have opened up, but that these particular time slots have a wider horizon, and a more exciting premise than the "let's play-it-safe, let's carbon copy ourselves into a nice safe 'rating" fellows.

This means we want and will have the hits, and many of them will be meat-and-potatoes, as they say in some of the networks. But in our network, Program Service, we know hash when we see it coming near. Or, I should say, we usually do. After all, it is show business, and now and then, an omelet can find wings and fly to the top. So, be of good cheer, word workers and those who posture and grimace on the boards. Soon we'll all be trying things again on Program Service.

And even more exhilarating is the future for those who make it all possible for everyone, the sponsors. For, now, we give them once again major program operations with personality, and uniform selling, and find-a-hit values, but with a minimum commitment figure that makes sense, way under half that of any network buy at any discount, with very low cost per thousand, with every dollar fighting for a sale.

To shrewd, canny buyers, we offer this caveat. When a product has either an underpinning national magazine campaign, or a network television operation, night or day, then the next money spent in selling that product should be spent in Program Service, aimed at two thirds of all sets, with the low end figures for the expenditures, the low cost per thousand, the ability to buy minutes including personal selling, and overall, the firm knowledge that your dollars are carrying their maximum charge by being spent at the right prices in the right places.

—And Bring Money

By BEN PARK & TED MILLS

Television producers who devise and create their own shows have something in common with good bush pilots and eyeless creatures of the ocean deep. They all must rely on their own highly specialized instincts. Right now, our producer's instincts are telling us that the television medium does a more satisfying job for itself, the advertisers, and the public when we producers are having more fun. To equate fun with success may sound frivolous until you realize that fun to a producer is originality, inventiveness, and rapport with the audience . . . all concepts meaning the best exercise of whatever artistic judgment and talent he may possess.

Our instincts are also telling us that 1957-58 will see the highest development of the formula show. If that's literally true, then the formulae will simply have nowhere to go. Or—to put it politically—the public will be looking for a change.

Already, too, the signs and portents are indicating that the fall of 1958 on the other hand will see a resurgence of originality in an emphasis on form rather than formula. A few major plans in work at two of the networks put a premium on exciting new ideas in both content and execution. This would seem to show that some of television's wise money is even now being bet on a public demand for fresh television experiences.

Those who insist that television must play a more cautious game are running the risk of relegating the medium to a status below its rightful one. If anyone has made up his mind that tv has to be derivative from other media as well as from tv's own old bottles, could it just possibly be that he's doing tv a disservice? Along with having little fun at doing the work, he may be helping degrade the most important sales tool ever invented. And then, we're all heading for trouble.

Some folks in our business, as in every other, will always feel it's safer to go the old ways, rather than set out along new ones. Is it ugly to say we tend to stick to the tried and true old ways because we're afraid of the sponsor? We often act as if this were the case. And if we're operating in an atmosphere of fear, we'd better remember Psych I and what fear does to a fella.

We propose that the essence of leadership to give the television advertiser the change the public will be seeking in 1958-59 must be creative indigenous use of the medium. This does not mean "experimentation" but it does mean sights and sounds which have not been beaten to death on television. Many shows have pointed the way, from "Garroway At Large" to a "Night To Remember," much of Caesar and Kovacs, and "Playhouse 90." They share, in common, quality in content and production, married to exciting uses of various levels of reality both in content and performance. To us producers, this adds up to fun. We think it adds up that way to the mass audience too. If you want to see producers having fun at their work, go to Fred Coe, Tony Miner, John Houseman, Sid Caesar, Ernie Kovacs, Bob Banner, Pete Salomon, Ralph Levy, Al McCleery, Fred Friendly, Martin Manulis, Larry Berns, Jess Oppenheimer, or the oversigned.

Bring money.

Cantor Interviews Eddie

By EDDIE CANTOR

Question: How do you account for the swing towards radio?

Answer: Radio, like your wife, has always been there. We just haven't appreciated her enough. Sponsors, advertising agencies, the networks, have been so fascinated by a new face that they forgot about the great stability of the still handsome features of the other. Dollar for dollar I believe radio is the best buy in the advertising field today.

Q: Have you any statistics to prove this?

A: In the last year more radio sets have been sold than television. Certainly people are not pressing pants with them or using them as toasters. It means people are listening. There is no disputing the fact that 85% of all automobiles are equipped with radios. Driving a car with your radio turned on, you are not distracted and you have a chance to listen not only to the entertainment furnished, but to every bit of the "sell."

Q: Then you think radio is 100% ok?

A: Far from it. Too many record shows—not enough live personalities—too much sameness.

Q. You sound as if you would like to get back into radio.

A: I can be had. Leave your name and telephone number with the girl outside.

Q: What about television?

A: What about it?

Q: All right—what has happened to the comedians? Why are so many of their shows being cancelled?

A: Too much exposure. Once a week is too often. We had the right idea seven years ago with the rotating comics on "Colgate Comedy Hour." Once a month we were not hard to take. Also, the longterm contract makes one smug and fat, self-satisfied. A hungry actor, like a hungry fighter, will give you his best performance.

Q: Do you think the rating system had anything to do with the cancellation of the comedy programs?

A: Oh, yes. And that's the craziest thing that ever happened to this business. True, programs on television are very costly. Regardless, I believe the sponsors are much too impatient. Years ago a team such as Fibber McGee & Molly could go on for a season, or even more, and build slowly until they eventually reached the heights. Nowadays if, on the second rating, you are not close to the top 10, the sponsor starts casting his eye with a view towards replacement.

Q: Do you think there's a chance of comedians making a comeback some time in the future?

A: Without a question of a doubt. For instance, one season without Sid Caesar and many people will be ready to sell their television sets. I believe that Jackie Gleason should be back, and will. However, I am also of the opinion that he needs much more solid writing. Jackie doesn't belong in a variety show, acting as m.c. His is one of the biggest talents of all time and that talent should be utilized to the best possible advantage.

Q: What would you do if you were managing Jackie Gleason?

A: I'd engage Nat Hiken without a thought of cost, and put Gleason in his hands.

Q: What about the future of the quiz show?

A: I don't think giving away more money will help any of them. They will go for another season or two, and then it will be the survival of the fittest.

Q: How do you account for the longevity of Groucho Marx and "You Bet Your Life"?

A: "You Bet Your Life" is not a quiz show. It's merely a platform on which one of the great comedians of our time can strut his stuff, Groucho Marx would be just as big a success if he gave the contestants 70 cents as top prize. Nobody cares whether the contestants win or lose. They enjoy the devastating humor of the man with the cigar and the roving eyes.

Q: To what do you attribute the phenomenal success of the Lawrence Welk program?

A: For the same reason people go for apple pie and coffee, hot dogs and coke, sending presents on Mother's Day. It's homey, it's easy to take, it's for the entire family. And again it proves what I have been saying for more than 25 years—there's a very big America between Lindy's on Broadway and the Brown Derby in Hollywood.

Q: What about the dramatic shows?

A: I think they have shown great imagination, originality, and should be embraced by the entire television public. Imagine "Playhouse 90" getting out practically a Broadway play once a week. It's miraculous. Not forgetting "Matinee Theatre" putting on an hour show, in color, five times weekly. It speaks volumes for the genius of Martin Manulis and Albert McCleery.

Q: Wouldn't you say they have had some bad ones?

A: Oh, yes. But I've seen Mickey Mantle strike out quite often, but watch his batting average at the end of the season. That's what counts.

Q: Do you think the splitup of Martin & Lewis has hurt either one of them.

A: No. They can both stand on their own two feet, and the public will profit by the splitup. It will give them two television shows instead of one. Jerry Lewis, doing four or five shows a season, makes each one an event. He can go on and on and on, improving with the years.

Q: What about Dean Martin?

A: The guy has charm and talent. And having

Hollywood.

CARL: And now ladies and gentlemen, may I introduce the world's greatest living authority on Sid Caesar . . . Professor Hugo Von Option.
(The Professor shuffles in, dressed in misfit garb which includes baggy trousers, held together at the waist by a rope, a battered high hat and a motheaten inverness cape.)

CARL: Good evening Professor.

PROF: Vot's good about it! I just listened to Caesar's last show.

CARL: Why, Professor, you're crying.

PROF: Dot's a lie!

CARL: Then why are you mopping your eyes with a blotter?

PROF: Because my eyeballs are leaking, dot's vy!
(He sits down in a beat-up leather chair that has a lopsided seat cushion. Throughout the interview, he has a private vedetta with this cushion, because it tries to dismount him.)

CARL: Now tell me Professor, what in your expert opinion, caused the dropping of Caesar's option?

PROF: Talent! Sid had too much talent for television. Dot's vy he's now kaput. He has vershimmelt mit it. Da gestures . . . da mugging . . . da ad lib fumbling mit da words . . . da beautiful timing . . . und for whom? Da kokomania lowbrow sitting in front of the tv set in long underwear, mit a can of beer in each hand und between belches, he is yelling at his frowsy wife to keep the gedempfte kids quiet und she's hollering back at him like a banshee. (Sighs) Ach, his talent, it vas all vasted . . . like perfume on a pile of manure.
(He crosses his legs to stymie the aggressive seat cushion.)

CARL: Professor Von Option, when did you first meet your idol, Sid Caesar?

PROF: Let me see. (Counts fingers on his hand) 25 years ago in Camp Tamiment in da mountains. He was dere an entertainer, und Mister Sheboyan, da boss, saw right avay Sid had da shtuff, und gave him special priveleges. Like he let him eat in da kitchen instead of mit da guests. Und on Friday night ven dey served potato kugel, Sid would get a crispy corner. The boss' fat wife would get the other three corners.

CARL: Wasn't Tamiment the camp where Don Hartman, Danny Kaye, Imogene Coca und Max Liebman also entertained?

PROF: Dey vas good, but dey never got the kugel corners. Only da middle, soggy part. (Slapping his knee). Yep, da kid had the shtuff alright.

CARL: Professor, they say that in the Middle West, Caesar's brand of comedy was over the heads of the people. Is that true?

PROF: Who's they?

CARL: The advertising agency, Fenyock, Bedgevondt & Klauber.

PROF: Dot's a moot point. She let's meet da point head on und moot it before you ask anuuder question. Ergo, I took a Nielsen on da people in da Middle West . . . Nielson doesn't have a monopoly on da Nielsen ya know . . . und I discovered in do whole Middle West, Caesar is over da heads of only three people . . . und dat's a fact.

CARL: And their names?

PROF: Fenyock, Bedgevondt und Klauber!

Taking a Nielsen on Nielsen

CARL: How do you account for Caesar's low ratings?

PROF: I'm glad you brought dat up! I wanted to be ready for you, so I took a Nielson on Caesar's Nielsen, und found out dat ven Caesar was on, da people all over da country vas laughing so loud, so ven Nielsen called, dey couldn't hear da phone. (Aside) Try and top dat!

CARL: Professor, since you are so intimate with Caesar, perhaps you can tell ud what Sid's plans are for the future?

PROF: Vot I'm telling you is off da cuff. One night I happened to be kneeling by the keyhole und I heard it. (Moves gingerly forward in his chair.) He's going back to Tamiment. Dere he'll work night and day to lose his talent. For Caesar dat won't be easy. But he's a genius so in a year he should be mitout an ounce of cleverness. Den ven he's free from da stigma of talent, he'll raise sideburns and learn how to twang a guitar. Den insurance, he'll learn how to ride a pinto, shoot from da hips mit two guns togedder, climb rocks while he's clobbering four ornery gunslingers mit his bare fists. Boy, will he kill da people.

CARL: Sounds like surefire mishmosh.

PROF: Vait, I'm not finished. For insurance for da udder insurance, for da grand finale he'll have a giant giveaway!

CARL: What will he give away?

PROF: Madison Avenue!

CARL: Professor, a million thanks for this interview, and until we meet again on Caesar's Hour . . . Auf Viedersehn!

PROF: Und until I find out vot it means Auf Viedersehn . . . Good Night!

By HERBERT BRODKIN
(Producer, CBS TV 'Studio One')

Having noted with more than passing interest that a good many articles on television censorship tend to regard some of my shows as being "controversial", I feel it may be time to state positively my own views on this broadcasting problem and attempt to silence for a while those who would put words in my mouth and brand me with their special mark of artistic martyrdom.

It might be interesting to speculate on my own personal thesis that of all the creative entertainment mediums, television is perhaps least censored. Surely the motion picture producer in attempting to find a subject for films is bound by the opinions of the money men as to what will earn money at the boxoffice (undoubtedly, the greatest motivation for censorship ever invented). In addition, there are all the taboos of the code as well as all the bromides that have become traditional (to name a few: the so-called 12 year-old mental level; fantasies always lose money; it's a great story but who's your star?; it must appeal to the young people; it won't sell in Europe or Pakistan, etc. etc.). The result, of course, is that he more often than not comes up with a tailored motion picture that alienates no one and attracts a still smaller audience.

Certainly in the past few years I have found, for the most part, that any subject handled with taste, discretion and sympathy has an excellent chance for production on television. The criterion, however, must always be the quality of the story and especially the writing. Controversy for its own sake is doomed to censorship and failure, and rightly so.

Split-Level Censorship

As I see it, there are several kinds of television censorship, mainly divisible into three groups: network, sponsor and audience. The censorship of the network takes the form of "editing" to conform to the standards of good taste and the best interests of the public. It is in effect, a self-censorship and its standards as set by Herbert Carlborg at CBS and Stockton Helffrich at NBC are remarkably high and encouragingly enlightened. These two gentlemen have done much to make this medium grow. In addition, there are network executive heads who above all are interested in the expansion of television as an artistic as well as a commercial medium. To quote from an Anniversary VARIETY article by Hubbell Robinson Jr., ". . . the outsize concept, boldly imagined, relentlessly, even stubbornly pursued by men consecrated to achievement, will bring them not only gold but honor in the market-place."

This ideal is certainly not a cheap or simple one; it is daring in its concept and in its effects.

Along about here we come to number two in censorship, the sponsor. He's that old charlatan "exposed" in every other paper bound book about television. (I've read these books and any relationship between them and the medium I work in is so slight as to make me wonder how I've missed all the fun. I don't have a house in Westchester or Darien and that sexy blonde production assistant remains a wistful dream.) "The Elgin Hour" and "The Alcoa Hour" were stimulating and inspiring experiences. The agencies and sponsors were represented by men of intelligence and appreciation. Some of the plays we produced on those series were exciting and thought-provoking. Actually, sponsors, or at least the ones I've known, are nothing more than businessmen like the one next door, that good solid conservative who knows what he's doing when he's selling his product across the counter, but who is apt to become panicky when statisticians inform him his pitch is going to many millions of people, when 15%ers tell him his selling points are old-hat and when pollsters scream that his competitor's message is reaching more of the mass mind than his message is reaching.

Everybody's a Critic

The thing that really panics the sponsor, and shakes the network official from his perch of high idealism, however, is the "audience reaction." Every member of the audience is a critic, professional or otherwise, and that is as it should be. When individuals react as individuals, expressing personal comments on the artistic quality and interest of the show, again, that is as it should be. On the other hand, there may be danger when individuals band together to form a pressure group and when networks and sponsors begin to make picayune concessions. When first we tried to set a pattern for eliminating stereotypes from a script, who could foresee that one day eyebrows would be raised at any or all national customs portrayed in characterizations? Recently an hour dramatic show set as its scene a country and a town so indistinct as to detract from the real emphasis and color of what had been a vibrant and powerful script. All this, because the leading character was unsavory, and to give him a nationality might reflect on the group and bring criticism. Catering to narrow minds who, cannot or will not divorce themselves from stereotypes will eliminate so much color from our art and integrate so unambiguously national backgrounds as to make our work glorified soap opera.

Therefore, I shall submit that the responsibility, as well as the censorship, is three-fold: at the network level we must learn to be more objective about ratings, to turn from mob-hunger and group appeasement to a rationally steady approach to the high ideals which already exist, but are too often overlooked. The sponsor, in turn, must consider seriously whether his message, besides being mass-exposed, is actually reaching the consumer he wants to reach and whether the program he identifies his product which has real meaning and purpose. And as individuals, as the audience, we must become certain in our convictions, prouder in our heritage and firmer in our belief that we can react individually, not as stereotypes with a label to be defended or decried.

This kind of intellectual and emotional maturity will help eliminate the different kinds of censorship, for each of us will be carrying out his creative ideals without pressure and with the freedom which can make for great art.

The Pause That Depresses

By LESTER GOTTLIEB

On the summer's eve of another new television season, millions of viewers will be in training. They'll be sharpening their eyeballs, stocking their refrigerators, puffing up their DeCastros, priming for their roles of armchair critics. The shows they will examine will represent the survivors of a stream of new product, good, bad, indifferent. Although they will turn collective thumbs down on many of them, I still consider them fortunate. They were lucky enough not to see the ones that didn't get on the air.

According to those in the know (and that just about includes everybody in our business) about 250 new pilot films or kines, costing around $5,000,000 were ground out of program factories east and west. I have a feeling I saw all of them. Well, I really didn't see all of them. Messrs. Kintner and Goldenson never invited me to their screening rooms. It just seems as though I saw all of them. And when you see a celluloid-load of westerns, those Indians look alike. It is a well known fact that the same tribe supplies the three networks, Desilu and Screen Gems.

These Indians got organized many years ago by William S. Hart and although they haven't beaten the U.S. Cavalry yet, they've survived thousands of white actors.

Finally there will come a time when you are obligated to make some sort of comment on what you have just seen. Take any one of these:

"Seemed a little long."
"How much does it cost, above and below?"
"May I keep the film a few days. I'd like to kick it around with the boys."
"Is she cleared?"
"I'd like to see some plot outlines for future shows."
"Is he cleared?"
"Can you get it ready in time?"
"I'd like to chew on this a bit."

You Simply Can't Say It's Good

I cannot emphasize too strongly how dangerous it is to come right out and say, "Damned good." Suppose you liked it and no one else did? The show flops. Someone nails you with it. "Say, Jones, weren't you the guy who flipped when he saw the pilot of this stiff?"

A safer course is the old reliable comment: "It has possibilities but it needs plenty of work."

Don't let the three most optimistic words in the English language—"Insert commercial here"—trick you. Use it to your own advantage.

"If we insert commercial here," you parry, "how do we integrate the lead-in with the Indian chief's grunt?"

The only tribe that didn't join SAG lost out because of progressive opinions. They insisted that just once they sell guns to John Wayne or at least get one chance to ride the covered wagons and have Randy Scott's men encircle them.

Previewing prospective tv sagas requires a specialized skill and one has to be armed with many techniques. All this dexterity is not necessary if you wish to express a firm opinion but I know few are imprudent enough to do that. Despite talk about the possible elimination of pilot films I believe we're going to see many more and I respectfully submit these methods guaranteed to get you off the hook when your turn comes to answer the burning questions: "Well, what did you think of it?"

Upon entering the audition room, find the most inconspicuous nook and as far away from the guy who brought in the pilot. Even in a dark room these guys can watch your reactions. Poker players and guys who were stupid in classrooms are masters of this stratagem.

The Art of Stalling

Make every effort to see the pilot with a large group. At that critical time when the lights go up and the pause that depresses occurs, reach for the water carafe. This is a neat bit of "Business" and the eager beavers are challenged ahead of you.

If you are trapped in a room alone with the producer of the pilot, stall with irrelevant conversations. Two subject matters good for 10 minutes of chatter are (a) Will Mike Wallace be a national success, and (b) Can you explain Pat Weaver's program plans?

Now all these rules are absolutely useless to executives who have imagination, courage, a gambler's instincts. These guys spoil everything. So what if they buy a hit once in a while or wholeheartedly believe we can do better things. They're just not playing fair.

I say if a guy wants an opinion let him go to the Supreme Court. Us cowards ain't talking . . . especially after screenings!

Author's note to VARIETY Editor: Of course you realize this is a composite and does not necessarily reflect my own deportment which is always positive, progressive, pertinent.

To Author from VARIETY: Are you kidding?

Can TV Show Mortality Be Reduced? Yes! By Full Use of All Resources

By WILLIAM B. LEWIS
(President, Kenyon & Eckhardt)

The shocking rate at which television shows were cancelled in the past season has combined with rising network costs to provide more suspense for us behind the tv screen than for the audience in front of it.

One of the most graphic examples of cancellations, or failures, is seen in the category of half-hour evening network shows. Of 32 half-hour evening shows that opened the 1956-57 season, only eight succeeded. In other words, there were 24 cancellations.

Mortality like this can stir up anxieties in even the bravest. But a second look will only prove what some of us have believed all along—that the anxieties generated by cost and mortality can be controlled through proper evaluation of shows before they are bought.

It is true that tv involves many risks, but it is also true that it offers greater rewards than any other advertising medium. These rewards go to the agency that uses every professional talent at its command to gauge the things which are measurable about tv.

With proper research, proper evaluation of the measurable, it is possible to look at television—not with fear—but as men have looked at Niagara. Some harness the Falls as a tremendous source of power. Others go over it in a barrel. The latter can be hazardous and sometimes fatal.

At K&E, we believe that creative program buying makes the really big difference between success and failure in selecting tv shows. Our TV-Radio Department has the job of finding programs which will meet the client's basic needs by delivering the right audience at a competitive cost per thousand. But the TV-Radio unit does not work alone. From the outset, it relies heavily upon the services of the Research and Media Departments. It turns to the Promotion Department for exploiting stars once the show is signed.

Exit the 1-Man Genius

There is no room today for the one-man genius, the lone operator who selected tv programs by himself with nothing more to guide him than in instinct, luck or a hatpin. Program mortality such as that experienced during the current season makes it imperative that agencies work as a team. It requires, too, that we be update on a day-by-day basis to meet the challenges that are forced upon us by changing trends in telecasting and shifting audience preferences in entertainment.

Constant vigilance is the most effective instrument available for measuring popular trends while they are on the way up. Neither public program taste nor rising tv costs can be controlled in the absolute, but both can be controlled indirectly through creative time-buying. The job is one for professionals only because it presents so many variables. The time of day or evening, for example. Costs of the program in relation to budget. Competition. Composition of audience. Type of product being sold and its stage of marketing development.

Our people analyze all the tangibles and intangibles of tv, then apply teamwork and disciplined creative program thinking to the client's problem. For example, creative time-buying requires an intimate knowledge of the product or service to be sold so that a show may be scheduled when the most prospects can be reached most efficiently.

Do we want to reach an exclusively female audience? An exclusively masculine audience? Or is our client selling a product that will be used by an entire family? Is the product expensive? Or will it sell for a small sum?

An agency time buyer must be aware of these and other variables. He must—through proper application of research—be able to select stations and time for viewing, then match them to products and problems of distribution. He must also understand and cope with the problems of distribution. He must also understand and cope with the problems presented by live clearance, rebroadcast, network coverage and cost. All have a direct bearing on the program's opportunity for success—and a better rating.

Television is best used as a basic medium for broad and continuing coverage of a potential market. To be successful, the tv program must have sufficient cumulative reach as to give the dynamic coverage necessary for a desired market.

K&E's basic and continuing responsibility is to make certain that the program recommended will be a good buy for the client, that it will deliver the size and type audience we need in the markets we need. It must deliver a reasonable cost-per-thousand performance with a psychological impact that gives our commercial messages the best selling environment possible.

To get the most from our television dollar, we at K&E believe there is a real need to build an awareness among prospective audiences—to impress upon them that a certain program will be telecast at a given time. Tune-in ads are one obvious answer. But beyond this, there is a vast need for publicity, promotion and exploitation to keep alive audience interest. For this, K&E looks to its Promotion Department.

Touring the Stars

K&E pioneered and has enjoyed great success with the device of touring tv stars throughout the country to arouse program interest. We believe that more and more agencies will find this type of promotion necessary to protect heavy client investment in tv and to combat rising program mortality.

While on tour, the tv star—in the company of a K&E promotion man—is interviewed by the local Press and by TV-Radio commentators. The star also appears wherever crowds are expected—at civic and public affairs, in dealer showrooms and in department stores. Always, the star is identified with the forthcoming tv show and with the client and his product.

The whole country, for example, associates Ed Sullivan with Mercury and Vaughn Monroe as the "Voice of RCA" almost as much from their K&E conducted tours as from their appearances before the tv camera. While touring tv stars never can eliminate changing public entertainment tastes, it will always be helpful in sensing these trends because the agency man accompanying the star constantly is observing public reaction.

Cost per thousand to the client has been found to be extremely low when weighed against additional audience achieved. A recent survey, for example, showed a 25% audience increase in one Trendex area visited by a tv star prior to the telecast.

We do not mean to imply that K&E has a magic formula for selecting tv shows or a pat panacea for the occupational headaches involved in building ratings. But we do know that teamwork, research and judgment can hold anxieties to a healthy minimum—one that inspires rather than stifles creative effort.

There's More Than Silver In That Radio Lining

By MATTHEW J. CULLIGAN
(V. P., NBC Radio Network)

The lonely voices heralding the return of Network Radio to the media living room have been joined by a chorus of trade reporters, agency and advertising executives.

This network radio surge is neither a matter of chance nor charity. I have in past months tried to describe some of the forces which have contributed to this upturn.

Among these forces is economics—the tremendously increased cost of competing media, limiting the continuity necessary for effective advertising; and, on the other hand, network radio's convenience and low, low cost . . . making it the supermarket way to buy broadcasting time.

Social forces also played a role—the decline in radio ratings, the sole yardstick for many buyers, finally halted. Ratings on counted audience stabilized, and at the same time advertisers became aware of a great uncounted audience out-of-living-room, out-of-home, in cars and public places. The advertisers' own research was proving that they listened, so this huge uncounted audience was a bonus added to an already amazing value.

But network radio policies, too, played a part. At NBC Radio, for example, "Monitor" built an identity that made it easy for advertisers to merchandise their sponsorship. "Monitor" regained for radio some of the sense of excitement that tv had monopolized within the trade. We also developed a thorough, far-going sales strategy on the creative use of sound.

This strategy goes under the name of "Imagery Transfer."

Promoting 'Sound'

For almost a decade, advertisers had been hypnotized by the need for developing methods of visual persuasion; they tended to neglect audio. Things got to the point where advertisers would frequently use the sound track of a tv commercial for their radio announcements in the mistaken notion they were saving money, when actually they were losing the impact they should have gained through a properly prepared commercial. "Imagery Transfer" is designed to offset such lethargy, and all networks are developing long-range plans for getting agencies once again to put their better creative men on radio commercials to instill in them the recognition that only the surface use of sound in persuasion. We're thus promoting "sound" advertising, in more senses than one.

This "Imagery Transfer" strategy has close kindship with the trend in motivation research. The two go hand in hand, both emphasizing the increased use of psychological know-how in advertising. Where motivation research digs into the themes to use, "Imagery Transfer" emphasizes the need to work on the forms through which the theme becomes implanted in the listener's brain. Motivation research directs attention to the general question of what the message should be, regardless of medium. "Imagery Transfer" focuses attention on the specific question of how to get it across on radio. So the two work together for the benefit of all advertising.

There's yet one other area where motivation research and "Imagery Transfer" meet. Motivation research has brought out time and again that no single theme is suitable for everyone. Different people have different needs and values, require different approaches to move them. Consequently, for maximum effectiveness, advertisers need to use more than a single theme in a campaign. Since copy changes are so costly in tv and printed media, radio is the only medium capable of handling efficiently and at low cost a multi-theme campaign. But to keep a multi-theme campaign unified so as to gain cumulative impact takes "Imagery Transfer" strategy.

As we proceed in the development of these techniques, and in stimulation of agency creative people, more and more advertisers will find that it pays to use sound advertising.

I would be remiss at this point, however, if I did not point out that many advertisers have already found that radio pays—found out from their very own reseahch. Most of the recent network radio purchases came from knowledgable, deliberate advertisers and agencies as a result of sales effectiveness research they conducted on test radio campaigns.

The apparently low ratings reported by various services somehow don't appear meaningful in view of these extraordinary sales results, which are the true proof of radio's power.

So, in radio, we have decided to do what few other media dare to do. We are going to research the sales effectiveness of radio for advertisers at our own expense. We are sure that these studies will corroborate what Dr. Sydney Roslow recently reported from his studies—that dollar for dollar, radio delivers more commercial remembrance than does any other medium.

The Good Shows Aren't Accidental

By ROBT. E. EASTMAN
(President, ABC Radio)

Our fundamental concept at American is the well-known affirmation, "The show is the thing."

The broadcasting business is subjected to many pressures. There are the considerations of sales, the needs of affiliated stations, requirements of public service—all of these and other pressures have a bearing on the basic effort to develop and produce shows which attract and hold large listening audiences.

If you were to look at a network like a factory, you would immediately realize that the product is programming. As is the case with most successful manufacturing organizations, quality of product is of prime importance. Frequently, I am appalled over the lack of quality control and inspection of the radio industry's broadcasting product. This is an area, both nationally and locally, where there is vast room for improvement.

One of the greatest detrements and realm of misunderstanding in network broadcasting has been that pertaining to the field of "public service." It is my conviction that much effort and dollars have been wasted—are currently being wasted—in building and producing programs for worthwhile causes, but which attract very little audience because they usually are quite dull.

It was my pleasure in recent years to work closely with the rebirth of a radio station. Its organization was almost entirely motivated by a desire to perform a unique public service. This station produced vast quantities of uninteresting programs with low ratings. Fortunately, the operators were intelligent people, and they came to realize that you could not accomplish the desired ends without first "getting the people into the tent to see the show." They modernized their programming, built the top ratings in town, and in the process, streamlined their public service so that it was far more effective.

We have taken a stand at American Broadcasting that network programming must be live programming. With the near-perfection of phonograph recordings and other mechanical reproduction devices, there might be many people who would justifiably question the need for our desirability of live programming. Probably, the distinction is the sum total of many small, but what we consider to be extremely important, facets of the subject.

These are things like: Spontaneity, Charm, Immediacy, Listener Participation. It's happening right now, Exclusiveness.

These are just words and each may have only a small implication, but when you add these words and the ideas they stand for together, the sum total can very well be that vital degree of difference.

What is the "degree of difference?" It is the elusive quality which distinguishes the star from the also-ran. It is an all-important quality, especially in an industry where, today, there is a tendency to more sameness in programming.

One of the most important considerations in building network programs is a consciousness of the nature of local programming. This is the reason why our key executives, have a background of successful local station operation. The good local program sets a certain pace and establishes a mood. It is essential that the network programming which precedes or follows on the air should not break this continuity, but rather enhance it. If this seems to be confusing, let me clarify by pointing out that it is simply a matter of production detail, backed up by know-how from both the local and national point of view. The fact remains that exclusive, live network programming, with its high degree of difference, can coordinate effectively with local programming. It is being done every day, but not to the extent that it must be done. We are going to do more of it.

It is almost unbelievable to see the naivety of some people who feel that all you have to do is put a show on the air and forget about it. The result is: If the first show happens to be good, each subse-

'TV THRU MONOCLE' COM'L HIT

The Accent Is on Substance

By MANIE SACKS

(Vice President, NBC-TV Network Programs)

The National Broadcasting Co. has built its fall programming on a base of live television, increased emphasis on "specials" and creative programming, and a fresh lineup of regularly scheduled shows. And playing over the entire schedule is the spotlight of color television, picking up highlights in all phases of our programming.

As our fall schedule shapes up at present, the ratio of live to film from daily start to sign-off is about four to one. In prime evening time, it appears that more than two-thirds of our programming will be live. There may be some modification in the fall schedule, as time goes on, but the present proportions should remain about the same.

Behind us are several years of innovation and change—years that saw the emergence of new forms in entertainment and public service. Spectaculars have become establishd as a program form. We proved that ballet, good music, and Shakespeare could attract large audiences. We pushed buttons to whisk viewers to all parts of our continent on a Sunday-afternoon magic carpet. We blended film, music and poetry to present the story of our century.

Emphasis on creativity—on new forms—continues at NBC. Our "specials"—both in entertaiment and in public affairs—will reflect the continuing labors of our creative staffs.

But, in building our fall schedule, we also turned our attention to the forms that have always been the backbone of the schedule—the situation comedies, the adventure series, the Westerns, the mysteries, the quiz shows, the comedy and the pop music. We were determined that the substance of these shows would be better than ever next fall.

All This—and 'Dial M'

Let's glance at the fall program schedule. There will be more than 40 "specials," at the rate of about one a week. There will be "Annie Get Your Gun"—one of the alltime great Broadway hits—starring Mary Martin. There'll be "Pinocchio," starring Mickey Rooney. There will be six Bob Hope spectaculars, six starring Jerry Lewis, and two built around Dean Martin. There will be a Perry Como "special" (in addition to his duties on the regular schedule). We are planning an ice show, starring Dick Button, Barbara Ann Scott and Tab Hunter: There will be Hallmark dramas of top quality—"Dial M for Murder," is one item under discussion.

Our regular schedule combines established hit shows and new series of great promise. Perry Como, Steve Allen, Dinah Shore, George Gobel and Eddie Fisher are among the top-drawer personalities continuing on NBC. Gisele MacKenzie becomes a star of her own show. "Your Hit Parade" continues with a new star lineup.

Highlighting the drama department is a series of full-hour dramas—live and filmed—produced by Alfred Hitchcock and others. And the dramatic show with the greatest staying power, "Kraft Television Theatre," continues on its way.

"Twenty-One" returns as anchor of our quiz-show lineup. "Tic Tac Dough," a proven daytime sucecss, moves to prime evening time. And a new quizzer from the same stable, "High Low," may become the third show in this group.

There will be westerns—as you've probably heard. But they'll be great westerns—"Wells Fargo," "Restless Gun," and "Wagon Train."

The old reliable hits that keep delivering audiences and sales-year after year will be on hand—"You Bet Your Life," "This Is Your Life," "People Are Funny," and others.

In public affairs, we'll be covering the news, the special events, political controversies, science, medicine, social issues and other phases of the world we live in. We will devote a major effort to covering the International Geophysical Year, the greatest scientific project of all time—which begins this summer with more than 20 nations taking part.

On Sunday afternoon, "Wide Wide World" will be alternating with one of the most acclaimed public-service programs of all—"Omnibus." The NBC-TV Opera Co. will present another series of live operas in English.

In sports, we will present coverage of top attractions such as the World Series, championship boxing and other events.

Color programming is an integral part of our planning for the coming season. Our policy this fall will be to present in color most of the shows with the highest ratings on our schedule. Emphasis will be on programs in peak periods, such as week-ends, when the national audience is greatest. Under this policy, our color programming will be seen by the greatest number of people and have maximum impact on the public's interest in color.

We go into the fall season convinced that we have tightened and improved every segment of our schedule. The emphasis, as I said at the outset, is on substance.

BRITISH SETUP'S TWO-YEAR CLICK

By HAROLD MYERS

London.

In less than two years commercial television has made a substantial impact in Britain, having won the battle of the ratings and earned the confidence of its advertisers. It has, within the same short span, achieved a nationwide audience and, most important of all, is now running on an everyday trading profit. Admittedly, the various programmers have a long way to go before they succeed in amortizing their initial investments, but their rate of progress has exceeded expectations.

Despite restrictions on capital investment, the nation-wide development program for the commercial network is proceeding according to schedule. Already more than 70% of the United Kingdom is spanned by the alternative channel, and by 1960 a minimum of 10 transmitters will be in operation, embracing most of the local population.

According to the existing timetable, the new Scottish transmitter will go on the air from Edinburgh (during the period of the International Festival) at the end of August, and the new Welsh transmitter will start to beam in the New Year. A year hence, by next mid-summer, the commercial outlet will be in use in the Isle of Wight, which will also embrace parts of South-West England. Initial development program will eventually conclude with transmitters for North-East England, East Anglia and, finally, Northern Ireland.

Run Ahead of BBC

Commercial tv, which began to function in Britain only nine months after receiving a Parliamentary greenlight, had to make itself felt against the powerful grip of BBC-TV, who started the world's first regular transmission service back in 1937. If the ratings represent a true guide, they've won hands down, even though, to this very day, the BBC is able to claim a substantially larger potential audience. There's no disputing the fact, however, that in the areas where the public has the ability to make the choice they are overwhelmingly in favor of the commercial programs.

And that, of course, has enabled the commercial operators to develop hefty advertising revenues in a comparatively short period. In their first six-month period (from October, 1956 to March, 1957) time purchases amounted to just under $11,000,000. A year later, covering the same six month span, they had more than trebled to $33,500,000. Now, advertising revenue is running at a steady monthly average of $5,600,000, with the prospects of a steady rise as the network expands in area and viewship.

Based on latest returns, substantially more than half of the 6,000,000 odd receivers in use in the UK are capable of tuning in to either channel, but all the compulsory license revenue ($8.40 per annum per set) goes to the BBC. The commercial operators have to rely exclusively on their time sales for income to meet program costs and overheads; consequently, they make a big spiel of advertising themselves as the free tv network. But, under law, the viewer is obligated to pay his license fee, even though he may never once tune in to a BBC program.

A mid-June survey, calculated on the basis of upwards of 3,500,000 receivers tuning in to the commercial program, indicated the new network has a potential audience of over 12,000,000, which is expected to soar close on 15,000,000 by the end of this year, when around 4,500,000 sets will have been converted.

London, which witnessed the birth of the commercial tv operation, remains the largest single viewing area, where the audience potential is currently rated at over 4,800,000. The London transmitter is operated by two different program companies. On weekdays, from Mondays to Fridays, the programming is the responsibility of Associated-Rediffusion, the company in which Lord Rothermere's Associated Newspapers has a stake. Weekend time is taken over by Associated TeleVision, the outfit headed by Prince Littler, Val Parnell and Lew and Leslie Grade. Latter company also has charge of weekday programming in the Midlands area, where the audience potential is currently slightly below 3,000,000. ABC-TV, a wholly owned subsidiary of Associated British Picture Corp. (in which Warner Bros. have a 37½% interest) is the weekend programmer for the Midlands, as well as for Lancashire and Yorkshire. The weekday operation in Lancashire and Yorkshire is the responsibility

In Case You Should Ask Me, TV Can Do Without:

By BOB CHANDLER

After some months of vicarious suffering in behalf of networks, program executives, agency radio-tv vicepresidents, news & special events directors, sales execs, packagers and just about every other frustrated soul in the television business, it's about time someone unburdened himself of a list of people television can do without. So here goes:

The do-it-yourself sponsor who insists he's going to make the final decision on a program buy and does nothing (all by himself) until the agency finally has to step in at the last minute and make up his mind for him. Then when the show's a flop because there wasn't sufficient time to prepare it, the agency is blamed and the sponsor decides he's going to do-it-myself again next season.

The network program exec who turns down all orders for a particular time slot on the basis that none of the programs submitted fit the evening's "mood" of programming. After three months of trying to sell his own house show, he finally okays an order for "Spank Your Mother-in-Law" for the "dramatic mood" night.

The affiliate who tells the station relations department he won't clear for the new news or public affairs show because it's not a good leadin to the "entertainment" show which if he was in his right mind he would never have cleared for in the first place.

The network brass who duck behind the nearest desk when asked their opinions of a controversial show another web produced.

The research men who don't believe a finding of a rating service, but won't admit it because "how do I justify paying for the service?"

Sorry, Right Number

The network VIP who tells his publicity department to "refer all calls on this one to me" and then won't pick up his phone to answer them.

The television "personalities" who blast the multiplicity of awards in television and then break their necks to get the presentation ceremony on their show.

The self-appointed critics of the network news operations who accuse the webs of "censorship" in not carrying an insignificant item that the Times brushed off with two paragraphs inside the paper. Somehow, the "critics" never seem to be disinterested parties.

The publicity-seeking Congressmen who call hearings, subpeona witnesses and then don't listen to a word they are saying. Final report could have been written without benefit of the hearing.

Newspaper television critics who brush off a show with a single paragraph, usually a wisecrack which would have been better left unwritten.

Networks which glorify "live" programming but schedule most of their shows on film, and which blast feature films but quietly order their o&o stations to program as many features as possible.

Women's groups who spend so much time criticizing television's effect on the nation's kids that they never have the time to see what their own offspring are doing—if they have any of their own, that is.

The network exec who says, "Oh, we've got that time period all locked up," but won't say who the sponsor is (usually because there isn't any).

The sales veep who insists that "we're well ahead of last year at this date" but disregards those gaping holes in his fall schedule.

The sponsor who's so afraid of "controversy" that he won't even screen the "Perry Mason" pilot because it'll remind people of the Mason-Dixon line.

The packager who's come up with a successful quiz format based on giving away a small fortune and struts himself as a "creative" genius.

Radio: An Integral Part Of Everybody's Strategy

By ARTHUR HULL HAYES
(President, CBS Radio)

Radio is a going and growing institution.

The last year leaves radio with a ruddy glow, and this victorious flush is highly compatible with the predictions of AM-FM stalwarts of the past. Old, but not forgotten, sponsors are returning to the audio fold. New business, too, feels a fresh upsurge. And all because the industry—advertisers and agencies—has once again concluded that radio is irreplaceable in the advertising scheme.

CBS Radio is particularly proud to have contributed to this industry awareness. The recent multi-million dollar sale to Ford was unquestionably a major event in the world of mass communication. Through the efforts and energies of a small group of agency people, a single sponsor was convinced that radio must be an intregal part of their strategy. Others have undertaken similar studies . . . and come to the same conclusion. This significant sale was followed by a series of other meaningful program buys that brought such sponsors as General Foods, General Mills, Philip Morris, Dodge and Pontaic under the CBS Radio Network banner.

The medium's low cost for maximu frequency has attracted the serious attention and pocketbook of many topflight advertisers who bought the package after careful weighing of the value achievable in the different advertising showcases.

The reasons for radio's growing popularity after 35 years is obvious to the oldtimers. It is a bargain!

With the rising costs of television and print advertising, it has become increasingly difficult to achieve frequency of impression. This radio does, and at a price that can only be described, and accurately, as —inexpensive. Indeed, an advertiser finds it convenient and expedient to buy his commercial messages inexpensively on radio.

The reasons are certainly sound: Radio receivers are everywhere, to the tune of 47.7 million homes with more than half boasting a second radio set; and a tremendous audience with the radio habit in over 35 million autos on America's highways, almost as many car radios as there were radio homes 10 years ago. This offers a potential exposure to enthuse any budding advertiser.

Radio is, of course, much more than just salable. As a tool for education and public affairs, the medium has never stopped growing. The CBS Radio Network, for instance, offers a fine variety of news, public affairs and good music features on a regular weekly basis. They don't all create the stir that emerged from our recent broadcast, "The Galindez-Murphy Case: A Chronicle of Terror" . . . That's very true, but without exception, they are sincere efforts to contribute to the public good on behalf of the broadcast industry. I'm inclined to feel, in fact, that the week-after-week religious and cultural programming merits praise that would exceed even the plaudits tossed at the great Public Affairs documentary.

Radio is, then, basic to America's education as well as her economy. We at CBS Radio cheer when any broadcaster makes a significant achievement in the area which the FCC loosely defines as "the public interest." It really isn't too important who gets the credit. It reflects on the entire broadcasting and communications community.

And so our feeling about the Ford sale and other recent buys is that they too, will be felt by all broadcasters. No one interested in the medium's future can afford to remain silent when the cheering starts.

Press Agent and the Press

By CHARLES S. STEINBERG
(Director, Press Information, CBS Radio)

Perhaps this piece should begin by a definition of terms. By "press agent" is meant the press information specialist, the publicist, the public relations man. By "press" we don't mean some towering abstraction, but the working newspapermen whom the P. R. man contacts either by releases, phone calls or personally.

It is common practice to think of the function of the press agent only in terms of his contact with the press. Fact is, the publicity man really works in two directions, internal and external. He is the liaison between his company, and its people, and the press. And this poses a problem. Some companies are public relations geared. Some are not. Fortunate, indeed, is the press officer who is blessed with a publicity-wise setup. In the main, the publicist must accept gracefully the fact that other department heads have their own pressing harassments and problems, and many think of the publicity area, not as part of an organic whole, but a special gimmick to be called upon in times of crisis or obvious need. The prevailing tendency is to look upon publicity as a spigot, to be turned on hot or cold as the occasion demands.

The publicist faces many resulting frustrations, but he must understand that one of the occupational hazards is that he is supposed to be geared to a quick reaction of other's problems, but must not expect quick reciprocity. The millenium will come when business institutes orientation courses in public relations for all department heads. Until that time, the publicist can only try to effect a practical liaison with other departments, and hope that they will get to understand the limitations, as well as the potential, of publicity.

What about the other side of the coin, the press agent vis-a-vis the press? Every so often, a newspaperman confides that he is thinking of becoming a publicist. My invariable question is, can he make the transition? As my old philosophy professor used to say, can he switch to another realm of discourse where, frankly, he must frequently assume the position of supplicant? I think one of the important considerations which is sometimes overlooked in press agent—press relations is that this is really a two-way street. Good newspapermen know that they have as much of an obligation to the publicist as he has to them. They have a right to demand equal and conscientious service, but they also have the obligation of giving a fair hearing without arrogance and without condescension. Most of the newspapermen I know, with very few exceptions, admit that they would have to work a lot harder without the help of the press agent. A theatrical agent named Charlie Washburn once pointed out that about 60,000 words pour into a newspaper office each day, enough to fill a novel. Suppose this were suspended? How many newspapermen would function as quickly and easily without this kind of service? What the press agent needs to develop vis-a-vis the press is a continuing sense of dignity and, on occasion, of courage. I think that many press agents are demeaned by some of the press, because they ask for it. Unfair, maybe, but true.

Well, you may say, all of this may be gospel, but what's the solution? I don't know of any final solutions, but I know that certain steps can be taken both by press agents and the press in the best interest of all concerned. A good press agent should not only be a pressure agent, but a service agent as well. When he has something honest to offer, as he frequently does, he ought to drop his hat out of his hand and ask for it in plain, civilized English without apologia pro vita sua. This applies both to his relations within the company and with the press.

As for the press, I think that every forthright publicist would agree that his wants are quite simple: to be treated courteously and with respect for his profession; to be thanked once in awhile for rendering a service, and to be accepted, not with suspicion but with good grace as an integral part of the newspaper business. Could anyone ask for less?

Don't Worry Or Eat Highly Spiced Foods

Hollywood.

The doctor says I'm all right now and my wife says I should throw the damn notes away, but I have decided otherwise.

In order for the reader to understand the ensuing I must first explain something of my own background. I have been a writer for 15 years and last week I was sick. Come to think of it, that's all you need to know. While sick, in that semi-conscious, semi-delirious state induced by the lack of Miltown I jotted down notes which I am herewith reproducing. The reader will understand, of course, that these notes have been edited. Many of them are undecipherable, or of no interest to the reader, and there were other reasons. Amongst those deleted were some obscene references to panel shows, a grossly exaggerated caricature of Mamie Van Doren and the name Yvonne Courtier which my wife has agreed to believe is a girl whom I considered hiring to do my typing. Here are the notes.

"Since my father owns this ranch and is your employer," she said with a stamp of her expensively shod foot, "I demand that you take me to the dance."

One could hardly believe that this determined command could have come from those lovely lips set so perfectly beneath the saucy upturned nose, surrounded neatly by dainty freckles as if to substantiate her Irish ancestry.

"I'm sorry, Ma'm," he said. And though his voice was gentle and courteous, his quiet grey eyes, surrounded by the wrinkles caused from looking into the sun, showed his firmness. "But there's some heifers to brand and that's what your father pays me for."

She turned on her heel. Only business associates of her father's could have warned him of the firmly set chin they got to know so well during the fabulous wheat corner of 1924. "I never want to see you again," she said.

And she never did. But it was just as well. Because he was barely smart enough to stay out of a mental institution and she was married, had three small children, was in love with the driver of the diaper service truck, and got fat as a pig before she was 30.

And Still No Cure

He crumpled up the page of figures and formulae and threw it almost savagely to the floor where it joined the many other papers which had met the same end. Then he pushed aside the test tubes and apparatus and momentarily rested his head on his arms. His wife entered quietly.

"I've got some fresh coffee for you, dear."

"Experiment 334 . . . nil." He tried to hide the discouragement in his voice. "Just like experiment 333 and all those before it."

"Darling, you can't work this hard. You've got to take a rest."

"But I feel that I'm so near to finding a cure for the dreaded disease. What a boon that would be to mankind. There's just one more way I can try . . . just one more experiment that might give mankind the serum to conquer the dreaded disease!"

"Oh the hell with it, let's go to a movie," his wife said.

So they went to a movie and to this day there's no cure for the dreaded disease.

The husky, thick-necked man shouldered his way to the bar. "Never mind, no seats," he snarled. "I'll take this one right here."

"I wouldn't if I were you," the mild-looking young man said quietly. "That seat belongs to my friend."

The husky thick-necked man looked contemptuously at the slim figure of the other. "You lookin' for a fight," he snarled.

The bystanders watched in admiration as the slim mild-looking man showed not the slightest sign of fear. "I said, "he answered without emotion, "that this seat was taken."

"Well, you'll have to fight for it," the husky thicknecked man said as without warning he swung.

They fought and the husky, thick-necked bully beat the living daylights out of the quiet, mild-looking man.

Everybody in the large rehearsal studio reserved for only the most important tv shows turned toward the door as it opened. The relief was almost audible as they saw that it was Sol Saks. The sponsor rushed forward to grasp his hand. "Thank God, you've come, we've been waiting for you."

Saks murmured simply, "I'm sorry." Only on the morrow would they read of the real reason for his tardiness. The burning building . . . the mother screaming of a child trapped inside . . . His unhesitating dash into the flaming edifice . . . And his appearance again, just seconds before the building collapsed with a child held safely in his arms and the cheers of the crowd ringing in his ears.

With hardly a wasted motion Sol Saks picked up the script . . . crossed out a few words here . . . added a few lines here . . . And those looking over his shoulder gasped in admiration as they saw from the hodge-podge pages emerge a smooth, well-knit, almost perfect script that in a few hours would electrify 40,000,000 listeners. Only a careful observer would notice in those fun-loving eyes behind the thick glasses the flashes of pain caused from the badly burned hand held so casually in his coat pocket.

"Who," said one careful observer who happened to be present, "is the young man in whose fun-loving eyes behind the thick glasses are flashes of pain from the badly-burned hand held so casually in his coat pocket?"

"That's Sol Saks," another answered. "And the sponsor has just offered to give him $9,000 a week and an introduction to Mike Romanoff if he'll write the program."

"No, thank you," Sol Saks was at that moment answering the sponsor. "But I've got to go home and write a play about the Real Meaning of Life." He turned and walked out and the crowd watched as his round-shouldered figure disappeared into the dimly lit corridor.

It was right after this last passage that I got well. The doctor said All I have to do is avoid worry and highly-spiced foods.

Now I've got to pay his bill and buy a new coat for my wife who keeps bringing up the name Yvonne Courtier. The sponsor isn't going to pay me quite $9,000 and he says every script will have to be okoyed by him, the account executive, the head of the agency, the producer, the star and his sister-in-law who took English composition in high-school. And that if he demands it, I must write the script on Sunday afternoon while standing on my head in front of Grauman's Chinese. (So far he has never demanded it but I do it once in a while anyhow, just to show him I'm conscientious.)

I'm not getting the introduction to Mike Romanoff either, but that doesn't matter since I can't eat highly spiced foods anyway.

Closed-Circuit TV: Translating A Commercial Into A Show

By NATHAN L. HALPERN
(Pres., TNT Tele-Sessions, Inc.)

Closed-circuit television has by now proved itself as a valuable method of business communication. A mere listing of the companies that have employed this medium to deliver corporate messages to salesmen, customers, stockholders, employees, field representatives and dealers reads like a who's who of American business. The fact that companies such as General Electric, International Business Machines and General Motors, to name only a few, have used closed-tv repeatedly is further proof of the medium's acceptance.

These facts are a matter of public record. Less known, however, are the detail and attention that go into the production of a closed-circuit telecast. Forgetting, for the moment, the technical arrangements which, of course, are enormous, I'd like to devote myself to the subject of programming for closed-circuit television. Contrary to general opinion, a closed-circuit show does not merely consist of placing a speaker on a platform, focusing a TV camera on him, and transferring the image to distant places where representatives of the sponsoring company are stationed.

Like any medium, it is the content communicated by which it is most judged. Thus, it's the show itself that counts. Granted that closed-tv is a dramatic, live medium with enormous impact upon viewers, we have learned that not all shows help establish the validity of the medium itself or serve the best interests of the sponsor user.

Closed-circuit television cannot be programmed as broadcasting. Similarly, the approaches of industrial film, or live touring shows, and many other methods of communication are inappropriate for closed-tv. This live medium requires an entirely different and unique approach in order to achieve maximum impact.

In effect, the challenge of closed-circuit programming is to create hour-long "commercials" of interest to, and impact upon, the special company audiences. The starting point is always the nature of the audience and the business message to be communicated. From these starting points, the creative forces can develop a program that is either a simple business presentation or, if required, a show that includes elaborate entertainment. Thus, the cost of production can range from $3,000 to $100,000 or more.

It must be remenbered that the primary purpose of closed-circuit programming is not merely to entertain. The entertainment portion must be carefully integrated so that it communicates properly the message the client wants to convey, thereby instructing and entertaining at the same time.

Realizing the importance of programming, we at TNT Tele-Sessions, Inc. have established a full-time Programming Department, headed by tv and film producer-director Marc Daniels. As a result, we have contributed to the development of new production techniques geared specifically for the closed-circuit medium.

Flexible Formats

For example, the idea of two-way video and audio from locations in different cities has inspired a feeling of local group participation in the nation-wide meetings. Earlier stylized presentations of big brother personality closeups, used without relief in a telecast, have been modified in most cases by greater visualizations through use of charts, graphs, film clips and still photographs. It is interesting to note that, while there have been spectaculars in the field of closed-circuit television — with original book and lyrics, choreography, dancers, stars, etc. — there have been more shirtsleeve business sessions, with closed-tv programming geared to adjust to this type of meeting.

Split screens, supers, matting and tv techniques have also been adapted for closed-circuit programming. Remote pickups from company factories, research laboratories, stockholder meetings and conference rooms are as commonplace as studio originations. On a single telecast, TNT supervised 32 cameras in 11 different regional originations throughout the country, with intricate, split-second inter-city switches numbering 27 in 38 minutes. Also, closed-tv has contributed to the television record book—by covering a two-and-one-half mile area of the General Motors Technical Center at Warren, Michigan, by a mobile truck following a Firebird car of the future over the entire course, beaming the moving tv signal without interruption.

In a sense, closed-circuit telesessions represent a different type of tv appearance and, perhaps more important, an extra source of income for well-known tv personalities as well as for other entertainment performers. To the "name" performer, it is a medium free of over-exposure and ratings, for each audience is limited and different, and there are a countless number of closed-tv shows on which a performer can appear without fear that he is "giving" too much of himself.

Show business personalities like Walter Pidgeon, Edward R. Murrow, John Daly, Walter Cronkite, Lawrence Spivak, Gisele MacKenzie, Jonathan Winters, Danny Thomas, Arlene Francis, Betty Furness and Orson Bean are among those who have begun to frequent closed-circuit shows.

Outstanding in impact, too, has been the big-screen presentation of top corporate management on closed-tv—to the point that closed-circuit telesesssions can easily be referred to as the "Network of Presidents." In the past few years, the following presidents have appeared on closed-circuit: President Eisenhower, former President Truman, President Sukarno of Indonesia, Prime Minister Ben-Gurion of Israel, Harlow H. Curtice of General Motors, Roy T. Hurley of Curtis-Wright, Harold E. Churchill of Studebaker-Packard, Frederick C. Crawford of Thompson Products, Ralph J. Cordiner of General Electric, Robert G. Dunlop of Sun Oil, Stanley C. Hope of Esso Standard Oil of N.J., Frederick R. Kappel of A.T.&T., and many others.

All in all, closed-circuit telesessions are becoming the modern way for business groups to communicate. And what was a late starter in the television field is now making rapid progress to become first in tv importance to our business and industrial way of life.

Closed-TV As A 'Catch-All'

By IRVING B. KAHN
(Pres. TelePrompTer Corp.)

VARIETY readers, I feel sure, would be interested in knowing some of the things TelePrompter has learned during the first six months since expending into the area of Group Communications via its acquisition of last fall of the Sheraton Closed-Circuit facilities and subsequent launching of a nationwide closed-tv service.

First, we have learned that the modern closed-circuit showing requires more than the services of a "booking" agent. The time was, in the early stages of this dynamic new medium's development, when a company invested its money in facilities, paid a "booker" what amounted to a fee to put together the package, and then produced a show on a "by guess" basis—taking a chance on the results, and, too frequently, getting too little in return for its investment.

Closed-circuit programming is no different, really, than programming for network television. Full care and attention must be given to scripting, cueing, lighting and staging, and extensive facilities must be available to guarantee that the program that goes into the camera will come out on the screen with full production values.

It became apparent to us early in the enterprise's development,

A Couple of Theme Songs On News-Public Affairs

By G. W. (JOHNNY) JOHNSTONE
(Director, Radio, TV, Films; NAM)

When I first started to knock out this piece on my Smith-Corona portable, I captioned it:

"MEMO TO MANAGEMENT: NEWS IS NEWS, IS NEWS, IS NEWS!"

I had intended to attempt to moralize, objectively and constructively. For, in the past six months I have traveled the country from one end to the other, utilizing planes, trains and rented automobiles, stopping off at radio stations scheduling NAM "public service" programs and tv stations telecasting my brainchild now almost seven years old — NAM's weekly tv-newsreel, Peabody Award-winning series, "Industry On Parade."

Basically, and at heart, a press agent—beg pardon, "public relations" — news and public affairs man I found myself visiting the newsguys and dolls as well as the program people at each station. This gave me the opportunity to sing my "Theme Song of 1957":

"NEWS IS NEWS, NOT ENTERTAINMENT" and,

"WHERE, OH WHERE, HAS YOUR CONTACT WITH YOUR SALES DEPARTMENT GONE?"

Does this make sense?

Reading it back, it does to me.

So let me go ahead, in an attempt to moralize. I promise you I will do it objectively and constructively.

Let me give my theme songs a whirl:

This Is My Life

I adopted these theme songs during last November's annual meeting of the Radio and Television News Directors Association at Milwaukee. As a former network (NBC, Mutual and BLUE-ABC) director of press relations, news and special features (now dubbed "public affairs") the guys and dolls of RTNDA honor me with an associate membership. This is my life!

Sig Mickelson, CBS' veepee in charge of news and public affairs, delivering the keynote address at this Milwaukee meeting gave me my inspiration. Management in the broadcast industry should take a renewed appraisal of its news operation. How many of you guys owning and/or operating stations (or networks) consider you have a successful news operation? No, I don't mean: "Is it paying off in dollars and cents?" Is your news and public affairs operations bringing your station (or network) the prestige a good news operation can and should? Don't worry about it "paying off." I've got an answer to that, if it's not. First, though, take a tip from one who knows a successful news and public affairs operation, can cite chapter and verse, station by call letters, network(s) by name and news directors, the best of whom rarely, if ever, appear before a mike or camera:

Mr. (or Mrs.) Station Owner or Manager: let me ask this all-important question:

Does your News Director report directly to you?

If he doesn't you'd better start planning a reorganization right now. And right here, I'd like to say that I have no gripe against the PD (pgm. dir.). I know hundreds, yea, thousands of 'em and they're a competent lot. But here I must repeat my first theme-song title:

"NEWS IS NEWS, IS NEWS, IS NEWS — NOT ENTERTAINMENT!"

Now I go into my second theme-song title, which is just as important as my first, except that it is aimed at your News Director:

"WHERE, OH WHERE, HAS YOUR CONTACT WITH YOUR SALES DEPARTMENT GONE?"

I recited this theme-song title and its lyrics in many of the newsrooms of both the radio and tv stations I visited across the country.

You who have read this certainly must admit that news is the Number One sales commodity of both radio and tv. I won't even argue the point with you. I know I'm right!

I remember the days, as news director of the newsrooms I supervised — and the same is true of most newsrooms in stations the country over — when we always had a member or two of the network or o. & o. — station sales staff sitting around the newsroom with their feet on a desk, saying:

"Hey you guys! Whadda ya got in the way of a news package that I can go out and sell?"

The gang of us in the newsroom would descend upon the guy (or guys), cook up a package if we didn't have one already cooked up, give him the pitch — and he'd go out and SELL it!

So I told this story a month ago to a good friend of mine directing news for a regional network on the West Coast. "Hell, Johnny," he said, "We're 90% sold with our news!" I quickly remembered what my favorite network salesman — Edgar Kobak — said under a similar circumstance:

"So what? Why aren't you 100% sold?"

I continued to press my point. He finally admitted a salesman from his outfit hadn't visited his newsroom for many a month. In my book, it's the "missing link." Sure, there's one net that has a salesman of news and public affairs assigned directly to its news and public affairs staff—and he's doing a top notch job.

Question: "Only one?"

I am also reminded of a recent conversation with the producer-moderator of a current "news quiz" on one of the national nets:

"Johnny," this person said to me, "when are you going to find a sponsor for my program?"

This was the first time my friend had indicated I might be of assistance, so I began to explore the problem.

"Who's assigned from network sales to work with you on your show?" I asked.

(Stand by for a ram!)

"Network salesman?" my friend queried. "I wouldn't give you a dime a dozen for the best of 'em! I'm gonna sell MY show MYSELF!"

End of story — I give up!

But I'll never give up trying to sell Management the importance of news and public affairs programs as both prestige and sales factors. The person I've just referred to is by no means representative of newsguys and dolls in radio and tv. No. not even representative of radio/tv producers. So I'll con-

Chinese Torture—Or, Com'ls Can Be Fun

By JOHN KAROL
(V. P. in Charge of Network Sales, CBS Radio)

From your youthful reading of the pulps, you undoubtedly remember the Chinese trick of causing a drop of water to fall on the victim's head with regular frequency over a long period of time.

This, apparently, was tremendously effective, bringing forth complete confessions or simply driving the more stubborn victims crazy.

(You can sense how slyly I am going to turn this into a recital of the unique advantages of radio).

For what the torture method achieved, it did by frequency of impression with a low cost medium —in this case, water.

Before closing the circle and making (I hope) the point, I want to point out that the modern way of impressing people need not be torture. This is a problem—in fact, an opportunity—for the advertising agency. Commercials can be fun; they can be informative; they can even be both.

But to close the circle—national frequency in advertising can best be achieved through the use of network radio. And, just as important, it can be affordable frequency. For our medium is low in cost, like the water used by the Chinese.

This fact of affordable frequency is increasingly important for two reasons. First, there are more and more products of high quality competing for the same consumer dollar. Secondly, the costs of other media continue to rise. It is admirable advertising to be represented in a big nighttime tv show every other week. I am sure the impact is great. But this is no substitute for talking to people day after day. This is the function of radio in an advertising plan—the ability to supply affordable frequency.

Frequency vs. Imagery

I have been guilty of employing the "affordable frequency" phrase with some frequency, but I like to think that I am performing a public service in so doing. Running concurrently with my campaign has been the "imagery transfer" strategy of my compatriot-in-sound at Rockefeller Plaza.

I am in wholehearted agreement with the concept, but I detect a trend toward the use of the quick announcement to create the transfer, and I think that this is getting less than full value from radio—especially in terms of today's highly competitive market.

Whether a manufacturer is dealing in canned goods or cars, he is finding more competition from more products of comparable quality in the same fields. In his effort to top his competitors, he is using a great deal of high priced picture advertising. It certainly is to his advantage to amortize the cost of these ads by using low cost radio to reproduce the printed images in the minds of listeners. But these reproductions do not, in themselves, constitute advertisements.

They must be carried further to include the points of product superiority; the "how to" copy; the invitation to try and buy.

In spite of network radio's relative economy, I think it is wasteful only to transfer an image when there is so much more that should be done to create the desire to purchase. And this is basically the difference between an announcement and an advertisement.

If you will accept the idea of the advertisement, let me proceed with what an advertisement on the air should be, and should not be.

Capitalizing on the intimacy and believability that can be created with the voice alone, it should present the case for the product in an orderly, sincere and imaginative manner. I don't believe an advertisement in sound needs to scream any more than an advertisement in print needs to scream visually. And just as white space often can add so much to the advertisement in print, so too, can the sound equivalent increase the effectiveness of an ad in radio.

It is an unfortunate fact that during the years when network radio was something less than fashionable, many of the best commercial writers took their talents to television. The effectiveness of network radio suffered.

There is an interesting footnote to this. During these same years, local radio was quite fashionable. And many smaller agencies, with little tv billing, were turning out ingenious and effective advertisements in sound for their local clients. The result was that the selling power of local radio never lost recognition.

Network radio is now rapidly regaining its stature—attracting able commercial writers. They are transferring images with sound. And they are also creating advertisements rather than announcements for the more effective selling of products and services.

TV SNEAK PREVIEW ALL SET FOR ISRAEL

Tel Aviv, July 9.

Negotiations on the introduction of television have been going on in Israel for the past four years. A U.S. corporation has been interested in a setup for the small country, being ready to finance the installation of a tv station on a private basis, with commercial programs modeled on American schemes. The Israeli Government has so far declined to grant licenses for private radio or television stations, as broadcasting is a state monopoly, with license fees paid by each owner of a set through the postal administration. TV, it is felt by the State of Israel, should not be introduced before the authorities did not command the means to set up a State-owned tv.

A limited beginning will now be made at the Home and Garden exhibition at Beit Dagon near Rishon Le Zion. By arrangement of the Agricultural and Development Exhibition Co., owners of the exhibition grounds, with the Radio Corp. of America, equipment has been shipped from New York especially for this exhibition. A tv camera will relay in closed circuit to several sets dispersed in the ground for public viewing. Various entertainments will be televised as well as instructive material, and visitors will be able to see themselves projected on the 21-inch screens.

It is well possible that this modest beginning will open the way for tv in general and that it will eventually gain a foothold in Israel, when the authorities will somewhat relax the stiff regulations on broadcasting and abandon the idea of an absolute monopoly.

BBC In New Pact On Artists' Fees

London, July 9.

An agreement negotiated between the BBC and the Variety Artists' Federation has just come into operation. It covers payment for artists during rehearsals, outside broadcasts, pre-recording and live performances, as well as for telerecordings of BBC-TV programs for transmission by tv outfits overseas.

For rehearsals prior to performance day, artists will receive a standard fee of $6 a day with overtime for rehearsals exceeding six hours. The performance fee is to be negotiated between the BBC and the artists or their agents, and the performances may be either live or pre-recorded. A minimum performance fee is to be fixed in further discussions between the BBC and the VAF.

For shows repeated on BBC-TV on telefilm, the artists will receive 50% of their original performance fees, but any recorded repeats, not exceeding two, must be given within 12 months of the first transmission. For telerecordings sent to overseas tv organizations, the artist will receive either 100% of their original performance fees in respect of world rights outside the UK, except in European countries where tv outfits are members of the European Broadcasting Union.

An Industry Leader Pinpoints 5-Pronged Agenda For Future

By HAROLD E. FELLOWS
(President, National Ass'n. of Radio-TV Broadcasters)

Washington.

I believe that the past year has been one of the most outstanding in broadcasting history in terms of accomplishment and fulfillment of the industry's responsibilities to American society.

Let us consider some of the milestones we have passed since VARIETY last took stock of the state of our industry. It was not long ago that the Cassandras wrote off radio as a primary medium of communications. The American people did not agree, however, and the passing months have seen strong growth in every index by which we measure the acceptance of radio.

The number of radio receivers in this country reached the staggering total of more than 140,000,000 — half of all the sets in the world. Advertisers now are approaching an annual investment of half a billion dollars—an alltime record —to bring their messages to the vast radio audience. We have also witnessed strong growth in recent months of the great radio networks, which now are looking forward to a season of exciting new programming. FM broadcasters have also surged forward and we now are at the point where applicants complete for licenses to serve the myrial audiences for this medium.

What do these figures measure? I believe that they reflect the fact that the American public is pleased with the programs and service that radio broadcasters have developed to fit their changing needs.

The growth measurements for television, of course, have continued to be a phenomenon unmatched in the history of communications or entertainment. This has been a year in which single programs were produced at a cost of half a million dollars and were seen by audiences of 100 million or more. This year saw the number of television sets owned by the public exceed 40 million—an investment of billions of dollars made by the people in the faith that American free broadcasting will bring them the service they want. We have seen a great extension of network service and now are entering a phase of still greater competition which mean a wider and more varied choice of nation-wide programs for larger numbers of viewers.

These are a few of the accomplishments of American broadcasters in the past year, and I believe that much credit is due them. I hope, though, that I have not given the impression that because it has been a year of fulfillment that it has been a year without serious problems, many of which still remain. Broadcasters have had many critics over the years, some constructive, some destructive. Recently we have witnessed the development of a new breed — perhaps I might call him the sour grapes critic. This is the person who uses the very success of broadcasting—the fact that it is doing a good job and winning ever greater public acceptance — as evidence that broadcasters are complacent or that they place profit above their responsibility to the public. That they are, in short, "fat cats."

A Look at The Record

This sort of blanket indictment of our industry is as unfair as it is untrue. Let's look at the record. The FCC reports that as of the beginning of last year—the latest date for which figures were available—186 of the 442 television stations reporting, or 42%, had operated at a loss during the previous year. This figure includes UHF stations and stations that went on the air during 1955. If we consider only those VHF stations which had been on the air for more than a year, the figures still give the lie to the unfair indictment. There were 292 such stations and 92 of them — nearly one third — lost money.

The figures for radio tell a similar story. Of 2554 AM radio stations reporting for the same period, 663, or 26%, operated at a loss for the 12-month period.

The idea that a broadcasting license is a ticket for a ride on a gravy train is demonstrably false. This is an industry of strong, healthy competition and it has been those broadcasters who risked great sums and served the public best who have justly shared in its prosperity.

What will the next year bring to broadcasting? I would say that cautious optimism would be the proper outlook. We can expect continued growth and improvement in service particularly if we can accomplish these things:

1—Contain the continuing threat of invasion of the frequencies reserved for free broadcasting.

2—Achieve more reliable audience measurement methods.

3—Help improve coverage by helping to improve the situation in allocation of frequencies.

4—Extend the benefits of automation.

5—Maintain a climate conducive to growth by resisting restrictive legislation.

More Canadian TV'ers

Ottawa, July 9.

Canada's west will get three and Quebec province two new television stations through licenses recommended in Ottawa by the board of governors of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. The board recommended (and the federal Transport department will grant the licenses if it follows standard procedures) licenses for tv stations in Red Deer, Alberta; Prince Albert, Sask.; Swift Current, Sask., Matane, Que.; Three Rivers, Que.

Board also recommended acceptance of the application for a radio broadcasting license from Marlene Beaudoin, 21-year-old daughter of Rene Beaudoin, former Speaker of the House of Commons. Femme's station will be located at Thompson, site of a big mining development in northern Manitoba.

To Each His Own

By OLIVER TREYZ

(V. P. in Charge of ABC Televison Network)

Just after World War II ended, a pleasant fellow named Eddy Howard eased his way through the lyrics of "To Each His Own." He sang about the inevitable you-for-me and me-for-you situation which prevails when the "right" boy finds the "right" girl. It made the hit parade many times.

Network Television has sung a different song. The lyrics have rhapsodized the wonderful medium, its impact and reach, its efficiency and its power of demonstration. But in the verse, the words have suggested "spread the risk... disperse the advertising message... buy into several shows." That is one way of looking at it. There is another.

If you have confidence in your bank, you are likely to do your banking business there every week. If you have had success with one make of car, you will buy the same make again. There are very few men I know who have more than one wife at a time, or who are part of a "participating marriage," or who have "alternate spouses." There are many shared marriages between television programs and advertisers, but there are also a large number of "old fashioned" unions. And many of those happy, regular, every week advertiser-program combinations make their home at ABC Television.

In the coming season, for example, ABC-TV has now sold more every-week advertisers than either of the other networks. Twenty-one half-hours per week of ABC's evening schedule will find the same advertiser, with the same program, in the same time slot, every week. And there are many reasons for this.

Some of these stem from the nature of the sales and program philosophy of ABC. Long ago ABC made the point that we believe in regularity of programming as the essential "other factor" (apart from program quality) which builds and holds audiences. Interruptions are not welcome when habits are involved. All you have to do is look at the "before and after" ratings of a show like "Twenty-One" when the regular scheduling has been interrupted by a "special show." And you can find it in the ancient history of television when Ed Sullivan gained the final audience ascendance over the "Colgate Comedy Hour" when that program made the mistake of taking a summer hiatus.

It's That Continuity

So, ABC programs and plans for continuity of programming, and advertisers recognize that this has a parallel in continuity of advertising.

No less than half of our evening schedule will have every-week advertisers selling their products, services or corporate images to the public through complete sponsorship of regular, every-week programs. These advertisers have sound reasons for making their television investments on ABC-TV parallel the programming philosophy of ABC-TV.

Network television has mass, national, simultaneous impact. Network television is made up of a schedule of programs which feed each other and feed off each other. Network television implies regular scheduling and continuity of programming.

No less network television advertising may profit from these same points. Seventeen separate ABC-TV advertisers (at this writing) propose to do just this next season. This contrasts with 12 different nighttime advertisers on CBS and 11 on NBC with every-week full sponsorship.

Back for another season on ABC is Skippy Peanut Butter's "You Asked For It." Here is a specific example of a program which by dint of every-week advertising, coupled with imaginative selling commercials has moved and continues to move mountains of peanut butter.

Kaiser Industries has just purchased every-week exposure on ABC-TV in the Sunday 7:30-8:30 p.m. period for "Maverick," a quality Warner Bros. western. Kaiser, a vast corporation with many stories to tell, has chosen to do so on a regularly-scheduled, continuous basis. Philip Morris' "Mike Wallace" is yet another every-week Sunday night advertiser on ABC-TV.

On Sunday evening alone there are three separate advertisers who will sponsor two full hours every week. On Monday, Ralston, Firestone and Plymouth sponsor another full two hours every week. "Telephone Time" for AT & T is, thus far, the lone Tuesday evening every-week program. But ABC's Tuesday is not yet completely sold. Wednesday night on ABC-TV finds three sponsors and three shows with full sponsorship, 52 weeks in the year. Two of these are brand new—the Bristol-Myers' western and Revlon's "Walter Winchell File." Three shows again on Thursday: Sylvania's "Real McCoys," Chevrolet's Pat Boone (one of the brightest stars ascending on any network), and Mennen's "O.S.S."

Friday night will bring still another trio of every-week-advertiser programs — Patrice Munsel, Frank Sinatra and "Date With The Angels." Two of these are brand new programs that we see as top-rated, which join this spring's debuted "Angels" that is already showing steady climbing powers. And finally, on Saturday, Lawrence Welk will be back for Dodge, an advertiser who is as pleased as Christmas punch with another 52-week renewal emphasising the selling power of every-week exposure.

We do not deny — in the face of facts — that alternate-week sponsorship of two or more shows is desirable in certain advertising cases. But if "reach" is one criterion by which to measure the effectiveness of a network television advertising campaign, then it must be entered in evidence that the average evening half-hour, every-week advertiser can expect to reach 46.7% of all U.S. television homes over a four-week span. This is reach which, when coupled with frequency of exposure, the continuum of advertising, plus the unmeasurable but invaluable factors of complete sponsor-program-star identification for exploitation, publicity, promotion and merchandising makes the soundness of the every-week network television buy completely self-evident.

With the average evening every-week-sponsored television program reaching almost half of all television homes over a four-week span, doesn't it seem reasonable to believe that we have reached an advertising turning point at which the advertiser will turn from program sponsorship in breadth to cover the market, to program sponsorship in depth to create buying attitudes?

The ABC-TV advertiser of next and coming seasons is in the happy position of knowing that his program will reach vast numbers of television homes in a single performance and even more over a span of time. The addition of new markets to the growing list of ABC affiliates assures this.

Sometimes it is difficult for those of us in media to clearly focus on an advertising problem with sponsor eyesight. But if I were an advertiser with network television intentions, I would seriously consider all the added values that are inherent in every-week commercial continuity.

The pattern that emerges from the examination of a body of information varies with the examiner. And of course, hindsight is always 20-20. But it is heartening to us at ABC-TV to recognize and realize that our programming concepts make advertising sense to so many advertisers.

tinue to sell news and public affairs — which prompts me at this point to put on my cap and gown and wave a caution signal:

To those of you entrusted with the creation of formats and the sale of news and public affairs programs, please always remember, if you will, that a corporation is just "people," lots of "people"—management, employees, stockholders and the public (buyers of the product). If you want to create, produce and sell a controversial type of program always bear in mind that there are two sides of a controversy—sometimes more. A "slanted" presentation always sticks out like a sore thumb. The larger a sponsoring company, the more "people" are involved, the more "people" may recognize the sore thumb sticking out, the more to disagree with you.

Let me stick my neck out on this point. But first let me put in a disclaimer for the NAM: "the following views are those of the writer and not, as far as he knows, those of the NAM — in fact, he has never discussed the point with anyone at NAM; he just doesn't talk about these things, except to the friends in the broadcasting industry":

Many of you reading this will recall the not too dated Alcoa-sponsored Ed Murrow, Ed Friendly-produced "See It Now" program concerning the late Senator McCarthy. With all due respect to Bill Paley, Doc Stanton and Sig Mickelson, had I been in any one or all of their shoes at the time I would have, on behalf of CBS, Inc., preempted the show and presented it on schedule as: "a CBS News and Public Affairs presentation — as a public service and in the public interest." Also, I would have alerted the Senator properly in advance, offered him equal time, plus full production facilities, to give rebuttal as he would have seen fit. (This is not meant to imply that Murrow and Friendly and/or CBS did not give the late Senator rebuttal time, for they did).

"How come?" you may ask, "isn't CBS, Inc., like Alcoa, made up of 'people,' as you put it?"

Certainly, I respond. But the "people" who make up CBS, Inc. — management, employees, stockholders included (and that counts me in!) — are in the business of "public service, convenience and necessity." In my opinion, it is CBS, Inc.'s right and duty to present controversial matter — all sides, to be sure—but the "people" who make up Alcoa — in my book — are "people" interested in production and sale of aluminum and its by-products, not controversial issues.

Perhaps there are among you some who may disagree. If so, I am certain that the editors of VARIETY will provide ample space for your views — and I'd like to hear the arguments, if any.

It would help me in my work!

Meantime, though, let all those in the broadcast industry help bring my two "theme-songs" into the Top Ten. Keep repeating them:

1. (Memo to Management): News is News, is News, is News!
2. (Memo to News Directors and News Staff): Where, oh Where, Has Your Contact Gone with Your Sales Department?

quent one generally becomes poorer.

A perfect show has never been produced. Perfection can be approached only by constant, critical attention to the imperfections, and subsequent effort to improve.

The best radio program in the world could never get off the ground unless it were backed up with proper exploitation and promotion.

As we started this article, so will we conclude it in stating that the show is the thing. It is our product. Since we are in show business, we will continually strive to build the best product in relation to current needs, and we will exploit that product to our listening audience to the greatest possible degree.

On Educ'l TV Front

Pittsburgh, July 9.

Educational tv station WQED, Ch. 13 here, has applied for permission to institute additional educational services on UHF Ch. 47, long assigned to this city but never operative. In the precedent-breaking move, WQED asked the FCC to allow in-school telecasting on Ch. 47 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. daily. It will also offer specialized educational services for industry, labor and the professions.

The dual operation, if granted, will enable Ch. 13 to double its present eight course in-school program, according to general manager John F. White. He said the cost of the UHF operation could come to about $40,000 a year, which compares with an estimated $850,000 for so-called closed circuit television in a much more restricted area.

Installation costs, according to White, would amount to $149,500, but he added that WQED now had $235,000 in the bank. He also said "it's reasonable to expect that such an experiment, which holds such promise for American education, will attract grants by national educational foundations.

Portents for TV Future

vage an hour or 90-minutes of topflight programming each night of the week keyed to their individual tastes—and I firmly believe that television delivers such a quota—then I think the medium is fulfilling its mission. That's probably a hotter percentage than you'll get on Broadway or anywhere else."

In only slightly over a decade, television has assumed something of a "fabulous invalid" status, with its trends "away from" rather than "toward" as it goes through a continuing process of discarding the "tv infirm." The virtual total demise of the week-to-week comic as a basic staple is but a single case in point. Perhaps even more unfortunate is the deterioration of the 60-minute live drama, with likelihood that NBC will reduce to but a single entry in the fall, now that Alcoa-Goodyear, Kaiser-Armstrong, Robert Montgomery and probably Lux are moving into new forms, new times or not at all.

The emergence of the musical stanza as a fullblown program commodity can perhaps be labelled as a trend—and here, as with everything else about a medium so eager to embrace and multiply someone else's ideas, it never rains but it pours.

One thing looms as a certainty: Another season of uneventful television could very possibly invite a major swing in sentiment toward subscription tv with its promises of major attractions. For if the general viewing public was forced to make its choice between the "dull for free" and a more rewarding show biz variant for a fee, there's more than a good chance a sufficient number will ante up for the latter.

The networks have been the first to recognize this potential threat toward their economic survival—but apparently are still up a tree in taking corrective measures.

of the blueprints. They have been rolling in ingots ever since.

The boys were discovered for radio by chance.

Mrs. Chance, tired of looking at the typical radio type faces, thumbed through a national magazine one day and ran across a picture of Mort and George standing around a lockerroom with several friends, endorsing some underwear.

"Now, there," she said, "there are some new faces!"

Well, sir, that did it! Five years later they wrote their first script, which was immediately rejected. And so, they went from one success to another until radio was completely destroyed.

For the last couple of years Mort and George have written for such stars of stage, movies and courtroom as Tallulah, Fred Allen, George Sanders, Perry Como, Groucho Marx, Bette Davis, Ethel Barrymore, Ethel Merman, Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis, and are currently building a four-hour show for the new medium which will soon replace television. The new medium will be called "Homevision," or in honor of its inventor "Patweaverision."

This is a revolutionary new medium, even, some people say, revolting. Unlike television, where the stars come into your home through the medium of the television screen, in "Homevision" the boys go even further. They actually bring the stars into your homes.

So, there it is. A thrilling saga of the two lads who've made bad. And they'll go on from here. As soon as this issue goes into print, George and Mort leave for Siam where they hope to be rejoined. Aloha, George, Sholom Aleichem, Mort. Goodbye, jobs. Hello, Unemployment Compensation.

Cantor Interviews Eddie

watched him a while ago on a 19½-hour telethon for the City of Hope, there's no mistaking his qualities as a great entertainer.

Q: How do you account for the dearth of new comedians?

A: There's no place for them to practice—no spots in which they may fail. In other words on a big television show they find themselves in a university without even a high school diploma. Years ago my contemporaries and I would play burlesque, small time vaudeville, big time, finally hit our stride on Broadway and Hollywood. Now whatever comics there are have only the Borscht Circuit of the handful of night clubs still around.

Q: This may be an old question—what is your opinion of Elvis Presley?

A: I believe he's being handled wisely and well. There's no telling at this point whether he has lasting qualities. The next six months will determine whether, like the Charleston, he was a passing fad or like Sinatra, he can go on forever.

Q: This reminds me—what about Sinatra?

A: Sinatra, today, is the most solid individual in all of show business. His albums are way up on the list, his rare night club appearances are complete sellouts, his pictures attract every member of the family, and his television shows will get top ratings. The guy has nothing to worry about except his health. He must not over-do. Even Rolls Royces break down.

Q: About you, Eddie, are you thinking of retiring?

A: If I did, Cantor, remember you'd starve to death.

Coleman Credo On AM Programming: Be Mature & Brief

Chicago, July 9.

Radio—if it's to continue as the wealthy stepsister of tv—has to pay greater heed than ever to mature and concise programming. That's the opinion of WMAQ's Howard Coleman, who for four months has been developing the viewpoint in his new post as the station's manager. (Fact that the NBC o&o reactivated the post this year after doing without it for a long stretch was itself indicative of the current healthy condition of radio).

Coleman feels it is important today to program features in short segments, because radio audiences do not switch on their sets by the clock as tv viewers do. "Radio would have found it necessary to streamline itself even without tv," he says, "because a change in the whole economy has brought about a more ambulatory public in the past decade, more outdoor living and more automobile traveling. Anyone dialing into the mid-part of a dramatic or public service show more likely than not will dial it out again. To get an audience today, it's necessary to be brief."

Strategy of brevity is that anything hard to take would be over in just a few moments. That's why so many commercials have been tolorated, for instance. Another advantage to segmented programming from the station viewpoint, is that the short episodes can be decked fore and aft with commercial spots.

Coleman's model for his theory is an hourlong nighttime strip on WMAQ titled "The Chan Show." Woven together under the single roof, as it were, are live and recorded music, news and weather announcements, Virginia Marmaduke's public affairs feature, a five-minute commentary by Sam Lesner, an occasional interview, and the personality of Gus Chan which weaves it all together. This kind of format, Coleman feels, keeps the segments from being mere tidbits in limbo and gives the hour a kind of variety stature. "Public affairs and service features won't have to sell themselves if presented as small features in the context of a bigger presentation," he says.

"Chan Show" rating showed an increase of 17% over the previous programming in the time period after its first month on the air. It's now in its 10th week. Canned music on the show is seldom contemporary pops, and the station in general inclines to orchestral and otherwise tasteful records. Virtually the only exposure given on the station to tunes of the Top Ten class is on Jim Mills' afternoon deejay strip.

"Jukebox programming will always have an audience," Coleman says, "but people look to radio for more than that. Especially at night, it takes more than a jolly personality spinning records to build audiences. The teenage group is not the buying market, and research shows that married couples in the 30-50 age group account for 68% of retail buying. Obviously, this presents a case for the more mature kind of show. There's not necessarily a difference between good programming and commercial programming."

According to Coleman, nighttime is the area that needs the most developing on radio. Buyers, he says, still think in terms of 7-9 a.m. and 4-6 p.m. because they're looking for exposure. "The night periods offer a better cost-per-thousand," he points out, "and the listeners are less likely to be casual. There's a mass tuneoff of tv after 9 p.m., and if radio gets only a tenth of that number it's a big boost."

Lastly, the new WMAQ manager feels that radio should involve more writing. Several of his station's major shows are being scripted, if not line for line at least with comprehensive fact sheets. On his station the free-wheeling, ad lib show is going by the boards, and the most important shows are mapped out in advance at production meetings.

"This approach to radio may cost a bit more money," Coleman says, "but it's foolish to trifle with the medium at a time when it's doing so well."

'TV Thru Monocle'

of Granada-TV, the company headed by Sidney L. and Cecil G. Bernstein. The Lancashire-Yorkshire territory is a close runnerup in audience potential to London, with around 4,600,000 viewers.

Almost from the day the commercial operation began, the BBC-TV have been overwhelmingly defeated in the battle of the ratings. With remarkable regularity, the commercial programmers have collared the top 10 positions among audiences capable of making the choice. American imports have made their mark on the network, although restricted by a gentleman's agreement, which is not applicable to BBC-TV. Among the successful U. S. shows on the commercial web have been "I Love Lucy," "Dragnet," "Gun Law," "Wyatt Earp," "Alfred Hitchcock Presents" and "Highway Patrol," all of which, at one time or another, have made the top 10. Yank programs on BBC-TV include the "Jack Benny Show," "I Married Joan" and "Amos 'n' Andy" and, more recently, "The Phil Silvers Show."

'Palladium' Show a Fave

A consistent smash on the commercial network has been Val Parnell's "Sunday Night at the Palladium," where his international showcase has been the venue for introing top international talent. This series, which regularly includes the U. S. import, "Beat the Clock," is again being rested during the summer months and is temporarily replaced by "Sunday Night in Blackpool." The formula remains the same—but the venue and the talent is varied. Other stout local entries have included "The Saturday Spectacular," which follows a lavish vaude layout, and Jack Hylton's series reuniting the famous Flanagan and Allen. Quiz shows have maintained their popularity, among the best being "The 64,000 Question," more recently "The 64,000 Challenge," "Double Your Money," "Spot the Tune," "Criss Cross Quiz" (known in the U. S. as "Tic Tac Dough") and "Make Up Your Mind."

Although the commercial tv operation broadly follows the standard American pattern, there is one outstanding difference between sponsorship in the U. S. and commercial tv in the UK. There are no sponsored programs in Britain which are designed by advertisers or their ad agencies. The entire responsibility for programming is that of the company which operates the station. Their position is akin to that of a newspaper publisher, who produces his sheet with his news and editorial features. The function of the advertiser in the newspaper is restricted to buying space and preparing his own layout; in British commercial tv, the advertiser buys time and prepares his own commercial. And that's the limit of his role.

The British Parliament, which devised this formula to meet considerable local opposition, has also made operational restrictions. A commercial must normally be limited to a maximum running time of one minute; and the amount of time sold for advertising in any one hour must not exceed six minutes—or 10% of the total viewing time.

That law, however, is not as rigid as it sounds because, in addition to straightforward commercials, program companies are allowed to run advertising magazines (which have a veneer of entertainment) and documentaries which are often little more than sponsored industrial films. Such is the universal acceptance of the new medium, however, that advertisers have found that these extended ad programs have a wide and popular appeal, with a two-fold effect: firstly, it emphasizes the value of tv as a medium, secondly, it provides a very lucrative source of additional income for the program companies.

Commercial tv, having surmounted so quickly its main obstacles, can only move to a stronger situation as time goes by. Its real strength, however, will be determined by its success in the international market. Programs initiated locally need a world wide audience to make the economic grade. As in feature films, Anglo-American co-production provides half the answer. Can native producers provide the other half?

Live Drama Going H'w'd, Sez Nickell

Hollywood, July 9.

Center of gravity of live video drama is definitely shifting here from N. Y., feels CBS-TV director Paul Nickell. Nickell, formerly a regular director for net's "Studio One" series in Gotham, is himself an example of the trend. After nine years with "Studio," he's been assigned to "Climax" and "Playhouse 90" series here and has moved his family out to set up permanent residence.

While present trend is westward, it will eventually level off and some live video drama production will remain in N. Y., Nickells feels. Growth of Hollywood in this field isn't entirely an unmixed blessing. In acting field especially, trek of N. Y. thesps to Coast threatens to glut the market, despite growth of job opportunities here, he contends.

Commenting on his years with "Studio One," Nickell admits the series has a tendency toward the "soft," inconclusive ending in story material. However, this story treatment is part of an effort to bring subtlety into video medium, not a deliberate campaign to be "arty," he feels.

Short Scene on Madison Ave.

By CARROLL CARROLL

"Well, fellas, the chips are down! Either we can come up with a guest who can get us some votes on the Trendex or we rip the buttons off our collar points and go straight."

"Let someone else come up with a name this time. I thought of Khrushchev."

"You gonna slap us in the chops with Khrushchev everytime a guest problem comes up?"

"Listen! I took the chance of getting my name on every list in the business just mentioning Khrushchev's name. How dangerous does a guy have to live? I was the guy who had the guts to say Khrushchev when most of you peapickers were even scared to say Chiang Kai Chek. Geez! I can remember when we could have a meeting to pick a few guest stars without everyone running the risk of facing a Congressional Committee. What happened to all the good old guest names we used to talk about and try for and never get? I mean names like Gary Cooper and Spencer Tracy and Greta Garbo. And speaking of them, I'd like to toss a name into the fan and see which way it flies."

There was a silent moment as everyone waited for the next stroke of genius from the brain that dared to think of Khrushchev.

"How about Bing Crosby?"

"Well, that's the key to Letdownville. Actors are out!"

"Crosby's a singer."

"He got an Oscar for acting. And maybe we could get him to do both . . . act and sing . . . and start a trend back to entertainment."

"Okay if you want to start trends. We already started one with Khrushchev. Let's stick to that for a while. Crosby's got nothing to do with politics . . . except when he talks about the music business. Besides actors and singers don't cop any ratings anymore. People have seen acting and singing. We've got to get statesmen. That's what folks want to see now."

"Yeah. Just when I was getting used to adult westerns, they're replaced by statesmen! What a business!"

"And we started it with that Khrushchev! Till we came along he couldn't get himself arrested."

"Then they come up with Tito!"

"So now I say Bing Crosby. Bing'd say as much about politics as Tito did."

There's Cott Beverage, Too

"Forget Crosby! They're dickering for Nehru?"

"What's that? A soft drink?"

"You're thinking of Nehi!"

"I happen to know Nehru won't work unless he gets a piece of the package."

"How about that! All these guys are getting residual happy. They won't work live."

"I hear Nasser's forming his own corporation and plans to produce-direct and write a series called 'Little Egypt.'"

"'Little Egypt!' What kind of a title is that?"

"You kids kill me! No show biz background. All 'Little Egypt' did was put over the Chicago World's Fair."

"My mother took me there in '33 and I didn't see any 'Little Egypt'!"

"Not '33. I'm talking about '98. And no mother takes a kid to see 'Little Egypt'!"

"If 'Little Egypt's' such a great title why don't we buy it?"

"We're not looking for a series. We're looking for someone to do one lousy guest-shot. Keep your eye on the ball will you?"

"Well, I figure, we always gotta think how we'll cash-in on a guest if he clicks. Which reminds me . . . I think of Khrushchev but does anyone in the booking department sew him up with options? No! What an organization we need!"

"Will you forget Khrushchev . . . and Crosby!"

"How about Queen Elizabeth's husband . . . what's his name . . . you know . . . Prince Phillip. He's a good looking guy. He'll get the gals."

"What's about that British dialect of his?"

"We could have a translator do a simultaneous translation just like we did with Khrushchev."

"I don't feel it. The British are too cold."

"Hey, fellas, how about a Supreme Court Justice like, maybe Warren?"

"After what they did to duPont! Are you on the junk or something? Think straight will you, we only have a few weeks."

"Okay. Want something hot and Spanish? How's about Franco? And he'll get laughs with that funny cap he wears. I mean the one with the tassel."

"Now you're talking. Believe me, laughs are due to come back. Wait and see. It's just comedians that are dead. I told the chief yesterday, there's nothing wrong with laughs. It's just that comedians killed them."

"Cut it out with the laughs. I got it!"

"Well, here comes Khrushchev again. This time I suppose it's Mao Tse-tung. He's unacceptable to The American Laundry Assn."

"Ah back off. This time it's bigger than Khrushchev. It's got laughs! It's got pathos! It's got scope! It's got politics!"

"Try to hold the thought a minute will ya. I'm just thinking off the top of my head but how about John Foster Dulles?"

"You think the client won't got for remotes. Now will you shut up and stop interrupting. This idea I have has everything. It's big! Big! Big! Big!"

"Thank you Ed Sullivan. All we want is a guest shot for one show."

"That's what I am talking about!"

"You make it sound like the biggest thing since King Forouk!"

"That's who it is: King Farouk!"

"What an idea! He's been out of work just long enough to be hungry. And when he's hungry . . . man that's a hunger!"

"I told you guys I had it, didn't I!"

"By God, kid, you've done it again. King Farouk. What an idea. With Khrushchev and Farouk in one season, kid, you'll make Second Assocate Vee Pee before the first of the year."

"Just let's see that the booking department gets options on him. That's all."

There's Always A Market For Good Comedy Writers

By LEONARD B. STERN

In the past few months, the writers of television comedy have received unprecedented attention from the press of the nation. Unfortunately, it was not what the comedy writers had written this season, but what they would not write next season, that made them newsworthy.

All the articles, even those that appeared in the trade publications, propheisied a year of unemployment for the majority of comedy writers. The critics, anxious to prove that they had not been victimized once again by the perennial rumor of unemployment for comedy writers that crops up every May and goes back into hibernation come September, had collected considerable evidence to support their ominous predictions. The most salient points were these: One: the viewers were not responding to comedy as they had in the past. Two: the number of comedy shows, owing their identity to name comedians, rescheduled for the fall had dwindled to a precious few. Three: indifferent to comedy, the networks, for the first time since the inception of tv, had not seen fit to develop any new comedy programs. They had placed the emphasis on variety programs built around top name singers. Four: comedy writers themselves were bemoaning their fate in voices of loud desperation. The writers interviewed, agreed that 1957 might be a good year for wines, but a bad one for comedy writers.

There is no questioning the accuracy of the above listed points, but I do question the interpretation of them and the conclusion reached. I do not believe, as the critics do, that the comedy writer's future is in jeopardy. To the contrary, I believe the comedy writer will be in as much demand next season, if not more so, than he has been in the past.

In diagnosing the situation, the critics and the writers who corroborated the critics reacted without pause for reflection. They assumed inasmuch as the name comics and their shows had met with public apathy and network indifference, it naturally followed that the comedy writer had to suffer a similar fate. In my opinion, the apathy and indifference extend only to comedy as we know it—comedy built around the specific talents and personality of a comedian—not to the comedy writer himself. The failure to make this distinction, to recognize that comedians and comedy writers operate independently of one another, committed the critics to their erroneous conclusion.

If they had divorced the comedy writer from the comedian, they would have undoubtedly realized that while the comedian is in a temporary eclipse, there is a ready market of an estimated 15 to 20 variety shows featuring vocalists anxious to make use of the talents of comedy writers. Latest returns show that seven of these programs —"Big Record," Pat Boone, Eddie Fisher, Gisele MacKenzie, Guy Mitchell, Patrice Munsel, Frank Sinatra have indicated that comedy will be an intregal part of their format. I feel safe in speculating that the others will also follow the precedent established by Dinah Shore and Perry Como, and incorporate generous portions of comedy into their shows.

Therefore, any comedy writer who can make the transition from writing for a comedian to preparing material for a singing host or hostess who will have to be amusing as well as musical, will find a plethora of available assignments.

TV In Italy Kicks Up Some Fancy Spectrum Capers

By ROBERT F. HAWKINS

Rome.

The big show biz "news" this past year has been television. The 500,000 total of registered set-owners throughout Italy at the end of this country's second video year is way above hopes, topping even the net's most optimistic estimates. The total is expected to take another jump when the current extension of the network to all corners of the peninsula and to the islands of Sicily and Sardinia is completed.

The immediate effect of this rapid expansion has been twofold: it has anticipated commercial television programming, which is now expected to go into effect at an early date; and it has brought about a first drop ($3) in the yearly subscription fee every video set-owner is required to pay under the local government-subsidized setup.

The local tv boom has also had the familiar side-effects: the changes in living and entertainment habits, a drop in movie box-office take especially outside the big cities, newspapers' worries over a possible drop in their advertising revenue, projects for the setting up of independent stations (in Milan and Naples) sustained as public services and/or by advertising, etc.

A large television city ("Telecitta") is being built on the outskirts of Rome, relay stations are springing up the length of the boot, some of the unemployment slack from the film industry crisis has been taken up by the hungry new medium, and there is already talk of a second net and of color video; such are the signs of the times.

All TV Roads Lead to Rome

Telecasts average several hours per day, afternoon and evenings, with a varied fare of quiz shows, dramatic items, musical and comedy hours, and moppet programs alternating with newsreels, sports and other direct pickups. Though to date most shows emanate from Milan and Turin Studios, the trend is towards Rome, especially since the recent net expansion to the South. Eurovision is a standard feature, especially on widely popular football (soccer) games. Quality is generally recognized as excellent in image, uneven but vastly improved in programming. Though technicians claim that a well-adapted Yank set can do as good or better a job than a locally-constructed set, which needs no line adaptation, Italian and other continental set manufacturers have capitalized on consumer resistance to 'adapted" sets (and on higher tariff barriers for the Yank product) and come up with generally heavier sales.

Biggest single factor in the rapid rise of video in this country has been the quiz show, 'Lascia o Raddoppia," patterned after the U. S. "$64,000 Question" and expertly emceed by an American, Mike Bongiorno. He, the show, and its contestants have been grabbing newsspace and headlines for about a year on an almost daily basis, and the Thursday night stanza has deeply modified the Italian living pattern, even making film theatres pause for an hour a week while the quizzer is projected, in between film reels, on the movie screen. It is not surprising that RAI-TV, Italy's monopolistic radio-television network, plans to add several other quizzers to its roster soon.

1st of These Additions

With the set price hurdle temporarily licked via a drop to $150 for a 17-incher made by a pooled manufacturing group (ANIE), RAI hopes to vault another enemy, saturation, even before it is reached. A quiz potpourri called "Telematch" recently received its initial airing to good reactions. Program hence calls for diversification, first within the single net framework, then via a second network and an extension of telecast hours. It is probable also that with a further rise in set sales will come a further drop in the yearly fee, now down to some $25 per twelvemonth. Meanwhile, the high costs of expansion are being borne in part by the government (as the subscription fees are obviously insufficient to pay for RAI-TV's expensive plants and programs), and in part by the considerable radio advertising revenue, half of which goes into the video kitty. Commercials will soon add to the total, though what effect these will have on the local public (and on tv expansion) remains to be seen.

Math Can Be Fun

By EDWARD STANLEY

(Manager, Public Service Programs, NBC)

This Spring, NBC, in cooperation with the Educational Television and Radio Center, has produced sixty-five educational programs for the nation's educational TV stations. However, much light we may have shed in dark places, there is no question that we got some education ourselves.

The programs were in weekly series, half-hour daily, Monday through Friday, and ran for 13 weeks. Each one of the series dealt with a different area of man's interest and knowledge. The subjects were: American Literature, World Geography and Resources, Mathematics, American Government and the History of Opera. Pretty formidable. And made further difficult by the fact that although the general subject was the same each week, the show itself was always different. A different area of the same subject, and, except for the academician who was conducting the program, a new cast of characters. This was not quite like setting up five new shows a week, but it had some of that character nonetheless. It was necessary, also, for both producers and directors to have some understanding of the subject on camera, and we all were cracking books we hadn't looked at since college.

One potential sticks out like Mt. McKinley: This is the tremendous contribution which performing artists in many fields can make to Education, capital E. In this first experimental series we barely scratched the surface of the possibilities. Perhaps we were timid here, with the thought that professionals from the theatre might overbalance the professionals from the campus, or that we be accused of not being educational enough. If so, such fears were groundless. Professor Albert Van Nostrand, of Brown U., held his own very well in company of a galaxy of top personalities from the theatre. And there is no question that the theatre gave a new dimension and depth to the books which were under discussion. I think it would be impossible for any student to drowse while Julie Harris, James Daly and Ed Begley read from Walter Edmond's "Drums Along the Mohawk." Others who appeared in the American Literature series included Robert Preston, Bill McGuire, Alexander Scourby, Henry Hull Burgess Meredith, Joan Seberg, Bradford Dillman, Nelson Olmsted, Roddy McDowall, Jason Robards Jr., and Lois Smith.

I suppose there are limits to what the theatre can bring to education, but I don't think we are anywhere near them. This is not, in my opinion, entertainment, but an intensification of interest, and by this making the difficult more easily understood. This has never been possible through the printed page, except for illustrators and other graphic artists, but television does make it possible in every area of human thought. And makes it possible, too, for the great artist to enter every classroom. This is a new world, and a very exciting one.

Love That Mathematics

Having made this point, however, it is only fair to say that the mail response has been the best and the most heartening from a program which made no use of actors or performing artists of any kind; Indeed, it might be an understatement to describe Mathematics as anything but intellectual, so far as a mass audience is concerned. This was the program which we felt might have the lowest audience appeal and we stand corrected and reasonably humbled.

The letters of appreciation, of criticism and suggestion, ranged from farm wife who had only high school mathematics to a physics major, but no one seemed to be bored. The one I liked best (so far) read this way:

"Before seeing some of your shows I had had the opinion that Math had been the realm of a few geniuses who were always working out new theories which were dry and uninteresting, had no relation to life at all except for simple arithmetic, and were far beyond the comprehension of a poor soul such as I. But I have found out that Math in many of its aspects is one of the most fascinating subjects I know."

This is exactly the feeling which James R. Newman, the brilliant author and editor of The World of Mathematics, who conducted, and the disfinguished list of mathematicians who were his guests, were trying to instill in their viewers. The programs were off for the summer, to be resumed for another series in the fall. What we have learned we hope to put to use then. One thing I'm sure of. There will be stools in every show. They turned up in every program except perhaps the American Government, where leather chairs, swivel or straight, were the normal furnishings. I wonder why they aren't used in classrooms.

Earl Ebi, Lux producer, will be given broader executive duties on many of the 14 shows JWT originates in Hollywood.

The 'Basic' Of Toll-TV: 16,500,000 at 50c a Head

By ARTHUR LEVEY

(President, Skiatron Electronics & Television Corp.)

Entertainment industries throughout the United States are on the verge of dynamic expansion, probably the greatest in all history.

Millions of box offices in homes, made possible through Skiatron Subscriber-Vision and other toll-tv systems, will generate the explosive revenue-producing power for this certain growth—growth that will make new jobs, for "tens of thousands" of actors, actresses, musicians, dancers, and other entertainment employees; result in the making of more feature motion pictures; make possible production of more Broadway plays; solve serious financial problems for grand opera and ballet productions, and more than repair the damage caused to many professional and amateur sports by sponsored television's detrimental effect on gate receipts.

These somewhat sweeping statements are supported by the fact that Skiatron's toll-tv system is moving toward service to the public, as millions of persons know now as a result of published information relating to possible transfer of the Brooklyn Dodgers to Los Angeles and the New York Giants to San Francisco.

Talent's Stake

Job potentials through toll-tv for actors, actresses, musicians and other employees and performers in the entertainment business were emphasized in a resolution passed by the Hollywood A.F. of L. Film Council June 11. The Council, composed of unions and guilds representing more than 24,000 employees in the motion picture industry, urged the Federal Communications Commission to authorize large scale tests of toll-tv, declaring:

". . . it appears possible that subscription television service could revolutionize the entertainment industry, provide additional employment for tens of thousands of American workmen and give the public better entertainment, culture and education in the home than is possible with the present form of television, supported solely by advertising."

A note favoring toll-tv also was struck recently by Eric Johnston, President of the Motion Picture Association of America, Inc. Mr. Johnston, whose association represents the major motion picture production companies, said:

"I think pay tv could be a very beneficial thing for everybody."

Basic logic of such a stand shows clearly in results of a nationwide survey made by Alfred Politz Research, Inc., for Look Magazine. This research study and compilation shows that approximately 16,500,000 persons over 15 years old in tv households would be willing to pay 50 cents for a first run motion picture feature, without interruption by commercials. Such a showing, with the nationwide take for one night totaling around $8,000,000, the motion picture producer's share would be more than enough to cover all production costs. Income from showings of it in theatres and in the important foreign market would be all on the profit side of the ledger.

Results: more good motion pictures would be produced; more money would be made by motion picture producers, and there would be more jobs than ever before for actors, actresses and other employees of the industry. As Mr. Johnston said, all stand to benefit.

A similar situation obtains for Broadway plays and grand opera productions. The Politz survey showed approximately 16,500,000 persons 15 years of age or older living in tv households would pay 50 cents to see a Broadway play, without breaks by commercials. This would make it possible for a hit Broadway play to reap more income in one evening through a nationwide Subscriber-Vision telecast than such outstanding productions as "My Fair Lady" and "South Pacific" could take in during a full year in a single theater. This would result in many more plays being produced with top-level casts than is economically possible today.

As for grand opera, the Politz survey shows that more than 6,000,000 persons in the country would pay $1 for toll-tv performances by leading opera companies. The import of this to such organizations as the Metropolitan Opera Association is clear. Toll-tv would solve the Met's financial worries, as well as make it possible for millions of persons throughout the United States to hear the great music and see the cultural opera presentations for the first time.

Sports Potential

As for national sporting events, the Politz survey emphatically tells a similar story. It points toward great potential benefits for major league baseball, boxing and other outstanding sports events. The survey shows that 19,700,000 persons would be willing to pay $1 for a World Series game on toll-tv, and that 16,250,000 would pay that amount to see a heavyweight boxing championship on their own tv sets, without commercials.

This brings all of us interested in improving television programs and helping in expansion of entertainment industries to the question: "When?"

The recent decision of the FCC that it has the authority to authorize full scale trial operations of toll-tv was interpreted by analysts and news writers as a long step forward toward actual toll-tv operations. Skiatron is ready to move swiftly toward serving the public with outstanding programs of types not now available through over-the-air toll-tv broadcasts as soon as approval is granted by FCC.

Another major development, which insures Subscriber-Vision operations, however, is the processing of a low-cost new-type wire system over which the Skiatron system works economically and effectively. This new-type wire, developed by Skiatron TV, Inc., of which Matthew J. Fox is President, transmits three programs simultaneously over closed-circuit into the home of the subscriber.

The Subscriber-Vision system of coding and decoding of tv signals, with program selections made possible by use of an IBM-type electronic card, functions as Skiatron's alternative to over-the-air telecasting. Furthermore, Subscriber-Vision can be put into operation serving the public over the wire system without approval from any Federal agency. With it, the subscriber will be able to make a choice of any one of three programs at a given time—first-run feature motion picture, cultural program, Broadway play, grand opera presentation; a top spectator sport such as major league baseball, college or progessional football, or a championship fight,

ADVENTURE IN SHARPS & FLATS

By DAVID BROEKMAN

(Composer and Musical Director, "Wide, Wide World")

Each time I lift my baton and lead the splendid NBC Symphony Orchestra into the opening theme of "The Wide, Wide World," heralding an hour and a half of adventure and thrills for the millions of viewers, I feel that I am facing an adventure more exciting than any other composer and conductor of this electronic age.

For I embark on a journey which can only be compared to that of a helmsman steering 34 rowers in a frail canoe down unchartered rapids at terrifying speed for 90 minutes, with scarcely a moment in which to draw a breath.

If "Wide, Wide World" were a motion picture of the same length instead of a live television show, the musical background would require about three months of careful work, including 10 days of scoring sessions, each seven hours long.

But I write the score for "WWW" in five days—and nights. It is orchestrated in four, read through by the orchestra in one session and played by them during a two-hour dress rehearsal on the Sunday morning of the show.

Then, with no more preparation than this, it is performed on the air as part of a program of great complexity, since there are six or seven different segments which come from far-flung parts of the country, utilizing as many as 100 television cameras, and as many as 60,000 people in one show.

Any of the cameras can black out, any of the people can miss a cue, any scene can run shorter or longer than intended, planned and scored for.

The conductor must be alert for these changes, which come more frequently than are suspected. He must be able to communicate them instantly to his 34 musicians and they must be able to make the transition required in so smooth a manner that the right bar of music is always heard for the picture and action on the screen.

To achieve this "instantaneous synchronization," I must work with two different headphones, one supplying the outgoing sound of the program and the other hooked up to Central Control and feeding me the conversation and instructions of the New York director and all of the location directors.

At the same time I must keep one eye on the script and the other on the monitors showing me not only the picture being telecast, but the shots coming up next. I must instinctively be directing my score and bring forth a performance from the orchestra.

Background & Foregrounds

I am sure that if I ever tried to sort out these complexities while the program was on the air, I would stop cold and be irretrievably lost. Fortunately the orchestra and I have achieved a bond, a togetherness, which is almost psychic. We leap together over impasse, emergency, miscue and mechanical cataclysm. I cannot praise too highly the artists who comprise this orchestra.

On "Wide, Wide World" we supply not only musical background, but frequently musical foreground, as well. When the San Francisco Opera Ballet performs at the Golden Gate, they are actually dancing to music we are playing some 3,000 miles eastward. And when the Ringling Bros.-Barnum and Bailey Circus band blares forth from the winter quarters lot in Sarasota, we sneak in, in the same key, and steal the march away after the first few bars, because we are acoustically better balanced and more easily controlled.

If you could see the Saturday run-through for cameras of the program, when no music is used, you would realize how much the background score adds to the show, providing the illusion of authenticity and reality and an emotional impact which lifts the scenes from pedestrian coldness to something a great deal brighter and more dimensional.

And the score must do this without intruding, without becoming dominant. With the exception of those instances where it is intentional that the music is featured, it is my endeavor to keep the background so inobtrusive and so in key with the scene shown that it is not noticed at all.

No other task in music today is as challenging as this one, I feel sure. During the past two seasons I have written 40 hours of music—a staggering number of themes, on every possible subject. From frogmen treading water to vintners treading grapes, the gamut has included 100 Salt Lake City kids dancing to a ballet written and played in New York, a battalion of tanks thundering along to a march composed to fit the tempo and timbre of the clanking monsters, and a jam session on Brooklyn Bridge.

It has resulted in a long-playing album for RCA-Victor, made up of the most popular themes ("Wide Wide World"), a new piano concerto which had its genesis on the program, and a tone poem, "Four Cities of America," which grew out of my musical pictures of San Francisco, Salt Lake City, New Orleans and New York.

"Wide, Wide World" has provided me with wide, wide horizons as a composer and it has given me the opportunity to write music of America in all its infinite variety of people, places, celebrations and occupations.

Each fortnight I look forward to the new assignment, the new stories we will tell. Each Sunday we go on the air I am poised for adventure with an orchestra I am proud to lead.

Can. Faces Sun. News Blackout

Toronto, July 9.

With court hearings immediately scheduled for July, stoppage of Sunday newcasting from Toronto, whose CJBC (television) and CBL (radio) are the emanating English-language outlets to networks on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., will mean a shutdown of news programming across Canada, according to a CBC spokesman. Proposed Sunday news blackout follows action of proponents of the Lord's Day Act who have launched suit against the CBC (with CKEY, Toronto, included as a test-case against all privately-owned radio stations in Canada) and three Toronto dailies who have just launched Sunday editions, that the tv, radio and newspaper publishers are contravening the Lord's Day Act.

According to a CBC spokesman, the CBC will appeal an Ontario decision that would make the State-owned, taxpayers' corporation subject to the Lord's Day Act. This follows the action of Chief Justice J. C. McRuer of the High Court, who has refused the CBC application for a writ of prohibition regarding Sunday news broadcasts. (Same goes for Sunday newspapers, with Toronto publishing trio launching these in April but holding back their legal arguments until the July hearings in Toronto).

Ackerman as Exec Producer on 'Wally'

Hollywood, July 9.

Exec producer of new Gomalco "Wally and the Beaver" series is Harry Ackerman, inked last week by George Gobel and Dave O'Malley. Shooting on series, created and written by Joe Connelly and Bill Mosher, starts early in August, for Oct. 4 bow on CBS-TV. Filming will be a Republic lot, with Revue Productions to do below-line lensing.

Remington - Rand already has already signed for alternate sponsorship on series, first non-Gobel starring series mounted by Gomalco.

Koplin's Tired'

Mert Koplin, who's been producing both "64,000 Question" and "$64,000 Challenge" for Entertainment Productions Inc., has dropped his "Challenge" assignment (but retaining "Question") because he's "tired of working eight days a week."

Ed Jurist has taken over as "Challenge" producer.

Norfolk's Com'l 'U' in Major Bid As Educ'l TV'er

Norfolk, Va., July 9.

An educational tv experiment for the '57-'58 school year will be conducted by the Ford Foundation and the City of Norfolk, in conjunction with WVEC-TV, beginning in September. Involved are most of the city's secondary and elementary schools.

Under the plan, WVEC-TV, a commercial UHF station, will give the city's school system two hours of air time each school day, from 9 to 10 a.m. and from 1 to 2 p.m. In addition, station will provide complete camera and technical facilities, both for the telecasts and for a July summer workshop. Charge to school system will be $400 a month, covering both air time and all services. This is believed to be one of the few times a commercial tv station has attempted an educational experiment of this scope.

The experiment will involve nine city schools, five secondary and four elementary, and at least four subjects, spanning geometry to history.

Project will operate during its first year on a budget of about $112,000. The city is putting up half the operating funds and the Ford Foundation's Fund for the advancement of education, the other half, Seven other large cities and two midwestern states will participate on a similar basis in the experiment, aimed at determining the effectiveness of tv for teaching large groups.

Reviving An Old Refrain— Nighttime Radio The Best Buy

By DONALD H. McGANNON

(President, Westinghouse Broadcasting Co.)

"A rose is a rose is a rose is a rose," the late Gertrude Stein once wrote, and I must confess that when I first read it, I suspected that her needle was stuck.

Today, however, I find myself paraphrasing Miss Stein and repeating "A point is a point is a point," and so on into the night. The points I'm talking about are radio rating points, and we at the Westinghouse Broadcasting Co. happen to have the notion, considered quaint in some circles, that a rating point is a rating point, whether it's early morning, late afternoon or evening. I emphasize evening because that's what we're talking about, both here and in our new lateral programming concept, designed to bring new excitement to nighttime radio for listeners and advertisers alike.

Strangely enough, broadcasters have found agencies resisting what seems to be basic arithmetic. Time buyers who will gratefully take their place in a waiting list for a morning time availability won't even discuss a nighttime radio period that's drawing an audience very close to the morning audience in size.

Why not?

Part of the answer lies in history. Radio brought the American people exposure to and a taste for entertainment in the home by the greatest stars of the show world. When television brought these stars into the home with sight as well as sound, people naturally preferred the added ingredient, and radio lost audience, particularly at night, where television concentrated its big name attractions. Radio's best opportunities lay in the daytime, rather than against television's greatest strength. We set out to sell daytime radio—and concentrated so hard and succeeded so well that we tended to ignore other parts of the schedule.

As a logical result, the very people who are so thoroughly sold on daytime radio don't even want to talk about nighttime radio. After all, they maintain, nobody listens to radio at night; everybody watches television. At least, that was the story we heard before lateral programming. Happily, we now find some people willing to listen—and buy.

Nielsen certainly doesn't agree with the idea that everybody watches television all night every night. In a given week, Nielsen puts the cumulative nighttime radio audience at 29.7 million homes, not so very far behind the 33.7 million television homes Nielsen reports on the same cumulative basis for the same period. Even without figuring in a bonus for out-of-home radio listening, that's a pretty fair showing for nighttime radio.

The latest edition of the Cunningham & Walsh Videotown survey shows a steady upswing in nighttime radio listening since its low ebb in 1951, with 1956 listening more than 100% above 1951.

Furthermore, Pulse shows 10 to 15% more people per set in the evening hours than in the prime morning hours—and 30% more than in prime afternoon time. Moreover, the proportion of men listeners is greater in the evening than in the morning, or, for that matter, at any other time of day. And it's the men, you know, who are the prime earners.

On top of this, the nighttime audience is an unhurried audience, receptive to entertainment, receptive to a sponsor's message.

It all adds up to one conclusion —nighttime radio is a tremendous buy.

What do you do, then, to sell it?

Go back to the big name shows? Television is doing this better than radio can, and has the big budgets to support such shows.

Sports and other specialized local shows? They'll get audience, all right, but a specialized audience, and that only sporadically. They won't deliver a broad audience, on a continuing basis.

Cut the rates? If what you're selling isn't worth 100 cents on the dollar, it probably isn't worth 50 cents on the dollar either. The answer is to improve the product, not cut the price.

Going Behind The Scenes

Our emphasis is on product betterment, our aim is to improve rather than degrade the medium. The concept is called Lateral Programming. This consists of programming seven nights a week, on a common theme, and within that framework, each program is a different expression of that theme. This concept is embodied in a show titled "Program PM," now in operation on our five clear channel, 50-kilowatt radio stations. The theme is "behind-the-scenes," in music, news, the community, politics, the nation, the world. It combines flexibility with regularity. Its program components are integrated in a fixed-position schedule, so that the listener who likes what he hears on Tuesday at 8 can be sure if he tunes in again next Tuesday at 8, he'll hear another feature in the same vein.

Lateral programming meets a number of specific requirements that we thought had to be met. It has name value, it is primarily local, it is basically entertainment with enough information to satisfy audience hunger for provocative nighttime programming. Above all, we think it is exciting to both audiences and advertisers.

We hope our lateral programming will stimulate similar planning and action on the part of other broadcasters. Nighttime radio is a fertile area for development, but its full potential will not be realized until everybody "gets into the act."

Our faith in the future growth of nighttime radio is great—so great, in fact, that we're setting out almost simultaneously to develop not just one after-dark radio audience but two of them, and to make them such solid buys that no advertiser can resist them. Through lateral programming, we are going after the AM audience that enjoys high quality, mass appeal features. And on our four FM stations, we are about to launch a full scale drive for the specialized, fine music audience.

These are our answers on nighttime radio in the television era.

Annual Report

As television's most rewarding season came to an end, two events clearly summarized the scope of CBS Television's contribution to this young and growing medium.

The final Nielsen report of the October-May season found CBS Television broadcasting all of the 10 most popular programs. The final honors of the year—the two Robert E. Sherwood Awards for network programs "dealing with freedom and justice"—were both given to CBS Television.

This achievement climaxed a season which saw intense network competition for a nationwide television audience that reached a new peak of over 40 million families. It was a season which found the average family spending even more time watching television than the year before. And because most of this time was spent looking at CBS Television, the network consistently maintained a position of leadership throughout the year:

It gathered the largest audience for a single entertainment program in the history of television.

It won a total of 122 programming awards for entertainment and public service programs.

It had a monthly average of 8 of the 10 most popular nighttime programs and 7 of the 10 most popular daytime programs.

It delivered 25 per cent larger average nighttime audiences and 30 per cent larger average daytime audiences than its closest competitor.

It earned a 20 per cent larger investment from advertisers than the second leading network.

Television brought more Americans the kind of entertainment they enjoyed most. It continued to communicate the kind of information essential for a clear understanding of the events and issues of our time. It provided American business with its most effective advertising medium. And it delivered the largest audiences in advertising history for its products and services.

BMI Continuities for Practical Programming

BMI continuities are mailed to BMI-licensed stations on a monthly basis. Filling a vital role in the daily programming logs of stations in every section of the country, BMI scripts are perfectly suited both to the station with a small staff, limited facilities and curtailed budgets, as well as to the large operation with full orchestra and complete program staff.

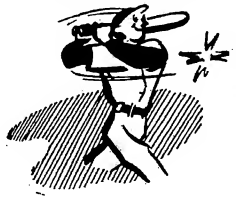
• THE AMERICAN STORY

Prepared by BMI in association with the Society of American Historians. Each fifteen-minute program written by an outstanding American historian, expert in the period or subject . . . the fascinating and inspiring stories of our country from the age of discovery to the age of the atom. Top prestige programming.

• THE BOOK PARADE

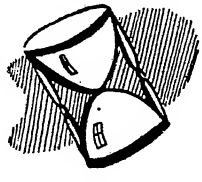
Sparkling 15-minute scripts written by the most prominent of literary figures. This series is being hailed as "a conspiracy against ignorance" and has skyrocketed into national prominence. Another BMI script for top prestige programming.

• MILESTONES



Full half-hour presentations . . . simple to do, saleable, excellent listening. Usually four per month, sometimes five. Each script commemorates a special date or event of national importance.

• MEET THE ARTIST

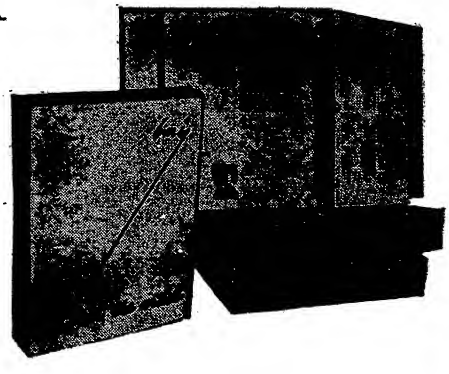


Three-a-week 15-minute scripts loaded with factual biographical material about recording artists in the public favor. Fills a vital need in areas where such data is not easily available. Highly commercial for any station.

• STORIES FROM THE SPORTS RECORD

Eye-witness accounts of dramatic action on the baseball diamond, in the prize ring, on the gridiron and elsewhere . . . A complete script package available three times weekly as a 15-minute presentation.

• ACCORDING TO THE RECORD



Timely facts about the unusual, with musical cues that fit neatly into a dynamic 5-minute show . . . Highly commercial . . . Available 7 times per week for 52 weeks. Now in its 12th successful year.

BMI makes no charge to its licensees for this program service. Each script is designed as a practical program and its use for commercial sales is encouraged.

Your Station Program Department should be receiving these script packages regularly. If not, please write to BMI's Station Service Department for sample scripts and complete details.

VARIETY

By ABEL GREEN

"This is one of the best show biz memoirs yet. And that's saying plenty for 'Take My Life,' by Eddie Cantor, who collaborated with Jane Kesner Ardmore on his authoritative, anecdotal and fact-packed autobiography. . . . Through the lives and times of our great American showmen the history of the amusement industry has been written, appraised and projected—each, of course, from some particularly subjective perspective. But none packs the authority, stature and 'heart' of Cantor's professional and private life. . . .

" 'Take My Life' in a large measure will recall the days of the years of many a reader's own life. It's that kind of a book—rich in memories, replete with readability, loaded with names that made news and still are news. Cantor's career and the people he encountered don't have to be explained. There is spontaneous audience reaction. The reader's personal reflexes will compel audience identification or vis-a-vis reappraisal.

"It's a very readable book, a fountain of intimate information, and will be as much a source and reference work for countless anecdota as it is just good reading."

New York Herald Tribune, July 7, 1957

N. Y. Herald Tribune:

By JOHN K. HUTCHENS

"An old man of 36 when he first was moved to write an autobiography, the young Eddie Cantor of 64 quite rightly has been bringing things up to date. After all, 1929 was not just yesterday and, well, let's see now. The banjo-eyed one was then playing in 'Whoopee,' Florenz Ziegfeld flourished, and those of us who were alive at the time, and remain so, have seen a few changes in the interval, have we not? Not so many changes in Mr. Cantor, though, it is agreeable to report. . . .

"What a career it has been, from small-time vaudeville to Broadway and on to Hollywood, radio and TV, and here it all is, poverty, wealth, debts, recovery, glory and corn. Very good, Eddie."

THE "EYES" HAVE IT!

THE CRITICS ALL AGREE

EDDIE CANTOR'S "TAKE MY LIFE"*

Indianapolis Times:

CANTOR'S BOOK IS TOP CHOICE

"Nominated For Best Book of the Week . . . Best of the Month, in fact . . . better yet, very possibly Best Book of the Year in the field of autobiography—Eddie Cantor's 'Take My Life.'

"It will be pleasantly nostalgic for many, a volume of chuckles for others, but for all it will be an autobiography of a man whose career has reflected the American way of life from nothing to top banana—and all of us can be glad that it was possible and that he has been able to tell his story so well with Mrs. Ardmore's assistance."

San Francisco News:

By ALMA OBERST

"Reading Eddie's Cantor's life story is a little like reading a book about a member of the family. This guy I grew up with. Our family listened to his radio programs, went to his movies—the Saturday morning kid show in our neighborhood was called the 'Whoopee Club' from one of Cantor's songs. We all knew Eddie, and Ida, and the five girls.

"This is the real story of the guy who could get so wrapped up in helping other people that he literally gave the shirt off his back one night in Philadelphia—also his tie, shirt and pants. He had to borrow a bathrobe to get back to his hotel."

N. Y. Morning Telegraph:

CANTOR'S 'TAKE MY LIFE' CALLED BEST MODERN THEATRICAL LIFE STORY

By GEORGE FREEDLEY

"The best modern theatrical autobiography I've read in years is 'Take My Life,' by Eddie Cantor and Jane Kesner Ardmore. It ranks with Fred Allen's 'Much Ado About Me,' which has been a recent best seller. . . . The Cantor-Ardmore volume gets deep down into the heart of the man as well as of the comedian. He has a great heart and that makes this both a moving and an interesting volume which gives it a wider human interest than the average theatre biography, and it lacks the sensationalism inherent in certain others. You can't go wrong with Eddie Cantor and Miss Ardmore."

Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph

EDDIE TELLS ALL IN BOOK

By KARL KRUG

"Eddie Cantor, one of the ten all-time comedians in this observer's long acquaintance with the top jesters, has written—with an assist from Jane Kesner Ardmore—with so much heart, so much vivid recollection, so much intimate anecdote and incident that his book should achieve best seller status.

"For those who remember first-hand his own contributions to the theatre, the radio and the screen 'Take My Life' will provide the next best thing to an actual recreation of the buoyant, seemingly limitless talents that made him such a great star."

IS THE BIGGEST, QUICKEST BEST-SELLING AUTOBIOGRAPHY IN YEARS

Associated Press:

By PETE ARTHUR

"There are few things so refreshing as finding an actor who writes about somebody else's life. Eddie Cantor's new book talks about Eddie Cantor, of course, but it talks about a lot more about the people he knew from obscurity to fame. . . .

"His big question, which he posed after his heart attack, was: 'What have I lived for, really?' His book gives the answer."

Bangor, Me., Daily News:

By MARION FLOOD FRENCH

"Breezy, as Mr. Cantor's humorous style has always been, is the word to describe his happy and tender autobiography. This is not his first excursion into the world of print but it is his first with serious intent and undertone. He decided to write it during his experience with a heart attack of a few years ago, because he wanted to pay tribute to all those dear to him and perhaps to evaluate to himself the worth of his work. It is good in the finest meaning of the word and it is refreshing because we sense that here is a man who has found the balance wheel of life in a profession that all too often only appears as a merry-go-round."

Chicago Tribune:

HIS FINEST PERFORMANCE

By LARRY WOLTERS

"To the millions who have known Eddie Cantor chiefly as the bouncy, banjo-eyed clown of radio and television, this autobiography will be a happy and rewarding revelation. . . .

"His life has been rich, exciting, varied, funny, and sometimes sad. It has touches of heartbreak in it but it is primarily the story of a man with a great heart—a man who proved throughout his long career in show business that love means more than laughter. As told to Jane Kesner Ardmore, this book reflects the warmth and the vitality that have delighted his audiences for 50 years."

Baltimore Sun:

By DONALD KIRKLEY

"This is a candid, heart-to-heart, beguiling book, and by the time you've finished it, you'll feel that you know the banjo-eyed pixie better than you know most of your relatives. . . .

"Rich in anecdotes, some familiar and worth repeating, some new, 'Take My Life' is less formal and more entertaining than most of the theatrical memoirs of our time. It is spicy and honest, the outpouring of a man who combines the traditional egotism of his profession with a humorously realistic attitude toward himself."

New Orleans Times-Picayune:

CANTOR PLAYS STRAIGHT IN THIS PERFORMANCE

By JAMES HADDICAN

". . . Eddie tells the story of his life the only way it could be told—in relation to the people he lived out of suitcases with, his friends. His friends are so much a part of his life that Eddie gives them top billing and pencils himself in as straight man . . . Jimmy Durante, Fanny Brice, Al Jolson, Will Rogers. . . .

"Eddie Cantor's autobiography reads like a collection of notes that might have been scribbled on the backs of telegraph blanks, theatre programs and menus between too many one-night stands. 'Take My Life' is as easy to take as an old soft shoe dance."

WCAU-TV means PHILADELPHIA salesmanship

Fastest moving iron in Philadelphia today is the new Mary Proctor Steam and Dry Iron. It climbed to top spot when Proctor Electric Company picked WCAU-TV to launch its new Mrs. America Model. In the test campaign WCAU-TV was the only station used. Sales were twice as high as Proctor's optimistic estimates.

Local sales successes encouraged Proctor to go national with the same type of TV campaign. How did it happen? WCAU-TV gave Proctor full 35-county coverage of the Greater Philadelphia Market, and an audience already tuned in, thanks to programming leadership and the high-rated adjacencies to the Proctor spots. And WCAU-TV effectively merchandised the Proctor advertising. That's what's behind WCAU-TV salesmanship. Can we put some of it behind your product?

This is nighttime radio as you know it...

Here, at last, is a brand new approach for reaching and selling nighttime radio audiences . . . a revolutionary concept of what nighttime radio should, and can, be when programmed with imagination. We call it "Program PM."

"Program PM" gives listeners an exciting, new kind of entertainment. It takes them Behind The Scenes . . . tells them the Inside Story of the world around them . . . in music, sports, theatre, news, politics. You name it; Lateral Programming has it!

Lateral Programming is the greatest upgrading in radio formats in years, and it's planned to give plenty of selling impact to your product message. Let the sound difference in nighttime radio make a sound difference in your sales figures. "Bink" Dannenbaum, WBC V-P for Sales, or your PGW "Colonel" can tell you all about Lateral Programming and "Program PM."

'WAY OUT IN FRONT!

Oldtime steamboat races along our Ohio River Valley were often close, and hazardous to put your money on. Quite different from today's audience race among TV stations. When you put your money on WSAZ-TV, you've picked THE winner. Survey after survey gives the title to this 69-county giant — and the latest Nielsen is no exception. Consider these WSAZ-TV margins over the next-best station:

95,670 more homes per month

99,430 more homes per week

101,130 more daytime homes, weekdays

100,580 more nighttime homes, weekdays

WSAZ-TV steams with comparable popularity across a four-state domain wherein almost $4,000,000,000 buying power awaits advertisers who like to ride with the winner. The gangway is down at any Katz office.

NBC-TV Daytime

the 2:30 to 5:30 average show a 7.1 to 6.1 edge for NBC on the Nielsens and a 7.7 to 6.1 on the ARB charts.

According to the Nielsen data, NBC enjoys a 7.1 to 6.4 advantage for the combined 11-1 and 2:30-5:30 periods, wtih NBC's ratings up 65% for the periods over last June and CBS down 14% in those times from last June. NBC's morning increase is especially sharp, with the 11 to 1 average jumping 170% over those of June of last year, contrasted with a 20% CBS decline.

On a show-by-show breakdown, NBC loses in only two half-hour and one quarter-hour time periods other than in the 10-11 period, where Columbia's Garry Moore and Arthur Godfrey administer a terrific shellacking to "Home" (though "Price Is Right" at 11 tops Godfrey & Moore by a 7.0 to 5.0 score). The three periods where NBC loses are 12:30 to 1, where "Search for Tomorrow" and "Guiding Light" average a 9.3 vs. 6.8 for "It Could Be You"; the 2:30-3 slot where "Houseparty" tops Tennessee Ernie by 6.2 to 5.8; and the 4:45 to 5 spot, where the second half of "Edge of Night" tops "Modern Romances" by 7.3 to 6.5.

Otherwise, it's NBC all the way in daytime, with the 11-1 and 2:30-5:30 lead over CBS of 11% the widest margin enjoyed by NBC since 1953. As for the 11-1 period lead, it's the first time NBC has ever topped CBS in that period.

Station Sales

to the Senate Interstate Commerce Committee by the Federal Communications Commission. This data revealed that 618 radio stations, or about one-fifth of the total, were owned by 155 multiple holders as of last January 1. Similarly, as of last winter, 81 companies owned (or held substantial interests in) 203 tv stations or about 43% of the total number of facilities.

A study made by the FCC's Network Study Committee showed that as of last November there were 11 multiple owners whose tv stations covered at least 1% of the nation's population. Stations owned by NBC (excluding Hartford, Conn.) embraced nearly 20% of the population. The CBS o and o's (excluding St. Louis) covered 16.4%. Those owned by ABC encompassed approximately 19%. The RKO Teleradio stations covered 14%. The Storer stations (before acquisition of Philadelphia) reached 5.2%. The Westinghouse stations (before purchase of WAAM-TV in Baltimore) embraced 5.5%.

Dallas—Larry Monroe has been named program director for KLIF here after an absence of a year and a half from the station during which time he served in a similar capacity with WNOE, New Orleans.

Presents Stage 7 Theatre," "Count of Monte Cristo" and "Susie."

While bakeries moved up the ladder for the first six-month period of 1957, the automotive category dropped from third place for the latter half-year period in '56 to sixth place in '57.

Here's a rundown of the categories and their percentage of TPA sales:

Ranking first for the first-half of '57 was food products, accounting for 22.4% of TPS sales, slightly ahead of last year; breweries, ticking off 18.5% of TPA sales, a gain of 3.5%; bakeries, accounting for 13.0%, a gain of 4%, dairies, 10.5%, about same as last year, retail stores and supermarkets, 10.7%, a gain of 1.7%; automotive, 8.0%, a loss of 4%, banks-financial 6.1%, a gain of 1.1%, all others accounting for 10.8%, a loss of 7.2% as compared to a year ago.

WGN

rated even "Mickey Mouse Club" and "Susie." It is by the way, one of several WGN-TV shows Pat Weaver is considering for his Propram Service network.

Station led all three other commercial Chicago stations in the time periods from noon to 3 p.m. and 10 p.m. through midnight, Monday through Friday; from sign-on to 6 p.m. Saturdays and Sundays; and from 10 p.m. to midnight on Sunday. NTA's new film network entry on Wednesday from 7:30 to 9:30 p.m. outclassed such competition as "Ford Theatre," "Kraft Television Theatre," and the Wednesday night fights.

National advertisers accounted for about 59% of the total for television in May, compared with 25% in January of 1956. Increase from the New York office in the first five months this year, compared with the same period last year, was 20.5%. In radio, billings from New York went up 37%.

Meanwhile, the other two stations—WBKB and ABC-TV o&o, and WNBQ, the local tv station, have been altering their programming in an attempt to perk up sales.

Louisville — Community Broadcasting Co., operators of WLAP, Lexington, will begin television airings on Channel 27, starting Sept. 1.

part, he did just that on the preem of this new series and it came off fine.

His easy and showmanly way hit with "Shooting High," "When Rock 'n' Roll Came To Trinidad," "Stay As Sweet As You Are" and on the piano "I Get A Kick Out Of You." Laine did okay, too, with his solo of "Without Him."

Bob Henry, producer-director, keeps everything working in comfortable order and Nelson Riddle and the Randy Van Horne Singers give Cole an able musical assist.

Show is slotted in the 10-to-10:30 p.m. slot until Sept. 17.

SUMMERTIME
With Jack Kane and His Orch, Teddy King, The Playboys, Don Garrard, Evelyn Gould, Bill Walker, emcee
Producer: Norman Sedawie
Writer: Frank Peppiett
30 Min., Thurs., 9:30 p.m.
SUNBEAM
CBC-TV, from Toronto
(Vickers & Benson)

Kicking off a 13 weeks' summer stanza which get the full treatment over a 38-station tv network of the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., Jack Kane and his orch have a 30-minute segment that should gratify the viewers. Kane is generous in his step-out groups on strings or brass but the lad, himself, is the whole show on his clarinet and sax solos, from his opening swing arrangement of "Keep Your Sunny Side Up" to his "Summertime" signoff.

This would seem to be the musical replacement show Canadian listeners have been waiting for, and the new series indicates that Kane has been needed. Lad is terrific on clarinet and, if he's been influenced by Benny Goodman, he has a style of his own and is graceful in his tribute to Goodman. Kane also tosses a bow of appreciation to the late Jimmy Dorsey for the latter's recording of "So Rare," which Kane and his boys also play.

He is also arranger for Teddi King and Eydie Gorme; and, for his opener, had the tiny Miss King singing "Devil and the Deep Blue Sea" which Kane's orch and the singer have just recorded for RCA-Victor. Obviously taking a delight in her work, the vivacious, brunet Miss King, complete with Italian haircut and white evening gown, belts out the number in shout style for fine returns to Kane's backgrounding and then into "Three Blind Mice" for Kane's band imitations ranging from Kenton to Lombardo.

Don Garrard's "T'aint Necessarily So" was okay in dramatic baritone effects; with Evelyn Gould over nicely on her high soprano delivery of "Loverly?" from "My Fair Lady"; plus The Playboys (5) in their gymnastic "Lulu Is Back in Town"; but it's still Kane's show in his arrangement of Teddi King's tender warbling of Berlin's "Say It Isn't So."

Camera-angle shots to band's various sections were effective, with swing arrangements by Kane pointing up his clarinet work but he probably setting a record by naming nearly every sideman in his 26-piece band. He and the latter were fine in a hefty finish of "Bugle Rag," with new series off to a good start. McStay.

A.M. IN CHICAGO
With Paul Gray, others
Director: Dick Locke
Writer: Nadine Martin
55 Mins.; Mon.-Fri., 8 a.m.
PARTICIPATING
WBKB, Chicago

Devised by National Telefilms Associates and produced in collaboration with WBKB, "A.M." is a worthy experiment with film experts to find a use on tv for the vast miscellany of old theatrical short subjects. As it's done here, it's not unlike the ordinary disk jockey show on radio, with three-minute clips from the old Paramount library taking the place of records.

While the basic plan has possibilities, the shortcomings of this particular attempt are twofold: (1) it's doubtful that celluloid, but especially old celluloid, makes for appealing breakfastime fodder, and (2) there's not much rapport between the film fragments and interlacer Paul Gray. The first can be easily ameliorated by reslotting the show; the second perhaps could gain from a general loosening of the format. Gray, a nitery comic of redoubtable ad libbing ability who evidently has never done an emcee chore on television before, follows a script and a rigid timetable, which seems to put him ill at ease. Effects are that the film is inserted instead of integrated, and the comic's strained-for ad libs, being hurried, show a dull edge.

As for the film abstracts, they break down into those that have entertainment value, curiosity value, or neither. Show caught (5) used nine clips, none of which could be considered ideal morning fare. On the entertaining side was a song and terp episode of Sammy Davis Jr., a Betty Boop cartoon, and an oldie of Ruth Etting singing "Whoopie." Curiosity entries were an elephant hunt, an excerpt from a Ted Husing film on diving, and a couple incidents from a Ken Carpenter "Unusual Occupations" short. A doctor's report on dicting and a couple travelogs with pop recordings as background were merely chaff.

Between films, Gray dispenses news, weather reports, the time, an interview, and a handful of non sequitors. In general, the show needs a more relaxed pace and a more casual incorporating of film.

Radio Followup

Ed & Pegeen Fitzgerald

Tex McCrary has his bias. He was forced off WRCA in 1952 for his zealous support of Eisenhower. But as a radio reporter, McCrary always plays it straight when he's asking questions, particularly on politics and keeps himself out of it as much as possible. But Ed Fitzgerald, who along with wife Pegeen is spelling Tex & Jinx through Aug. 2, injects his opinions and himself into the sessions on the WRCA latenight show far too much to be a fair or accurate reporter. But the FitzG's are hep, scintillating folk who more than compensate for hubby Ed's journalistic memoirbilia with the bright riposter and a long memory, which Monday (8), the first night the replacements took over, carried the veteran Ed back to the days he was a child performer in 1909.

Pegeen Fitzgerald picked up an overseas telephone the afternoon of the first broadcast and spoke to France's one-man Chamber of Commerce, Maurice Chevalier, who sounded as though he was right there, talking through the bedroom door. The two-way session, taped for airtime after 10:30 p.m., was appropriate to WRCA's French Travalcade Week promotion, and the Chevalier gave out with the splendors of Bastille Day ("Dance, drink and love in the streets") with very little prompting from Mrs. Fitzgerald. He mentioned expectantly the ball at the Left Bank's Tour D'Argent which will be attended by Marlon Brando, Kirk Douglas, Dean Martin and their French counterparts in the sphere of entertainment, and figured it'll be a real blowout. Chevalier's appreciation of Paris seemed mostly nocturnal, but he did get in a passing plug for the "big parade on the Champs Elysees."

This 15-minutes of business on the transatlantic phone, coupled with a smart piece of lengthy dialog with the charming new French Consul in New York, Jacques Bayens, was quite sufficient in pushing Gallic tourism. At the same time, the questions Ed asked Bayens about the Algerian situation were so loaded (anti-Algerian) that it seemed the diplomat spent as much time tempering the radio quizzer's questions as he did answering them. Fitzgerald is more than entitled to his own editorial opinions, even on the air, but to stack the cards in his quizzing, both in words and intonations, is not fair to anyone. Art.

therefore, that we must have not only topnotch facilities but topnotch talent as well.

Gotta Have Experts

Thus you will find on our staff today such experts as Bill Rosensohn, former executive vice president of Sheraton Closed Circuit; Bill Vallee, former director of television operations at Benton & Bowles and Bob Doyle, who produced many of President Eisenhower's programs when he was with NBC and was the pool producer for both political conventions in 1952 and 1956.

Our technical staff, headed by H. J. Schlafly, Jr., who supervised the nation's first closed-circuit showing (the Louis-Conn fight) and wrote the specifications used for gear employed on that pioneer effort, has been expanded to meet the growing demands of this new undertaking.

TelePrompTer, after careful consideration of the equipment available, ordered and is now employing GPL portable projectors in all of its showings—projectors that throw the largest, clearest picture available in the portable field.

Our Group Communications Division thus far has sold and serviced nine closed-circuit showings for industry, presently has seven more scheduled and anticipates that its gross business in this area alone will run to $1,000,000 in the calendar year 1957.

The entrance of the company into closed circuit was a natural sequel to our activities in other areas of communications—through the development of TelePrompTer service for television stations for motion pictures; through the "packaging" of services and facilities for meetings large and small, employing our own special lighting, staging and production effects in combinations through TeleMation.

Western Union is playing a major role in our new and rapidly expanding closed-circuit television operation. The telegraph's company's entry into this most modern form of rapid communications for business and industry stems from its substantial stock interest in TelePrompTer. Western Union's most significant role in closed-circuit television will be the provision of a service that has been lacking in the field. WU representatives throughout the country will provide on-the-spot liaison between TelePrompTer, meeting sponsors, technical personnel and others to assure proper coordination and supervision of all closed-circuit telecasts.

Thus we believe that group communications will surge ahead rapidly in the future and that, by 1958, 50 to 75 city hookups involving numerous representatives of the industrial community will be commonplace.

The medium already has established its place as a public relations, stockholder relations and selling instrument in the field of communication.

No selling between the hours of 6 to 9 a.m. and 4 to 6 p.m. by the network. He promised to keep the smallest unit of network sale at five minutes, in the hope, apparently of eliminating the frequently-expressed gripe that the webs, by selling radio participations, were nothing more than "glorified spot carriers."

Eastman also promised the reps that he'd avoid "negative selling," and stick only to live programming.

The network chief said that "all radio cannot be the top 40 and news," admitting the phrase was an oversimplification but further stating that for the reps and networks to get along the networks would have to supply programming markedly different from the indies.

"One of the ways in which we will be helping you as well as ourselves is through our thorough knowledge of the needs of stations. We are going to work very closely with our major affiliates to help them with their local programming," Eastman said.

"In this manner," he continued, "the network and local programming will work together to build larger listening audiences rather than work against each other as is often the case at present."

Eastman told reps that a "more realistic compensation from the network" will accrue to affiliates. He said this would be accomplished through a larger share of total network revenue and also through "better selling and the attainment of well-deserved higher rates."

NBC Radio Upswing

utes in July of 1956, a 17.8% increase.

One big difference for NBC was the sale of its package of 95 weekly five-minute Monday-Friday newscasts to Brown & Williamson and Bristol-Myers, with these alone accounting for seven hours and 55 minutes per week. Another has been the near-sellout situation on "Monitor," with a total of 101 five-minute news capsules and one-minute announcements per week on the show for a total of 8 hours and 25 minutes. These two alone combine for just about half of NBC's total sponsored hours, the others coming from program sales and from 30-second, six-second and other one-minute announcements in daytime and weekday nights.

NBC admits, of course, that the situation may reverse itself in the fall when the $5,500,000 gross Ford order takes effect at CBS, but as of now, at any rate, it's on Cloud Nine as regards its new prosperous look.

Beaumont, Tex.—Julius M. Gordon, prez of the Jefferson Amusement Co., is scheduled to become manager of KPAC-TV, which will serve the Beaumont-Port Arthur Area when the station goes on the air in September.

NBC's Bud Yorkin On A TV Busman's Holiday Consultant to Granada

Hollywood, July 9.

NBC-TV producer-director Bud Yorkin hopped over to London over the weekend for month-long consultant's chore on lineup of 52 weekly special variety-musical shows, to bow on British commercial tv next September. Shows will be staged on ITV by Granada-TV. Yorkin will do preliminary work on production staff and talent lineup before swinging over to Continent, where he'll scout talent for NBC-TV "Tennessee Ernie Ford" show, which he'll produce-direct next season.

Joining Yorkin in London will be Coby Ruskin, N. Y. tv producer-director, and Larry Fielder, unit manager on Ford Show. Ruskin will be permanent producer-director, on the Granada show, and Fielder will be permanent production manager. Fielder hops over next Friday; Ruskin in August.

Sarnoff's obsersations were based on talks with a number of European television officials and data supplied by Romney Wheeler, prez of NBC's new international subsid, who's headquartered in London.

FROM ROCK TO ROCKIN' CHAIR?

Musicians 'Singled Out' for Dope Rap, Panelists Charge at Newport Forum

By DAVID B. BITTAN

Newport, R.I., July 9.

New York attorney Maxwell T. Cohen, here Saturday during a panel discussion on "Music and the Use of Habituating and Addicting Drugs" at the Newport Jazz Festival, charged that police "deliberately cover their ineptitude" in dealing with the narcotics problem by singling out musicians. "And the press cooperates," he added.

The press—newspapers and magazines—was criticized by a five-man panel for its sensationalism in playing up stories on musicians arrested on dope charges.

Other panel members included Father Norman O'Connor, chaplain for the Boston U. Newman Club and jazz lecturer; Dr. Charles Winick, psychologist and research director of a New York group working with drug addicts; John Hammond, director of jazz recordings for Vanguard Records; and two musicians, pianist Billy Taylor and drummer Specs Wright.

Nat Hentoff, Saturday Review jazz columnist, was moderator. He noted the open forum was planned because of the need for constructive programs on the drug problem "instead of misconceptions, myths and misinformed sensationalism."

On the suggestion of Cohen, the panel was formed as a permanent body to study the narcotics problem. Louis L. Lorrillard, Festival president, promised his group will aid in financing the project.

Cohen gave an example of how newspapers sensationalize stories of musicians and drug addiction.

In a recent New York City dope raid, 130 suspected addicts were arrested, he said. One of the headlines read that a "noted bandleader" was among those nabbed. "This gives the impression," said Cohen, "that the other 129 were in his band." But, Cohen said, New York has a "relatively good

Pick-a-Pic Jukes

Dayton, O., July 9.

First installation of "Phonovision," which complements the music from coin-operated phonographs, was made at the Town Tap Restaurant here by R. C. Walters, head of the W. & W. Music Co., who designed and developed the device. It is placed on top of the jukebox.

"Phonovision" presents 20-square-inch colored photographs of 14 popular singers on a reel. Each picture remains in view seven seconds, with mechanical facilities provided to synchronize the colored photograph with the record which is being played.

The device was demonstrated at a recent meeting of vending machine operators in Chicago, but has not been installed previously in any public place.

USSR Dandy for Disks; Top LPs for $1 in A Bargain for Tourists

Frankfurt, July 2.

One of the few real bargains a tourist can take out of Russia these days is a collection of phonograph records. That's the finding of an American librarian, May Rose Robertson, who recently returned from there.

With the current exchange on American dollars in Moscow, a 12-inch longplaying record with such top Russian artists as David Oistrakh and Gillels performing costs only $1. And a 10-inch LP sells for about 70c. Only trouble with the 33⅓ platters is that most of them don't have an automatic stop, and have to be removed manually from a record player.

"People are still talking about the sensational appearance of 'Porgy and Bess' last year in Moscow," she reported. "And according to the music shops, the music from 'Porgy and Bess' is the most popular item they have.

"People, too, asked a great deal about American jazz, but didn't seem well acquainted with the top American performers. At one hotel, the most modern music the orchestra knew was 'I'm In the Mood for Love.'"

And with the popularity of entertainment, you have to book tickets for the local film house at least a day in advance in order to get in—while top concerts, like the current tour of Britisher Sir Malcolm Sargent, who's conducting local orchestras on programs with violinist David Oistrakh, are sold out weeks in advance.

Moscow currently has 65 film theatres and 28 legit houses for its 4,000,000 people, she was told. Cheapest seats are three rubles, or about 30c at the U. S. exchange rate.

Miller-McKinley's Top B.O. on Tour

The late Glenn Miller's orch, which has had a potent postmortem comeback on disks in recent years, is now also making it in flesh under the baton of Ray McKinley, drummer with the old Miller organization. McKinley's crew, while comprising new personnel, is using the Glenn Miller tag due to the identical musical styling based on the same arrangements.

On its tour from the end of May through June, the band hit percentages in 18 out of 21 promotion dates, the balance of the bookings being made up of college bashes and private parties. Many of the performances clicked in midwest area despite tornado warnings and heavy rains.

Top grosses of the tour were at Green Bay, Wis., $3,400; St. Paul, $3,700; Mankato, Minn., $2,891; Walled Lake, Mich., $2,739, and Omaha, Neb., $2,570. Band is being booked through the Willard Alexander Agency.

COL TAPS GENE BLOCK FROM NW FOR N.Y. SPOT

Gene Block, former district sales manager for Columbia Records in the northwest, has been upped to sales promotion manager of the diskery's pop singles division. He'll headquarter in New York and operate under singles sales manager Dick Linke.

Paul McKimmie, sales manager for Col's San Francisco distrib, the H. R. Brasford Co., will step into the district sales manager spot vacated by Block starting next month. Meantime, Robert Burrell, sales promotion manager of Col's country singles, is moving his base of operations from Atlanta to New York. He'll also work under Linke who, in turn, reports to Hal Cook, v.p. over the sales department.

Chianti Encoring in N.Y. for Lou Levy Firm

Sal Chianti, exec veepee of Lou Levy's publishing activities, is returning to the firm's home base in New York after heading up the London operation for the past 18 months. Chianti arrived back in Gotham yesterday (Tues.).

Levy's London operation, Leeds Ltd., will be managed by Cyril Simons. Leeds acts as English rep for Joy Music and the Warner Bros. firms. From now on, Levy and Chianti will make periodic treks to London to o.o. the operation.

SOLID BALLADS IN COMEBACK

By HERM SCHOENFELD

Although nobody in the music biz would be so rash as to say that rock 'n' roll has had it, there have been signs that "solid ballads" are on the way back. At the present time, in fact, the rock 'n' roll tunes are conspicuous by their virtual disappearance from the top 10.

The renaissance of "good music," as it is fondly remembered in the music biz before the rock 'n' rollers took over three years ago, has resulted in an immediate gain for the publishers in the rise of sheet music. Since most of the rock 'n' roll tunes were strictly hits due to the performance, there wasn't much that could be seen in the sheet music. In fact, there was even trouble in some cases in transcribing the grunts in the lyrics into English syllables.

Copy sales on "Love Letters in the Sand," the No. 1 song and a standard, are several times more than the rock 'n' roll hits of a couple of months ago. Such tunes as "So Rare," another oldie, and "Old Cape Cod," a new ballad, are selling more copies than the top rock 'n' roll hits.

Indicative of what is hoped in many quarters of the music biz to be a trend away from the rock 'n' roll dominance are such other strong current numbers as "It's Not For Me To Say," "I'm Gonna Sit Right Down and Write Myself a Letter" (another oldie), "Wonderful, Wonderful," "Golden Braids," "Around The World" and other tunes with recognizable melodies. Upbeat in the copy market underlines the old saying that "there's nothing wrong with sheet music sales that a good ballad can't cure."

Another straw in the wind that perhaps the public is tiring of the broken-note style of writing is the

Wall St. Bache's Favorable Slant On Decca Stock

In an analysis of the Decca corporate setup by Bache & Co., Wall St. brokerage firm, the diskery's stock was rated for investors as "attractive for capital appreciation, while also affording an attractive yield." Besides occupying an entrenched position in the disk industry, Decca's ownership of over 80% of Universal Pictures' stock was held to be a primary factor in Decca's sound financial position.

According to the Bache analysis, Decca's investment in Universal is worth about $14 per share of Decca Hence, earnings on the diskery's stock amounted to approximately $1.43 per share at the nominal price of about $4. Decca's high this year was 18⅜ and currently, it's around $17.50. Another factor deemed in Decca's favor is the fact that the company has paid dividends regularly since 1937, termed "an enviable record in this speculative industry."

During the past few years, it was noted that Decca's net earnings have increased 50% while pre-tax earning from the record division zoomed over 277% from 73c per share in 1954 to $2.76 per share in 1956. Approximately half of the $2.84 per share earned by Decca in 1956 was produced by the disk division.

The analysis also noted that Decca, with a net worth of $22,837,636, has been able to accumulate 80% of the Universal common stock, a company with total assets of $53,000,000, and still keep a strong financial position. Decca's earnings for the quarter ending March 31 were 61c. per share, compared with 55c. for the same period last year. Most of these earnings were from Decca's disk division, since U's earnings for the period were down.

Big 3's Brit. Feldman Expanding; Music Booming in Germany: Scopp

Wildwood's Polka-Face

Wildwood, N. J., July 9.

This citadel of rock 'n' roll is receiving a musical assault from an old and unexpected source—the polka.

Walt Zimm & His Blue Bell Four has been engaged to appear matinees at Eddie Suez's big Club Avalon in the Anglesea section.

In center-city, Harry Gerson is offering "Polka Patch" time as his matinee contribution at the Hotel Lyndhurst cafe.

Nearly every act appearing in the island's 150 night clubs seems to be suffering from a calypso hangover. They all offer some Trinidad music, usually with unnecessary advance apologies. Although many feared calypso would be greeted with muffled yawns here, it actually is receiving smiles and polite applause. The change in pace every few numbers is apparently welcomed.

Name Ben Bloom U.S. Rep for FD&H

Ben Bloom, veteran Tin Pan Alley publisher, is stepping into a new spot next month as American representative for the British Francis, Day & Hunter-B. Feldman publishing companies. Bloom, at the same time, will continue his own publishing activities under his own name.

As U. S. rep for the two British firms, both of which are tied together corporately through the Big Three, Bloom's main job will be to pick up material in this country for exploitation in Britain and on the Continent via the FD&H-Feldman network of offices. Although Bloom is scheduled to start his new job in August, he's already obtained one song, "Cappuchino," from Chatsworth Music for the French Publications Francis-Day firm managed by Jack Denton.

Bloom is leaving for the Coast this week for a few weeks to o.o. the film music scene in behalf of his own firm. He and his wife are making a Mexico City detour—their first trip south of the border.

WOLPIN & SIBERLING ON PAR MUSIC BOARD

Edward A. Wolpin and Lou J. Siberling have been named directors of the Paramount Music Corp. Appointments come on the heels of the taking over by Arthur Israel Jr. of the veepee spot vacated by Bernard Goodwin.

Wolpin, who is general professional manager of all Paramount music firms, will base in New York, as before, but will make periodic trips to the Coast studios. Siberling, in addition to being in charge of financial and administrative matters for the firm, will take on other duties. Israel will take over Goodwin's spot on the ASCAP board as a matter of routine.

DJ Marty Faye Owns Up To R'n'R Flop in Chi

Chicago, July 9.

Deejay Marty Faye reports of the rhythm & blues package which he himself promoted and headlined last week that it was the "biggest bust in show biz history." While most promoters try to pad their grosses to cover up their embarrassment with flops, Faye confesses his show took in only about $3,000 with tickets at the 3,750-seat Civic Opera House scaled from $4.50.

Package employed some 12 acts and the 12-piece Willie Dixon orch, the nut amounting to over $7,000.

The B. Feldman Music company of Britain, which is owned by the Big Three (Robbins, Feist & Miller) in the U. S., is due for a major operational expansion within the next few months, according to Maurice (Mickey) Scopp, Big Three v.p. and general manager who returned from an overseas trip last week. Scopp stated that top exec personnel would be added to the Feldman organization in a move to hypo its exploitation activities. The company, which controls a vast catalog of top copyrights from the U. S., was virtually dormant until the Big Three bought it a few years ago.

Scopp found the boom in Germany an impressive spectacle. Along with the general economy, the music biz is booming at a terrific pace, he stated. The Germans are now only a few years behind the U. S. in the matter of disks and hi-fi, Scopp reported, and their economy can support even greater advances than has been made in the last few years. Scopp said that 1,000,000 disk sellers in Germany, sparked by "Memories are Made of This," will be more common from now on. He visited the Big Three's affiliated offices in Frankfort and Milan as well as London.

In London, Scopp wrapped up the last details in the Big Three's recent buy into the Francis, Day & Hunter firm and together with Fred Day, chief of the latter company, laid the basis for closer coordination between the New York and London offices.

Kenton's Crystal-Ball On a Danceband Boom: Wait for 'War Babies'

Schenectady, N.Y., July 9.

Dancebands will come back into their own by 1959 or 1960, when the present crop of World War II babies ripen into teenagers. So predicted Stan Kenton during a visit here recently for a concert-dance date at the new CIO Hall. Kenton drew a loud reception from a fair-sized crowd in an engagement promoted by Boy Snyder of Albany and Ted Bayley of Troy.

The batoneer pointed out that these youngsters have had little opportunity, because of their age, to see bands "live." The kids will not only want to see the traveling orchestras but also dance to their music, Kenton believes.

While he does not like rock 'n' roll, it has one advantage over "straight" orchestras: the beat creates in young people the desire to dance, rather than just to sit and listen. This will be beneficial to the touring bands, just as it was in the last plush era for them, Kenton commented.

Deutch Quits RKO-Music; Russ Morgan's Pub Pard

Irving Deutch has pulled out of the professional manager's spot at RKO-Music to start his own publishing venture. He'll be partnered with bandleader Russ Morgan in the operation of an ASCAP and a BMI firm.

They'll launch their activities with the purchase of two catalogs expected to be firmed next week after some legal wrinkles are ironed out.

Deutch had been at RKO for the four months since the pic company started its music publishing subsid. Firm also has a BMI tie via Britton Music. Martin J. Machat, firm's general counsel, currently is prowling a replacement for the Deutch vacancy.

Cap Veeps Callison

Hollywood, July 9.

Max Callison, national sales manager for Capitol Records, has been elected a veepee in the diskery.

He will continue quartering at his present offices in N. Y.

Jocks, Jukes and Disks

By MIKE GROSS

Frankie Laine: (Columbia). "YOU KNOW HOW IT IS" (Korwin*) is one of Laine's best. It's a solid swinger which he puts over for top spins. "THE 3:10 TO YUMA" (Columbia*) sets Laine in a western motif at which he's an old hand.

Clyde McPhatter: (Atlantic). "LONG LONELY NIGHTS" (G&H†), an r'n'r styled ballad that's geared for a high spinning reaction because of Clyde McPhatter's topnotch vocal. "HEARTACHES" (Leeds*) gets peppered up for a revival.

Tony Bennett: (Columbia). "IN THE MIDDLE OF AN ISLAND" (E. H. Morris*) should swing into the bestseller lists without any trouble because of Bennett's slick handling of the rhythmic beat. "I AM" (Joy*), a strong ballad which Bennett pushes along for hefty spins.

The Kirby Stone Four: (Cadence). "S-S-S'WONDERFUL" (New World*), a brisk and clever interpretation of the Gershwin oldie with hisses and snake rattles to build its potential. "RAVEN" (Redd Evans*) is a hip, free-wheeling adaptation of Edgar Allen Poe's "Raven."

Somethin' Smith & The Redheads: (Epic). "YOU ALWAYS HURT THE ONE YOU LOVE" (Pickwick*) is given a new spinning life by Smith's smart shuffle beat. "MY MELANCHOLY BABY" (Vogel, S-B*), another oldie which Smith updates nicely.

George Hamilton IV: (ABC-Paramount). "HIGH SCHOOL ROMANCE" (Bentley†) is an r'n'r styled ballad pegged strictly for juve angles. "EVERYBODY'S BODY" (Bentley†) gives young Hamilton a chance to swing in familiar rockabilly fashion.

June Valli: (RCA Victor). "STREET OF MEMORIES" (Marks†) is an okay ballad that gets an added touch of the rock 'n' roll beat which June Valli handles in a stylized manner. "ANOTHER MAN GONE" (Calypso*) is a blues number with an emotional reading that scores.

Morrison Sisters: (Decca). "TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN" (Daywin†), a ballad item which gives this new femme combo a chance to aquit itself adequately. "DING DANG DANGLIN'" (Meridian†) shows the girls off in a breezy mood.

Don Costa Orch: (ABC-Paramount). "TENNESSEE TULIP" (Greta†) is a rousing item out of the "Yellow Rose of Texas" school which should please the juke trade. "BELLA NUNZIATA" (Pamco†), is romantic and melodic, a combination that goes well with some deejays.

Teddy Bart: (National). "SUNSHINE AND RAIN" (Manlowe*), a rhythmic vocal in the country manner which Teddy Bart belts with an infectious vocal. "GUARDIAN ANGEL" (Manlowe*) is a rocking ballad with an appropriate delivery.

David Carroll Orch: (Mercury). "SWINGING SWEETHEARTS" (E. H. Morris*) has a good takeoff chance because of its happy melodic line. "FASCINATION" (Peer†) parlays a romantic melody into an attractive wax product.

The Treniers: (Brunswick). "ROCK, CALYPSO JOE" (Mobie†), a swinging item which the group pushes over in its frantic style. "HOLY MACKEREL, ANDY!" (Vernon*) has a pounding blues beat but the rockin' interpolations will help it along.

Sonny Burke Orch: (Decca). "THE PRIDE AND THE PASSION BOLERO" (Sands*) out of the Stanley Kramer pic has enough melodic excitement to get it over with the deejays. "THE DELICATE DELINQUENT" (Famous*) is the title theme of the Jerry Lewis starrer. It's got an okay beat and should see some spinning action.

Vikki Nelson: (Vik). "LIKE A BABY" (Roosevelt†), a blues item that's rendered effectively for spinning impact. "I WAS A FOOL FOR LEAVING" (Raleigh†) puts the thrush in a swinging mood that goes over well with the juke trade.

Carol Richards: (RCA Victor). "DADDY" (Republic†), a fresh workover of the oldie with enough s.a. in the vocal to attract plays. "COME TO MAMA, PAPA DO" (Peer†) gets an interesting treatment with some German lingo insertions.

Janice Harper: (Prep). "BON VOYAGE" (Pop†) is a lilting ballad which Janice Harper takes care of with a nice set of pipes. "TELL ME THAT YOU LOVE ME TONIGHT" (T. B. Harms*), a velvety vocal treatment of a solid catalog item.

Frank Pizani: (Bally). "ANGRY" (Melrose*), another rockabilly entry that's worked into a fair shellac product by a likeable yodeler. "EVERY TIME" (Monitor*) sets the crooner in a pleasant ballad groove.

Ol' Wade & The Colonels: (Ber-gen). "ONE IS A LONELY NUMBER" (Miller*), a good ballad pegged for juke tastes with an r'n'r beat. "BOY CRAZY" (Miller*) swings in a familiar rockin' beat.

Jimmy Breedlove: (Atco). "THAT'S MY BABY" (Progressive†), a hot rocker that's due for a strong share of the r'n'r trade. "OVER SOMEBODY ELSE'S SHOULDER" (BVC*), the new treatment of the oldie should make a dent in the market because of Jimmy Breedlove's nifty styling.

Lee Young: (Par). "AFRAID" (Mellin†) is a big ballad with a pounding piano backing and a strong piping delivery to make it an okay bet for jock and juke spins. "I'M PLEADING" (Dexter†) gives Lee Young a chance to shout in the r'n'r style.

British Pop Reviews

Dickie Valentine (Decca): "PUTTIN' ON THE STYLE" (Essex) gives Valentine a chance to show he's as effective a performer on songs with a beat as he is with ballads. "THREE SIDES TO EVERY STORY" (Leeds) is dull by comparison, though Glen Somers' orch backing has an offbeat charm.

Vera Lynn (Decca); "DEAR TO ME" (World Wide) is a pleasing waltz of Continental origin, smoothly rendered. "TRAVELIN' HOME" (Marlyn), an old Scots ballad originally called "Westering Home," but with new lyrics added, is another waltz, and the treatment add up to a big one here.

Reg Owen Orchestra (Parlophone): "SWEEPING THE FLOOR" (Good Music) is a swinging instrumental by the tight-knit Owen outfit. Same sure touch is evident on "EASY NOW" (Good).

Joan Savage (Columbia): "BAMBOOZLED" (Lennox), a lilting waltz marks Joan Savage's recording debut, though she's already familiar to British tv audiences as a comedienne. Both this and "FIVE ORANGES FOUR APPLES" (Pickwick) show that she has a promising recording future.

Lonnie Donegan (Nixa) "GAMBLIN' MAN" (Essex) is already big in Britain and should be as successful in the States. Performance really rocks, and is a surefire bet for those who went for "Rock Island Line." "PUTTIN' ON THE STYLE" (Essex) is slightly slower but no less punchy.

Chris Barber's Skiffle Group (Nixa) "WHERE COULD I GO" (M/S) sounds more C & W than Skiffle, but the band that produced Lonnie Donegan renders the piece with the appropriate skiffle-jangles on several guitars. American Johnny Duncan vocalizes on this and "DOIN' MY TIME" (M/S), a similar though rather more nasal piece.

Album Reviews

Chris Connor: "The George Gershwin Almanac of Song" (Atlantic). This is a handsome package, inside and out. In two 12-inch LPs, a large hunk of Gershwiniana has been set into the grooves with taste and care by Chris Connor and several groups of topflight jazz instrumentalists. There are 32 Gershwin items in all set down chronologically from "Somebody Loves Me" (1924) to the posthumously published "For You, For Me, For Evermore" (1947). Gershwin did a lot of writing up until the time of his death in 1937 and the tunes culled for this album are an excellent sampling of his work. Although the cool school had not yet developed during Gershwin's time, its progressive interpretations excellently fit the composer's mood. Miss Connor has a fresh approach to each item and she enhances each with style and convinction.

"The Pride and The Passion" (Capitol). Latest in the rash of film soundtrack sets out of the Capitol factory should have no trouble picking up hefty sales. The Stanley Kramer pic shapes as a strong b.o. property which should react favorably on its wax counterpart. The George Antheil score is varied and colorful and stands alone without the visual crutch. The mood, of course, is Spanish and the music recreates the rhythms of the flamenco, the bolero, as well as neatly tailored romantic melodies with fine strokes.

Shorty Rogers & His Giants: "Shorty Rogers Plays Richard Rodgers" (RCA Victor). Although there's been a lot of Richard Rodgers cast into the wax mould the past few years, Shorty Rogers gives the familiars a new lift with his fresh jazz interpretations. The Rodgers' melodies stand up well under the jazzster's assault. Such tunes as "Mountain Greenery," "On A Desert Island With Thee," "I've Got Five Dollars" and "I Could Write A Book" are given a fullblown orch treatment, while "The Girl Friend," "Mimi," "A Ship With A Sail" and "It's Got To Be Love" are handled by a nine-man combo.

Juliette Greco: "Greco" (Columbia). This is a wax treat for the francophiles. It's a highly effective display of Miss Greco's thrushing mood because it gives her a chance to move through varied melodic manners. She's gay, she's sad, she's rollicking or she's depressed. No matter what the mood, it's never difficult to get her message even though it's all en francais.

Roger Roger Orch: "Folies Bergere" (Decca). Selections from the Jacques Roitfeld pic, "Folies Bergere," make up this melodic package. Roger Roger works his orch through 11 attractive pieces to present a musical portrait of the Parisian spot. Disk was etched in France and sound reproduction is topgrade. Colorful cover will help push the album in the shops.

Tyree Gleen: "At The Embers" (Roulette). Tyree Gleen blows a solid horn, so it's not too difficult for him to turn any given piece into a swinging, rhythmic item. His job here is made easier because he gets a standout assist from Harold Baker (trumpet), Mary Osborne (guitar), Hank Jones (piano), Tommy Potter (bass) and Jo Jones (drums). Recording booth chief Joe Guerchio got 'em all to give out with a stimulating sound. The cover, too, is a stickout item.

ITALY, LAND OF SONG, 5TH IN OWN CONTEST

Venice, July 9.

The usual controversy has followed the prize awards at this years Venice Song Festival, in which the Dutch orchestral group won the top kudos, a "Golden Gondola."

Principal source of trouble was Italy's final position in the prize list: fifth in a roster of five. The local press picked up the story, and the papers have been full of cries of injustice. Strangely, most sources name the Italo jury members as the ones deciding the vote against the local orchestra, headed by Armando Trovajoli. Reasons given are that Trovajoli's "extreme," jazz-inspired arrangements were not well-liked by the austerer members of the jury, which voted for the more traditional, sterner stuff.

Venice fete was beamed over a Eurovision hookup every night, ending in a spectacular finale in which over 20,000 spectators filled St. Marks square. (Other broadcasts emanated from the Film Palace on the Lido.)

Contest consisted of a series of free arrangements plus one "set" piece, "The Carnival of Venice," which all orchestras had to arrange and play. The Dutch group also walked off with the "set" arrangement prize. Winners, in order, were Holland, Germany, Belgium, Britain, and Italy.

Raleigh's 'Sir Walter Money'

Cornpone Bandleader in Fracas With Police For Lettuce-Throwing Act

Raleigh, N. C., July 9.

Charges were dismissed in Raleigh City Court last Tuesday (2) against a hillbilly bandleader who was arrested the day before when his money-throwing act created a riotous scramble on Raleigh's busy Fayetteville St.

City Court Judge Laber Doub threw out warrants against Big Jim (Country Style) Thornton on motion of Attorney I. Beverly Lake, who contended they were improperly drawn.

In one warrant, Thornton was accused of attracting a crowd on the sidewalk and street by throwing money in the air while his band played. In the other, he was accused of violating a city ordinance by throwing money on the streets and sidewalks.

Thornton was arrested after a publicity stunt advertising a radio program drew a crowd estimated at 4,000 near the Ambassador Theatre.

Police said the performer was perched with his six-piece band atop the marquee of the theatre and that he and his crew threw small change and tomato cans containing dollar bills to the crowd below.

Wake County Jail officials said Thornton enjoyed the hospitality of the local stockade for 20 or 30 minutes before his $25 bond was posted.

LaSalle at BevHilton

Dick LaSalle, long at Hilton's Hotel Plaza, N. Y., is now the house band at the Beverly Hilton Hotel, BevHills, doubling from dinner music in the Escoffier Room to the Star-on-the-Roof for the dansapation sessions.

He closed recently at the Backstage Club, Phoenix.

DARIO SORIAS WING O'SEAS ON ANGEL BIZ

Dario Soria, head of Angel Records, and his wife, the diskery's promotion manager, planed to London last week for a six-week trip abroad. Soria, who is prexy of the U.S. branch of EMI (Electric & Music Industries), will confer with British EMI execs while in London. Angel was recently given the bulk of the His Master's Voice catalog, an EMI British label, to distribute in the U. S., with Capitol Records, which is also EMI-owned, handling home of the HMV releases.

The Sorias also plan to visit Milan for the La Scala recording of "Turandot," with Maria Meneghini Callas and Elisabeth Schwarzkopf as the lead femme singers. They will also stop over in Salzburg for the opening of the festival under Herbert von Karajan plus some concerts by Otto Klemperer.

R 'n' R Fatality

San Antonio, July 9.

A dislike of rock 'n' roll music proved fatal to a local man. According to police he tried to restrain two others from playing a rock 'n' roll selection on a tavern jukebox. When the two insisted on such music, the trio became involved in a fight.

One of the men admitted that they struck the victim over the head with a bottle to end the altercation. The two were booked for murder at city jail.

BRIT. EXPORTING R&R VIA TERRY DENE DISK

London, July 9.

Britain's newest arrival on the rock 'n' roll scene, Terry Dene, has just done a disk titled "Lucky, Lucky Bobby," for the Decca label, which has been specially flown to the States for immediate release on the London label.

Dene, who made his bow four weeks ago one BBC-TV's "6-5 Special," after being spotted by a tv producer in a London coffee bar, is appearing currently at the Astor Club. He's due to start an eight week vaude tour of Moss Empires on Monday (15).

Germany, France and Italy 'Best Bets' For Pop Payoffs in U. S.: Bobby Weiss

Paris, July 2.

Bobby Weiss, the Continental rep for America's E. H. Morris Music firm says that only Germany, France and Italy are turning out offerings with U.S. chances at the moment. However, Scandinavia is perking and there is always the possibility of another country busting out with solid ditties, like Switzerland, Portugal and Spain a few years ago.

According to Weiss, the much lower pop music exposure in Europe gives a song a longer life and playing time abroad. The U.S. song life expectancy, due to hard disk jockey pushing, greater disk volumes, radio, video, juke boxes, etc., is about three months, while in Europe it can be from one year to 18 months. In fact, "Vaya Con Dios" has passed the two-year mark and is still selling in the Les Paul-Mary Ford version on the Capitol label plus in local renditions.

Started 5 Years Ago

Though Europe had been made conscious of U.S. pop trends right after the war by the U.S. Armed Forces Network, operating from Germany, plus the powerful commercial stations (Radio Europe No. 1, Radio Monte Carlo, Radio Luxembourg), the U.S. song really made its dent in foreign marts five years ago. Savvy U.S. disk servicing of the foreign airwaves helped.

Weiss points out that Continental pubs began to realize that these stations were preparing their clientele for U.S. pop music, and that there was a definite place for it. Weiss says that recently a German song plugger tried to sell him a new Teutonic song which turned out to be an Edith Piaf torcher, "A Hambourg." It had been made into a romantic ballad there and even fooled the plugger.

Weiss states that there is a much more rapid interchange of songs nowadays, with a U.S. hit on foreign marts from four to eight weeks after the U.S., depending on exploitation plans. It is slower when a number travels the other way.

U.S. Music A Staple

Increased disk sales abroad, films, radio, jukeboxes, performance rights, video, sheet music, in that order, have helped make U.S. pop music a staple here. Foreign songs with U.S. chances are also helped by disk label exchanges.

Weiss maintains that the foregoing can lead to some evils. European pubs now get wind of U.S. hits fast, via tradepapers and radio, and by the time a U.S. song comes in on a platter done by a U.S. personality, there are local versions out. Since the man on the spot can make personal appearances, they frequently can outsell the U.S. version.

Weiss has found that some personalities can hold their own abroad, such as Harry Belafonte, Pat Boone, Frank Sinatra, Tennessee Ernie Ford, Doris Day and Nat King Cole. Films are also a top factor and are assiduously followed up by local publishers and diskers. "Que Sera Sera" became one of the top hits here via the pic, "The Man Who Knew Too Much."

Weiss opines that one difficulty he has found, in transposing songs both ways, is that when a song is re-lyricked it might lose something. It is difficult to adapt a song literally without making it seem banal, at times. However, this is just a matter of choice and practice.

The Aping Complex

Another thing resulting from closer U.S.-European musical contact is that various countries begin to imitate U.S. specialties such as rock 'n' roll, jazz, cha cha cha, calypso, etc. Of course, these usually stay local but can cross borders at times. In fact, Weiss has taken an English skiffle song, Ron Goodwin's "Skiffling Strings." Skiffling is a sort of Anglo conglomeration of U.S. folk, and r 'n' r, all mixed and backed by an Anglo interpretation.

However, Weiss has found that offbeat trends rarely make it abroad. Rock 'n' roll died in France though it aroused curiosity in Germany, England and Scandinavia. However, in the long run, they come back to jazz, and, in many cases, its cool variants also.

Weiss says that big scale pop music international interchange is now a reality. The fact that AFN is to open another station in France this summer, for its bases here, means that things may also pick up for U.S. pops in France, for there will be a lot of tuning in on the many U.S. pop musical programs in the offing. Weiss, who was Capitol Records' rep abroad for three years before taking over for Morris, is probably the most traveled music rep extent. He has taken off for Belgium, Holland and England. He headquarters in Paris.

AFM'S 30-DAY GRACE ON O'SEAS VIDPIX SCORING

Hollywood, July 9.

The American Federation of Musicians extended the deadline on its resolution barring members from composing scores destined to be recorded overseas for eventual use as soundtracks for vidpix. Resolution passed at Denver convention set July 1 deadline. However, several AFM members notified the federation that they were unable to fulfill contractual commitments by that time. As a result, a 30-day extension was granted, but solely for fulfilling pending deals, with no new deals to be allowed.

Resolution forbids any AFM member from performing any service—whether such service comes under AFM jurisdiction or not—for foreign scoring.

VARIETY DISK JOCKEY POLL

This compilation is designed to indicate those records rising in popularity as well as those on top. Ratings are computed on the basis of ten points for a No. 1 mention, nine for a No. 2, and so on down to one point. Wherever possible, only records with two or more mentions are listed, even though their total points are less in some cases than those which receive only one mention. Cities and jockeys will vary from week to week to present a comprehensive picture of all sectors of the country regionally.

Inside Stuff—Music

Franciska Bochmann, owner-director of Edition Canzonetta, one of Berlin's leading music publishing houses, told VARIETY that she still finds it tough to get her two religioso songs, "He" and "In the Beginning" (both U.S. items which have received German translation), into the programs of domestic networks which she calls the most important medium for a song's publicity. German radio stations are hesitating because of fear that songs like that wouldn't appeal to German taste and mentality. It's Miss Bochmann's opinion, however, that this decision should be left to German listeners. She thinks that latter might very well take a fancy to this type of music. "This, unfortunately, can't be the case if they are not given the opportunity to hear this music."

Paul Anka, whose ABC-Paramount "Don't Gamble With Love" was a VARIETY Best Bet recently, is a 15-year-old Ottawa schoolboy. He wrote that and flip tune "Diana" himself. They're on Sparton label in Canada. Anka, son of a restaurateur, sang at the age of 13 in a sideshow at Central Canada Exhibition in Ottawa, heading a group called "The Bobbysoxers." Kid took two months out of school recently to peddle his stuff in New York's Brill Bldg., and now is on a plugging tour of Chi and other cities. He had one moderate seller last year on a small indie label, but this is his first on a major. "Diana" is dedicated to an Ottawa girl, Diana Ayoub. Both tunes are published by Panco.

NBC-Radio has gone to the music biz for added promotion on its 'Imagery Transfer" campaign. Through publishers Bregman, Vocco & Conn, the network has acquired a tune, "Pretty, Pretty Image," by Carl Abrams and Bob Corman, which it's plugging on such shows as "Monitor," "Bandstand" and "Nighttime." A demo disk, cut by Corman, has been sent to diskery artists & repertoire men to get the tune out on commercial release. There have been no takers yet.

Guy Lombardo and his brothers, Carmen and Lebert, sold their interests in KLB Oil Associates of Wichita Falls, Tex., last week in a deal reportedly totalling $1,508,000, and involving stock transfers and deferred money payments. The Lombardos owned only a 30% interest in the KLB Company which was bought by the Cataract Mining Corp. of Phoenix. The Lombardo interest purchased 1,500,000 warrants from Cataract entitling them to buy an equal number of shares of that company at $1 per share. The warrants cost $36,500. Guy Lombardo, meantime, has been elected a director of the Cataract company.

Attaway's 'Calypso Song Book' for McGraw-Hill

William Attaway, an authority on calypso, arranger for Harry Belafonte and composer of the Caribbean-styled tempos, has authored a "Calypso Song Book" for McGraw-Hill publication this fall, edited by Lyle Kenyon Engel.

Joseph Wagner's "Orchestration: A Practical Handbook" is also a McGraw item this November.

Doris Day 'Teacher's Pet' Fattening BMI Average

BMI is getting an important wedge in the pic tune field via Daywin Music, firm owned by Doris Day and her husband Marty Melcher.

First big splash from Daywin are the tunes from "Teacher's Pet," which costars Doris Day and Clark Gable. Pic is being produced by William Perlberg and George Seaton for Paramount release. Tunes, by Joe Lubin, include the title song, "I'm The Girl Who Invented Rock 'n' Roll" and "Teacher's Pet Mambo." Also on Daywin's pic tune agenda is the title song for the United Artists release, "Careless Years." It also was cleffed by Lubin.

Last week Al Kavelin, general manager for the Day-Melcher publishing operation, hopped to New York from his Coast base for huddles with his eastern rep, Jerry Simon. Miss Day and Melcher also have an ASCAP firm, Artists Music.

Jukeboxes Take Big Hold in Paris; Can't Tell a Cafe Without One of 'Em

Paris, July 2.

As the myriad of Paris cafes are increasingly being redone in neon and chrome, from their old leaded zinc days, the jukebox has grown along with them. From a scant 1,000 in 1954, the music boxes have now gone to 8,000 and they seem to be skyrocketing. Experts predict five-figure listings within three years.

The jukebox has slowly become an important disk adjunct here in addition to being a lucrative biz. It is also an important part of the cafe scene, which is the French community centre in a sense, besides the numerous U. S. pinball machines.

These garish boxes were introed in Paris in 1947 and did fairly well but played second fiddle to table soccer games. Big players then were Charles Trenet's "La Mer," "Stardust" and some Edith Piaf disks. Youngsters began to dance around it and it was becoming an important outlet for the burgeoning young disk industry.

Then political troubles led to fighting the jukebox, alongside Coca-Cola, by the Communists as a form of "American colonization" of France. This silly premise was soon shown up, but it had held up imports and gave the French a chance to begin to make their own boxes, though most are still U. S. brands (Wurlitzer leading).

6c a Roll

Jukes now give out a 45 speed disk for 20 francs (about 6c) a roll. Only about 20% of the disks turn out to be faves, and usually the many intime Gallic chanters do not measure up to juke demands. Here is where the stronger, more rhythmic U.S. music pays off. Two box toppers of late are Silvana Mangano's "Anna" and Sidney Bechet's "Les Oignons." Anny Gould and Luis Mariano are also faves, while such musichall names as Mouloudji, Georges Brassens, Philipe Clay, Edith Piaf (except for "The Man on the Motorcycle"), have not made it.

Present hits, according to Paul Giannoli's survey in Paris-Presse, are the Italo "Bambino," "Que Sera Sera" and the Platters' rendition of "The Great Pretender." One of the top jukebox reps here is Marcel Wolff who claims he lets his secretaries pick the disks. He is also working on an electronic gadget to flash on the picture of the singer, plus a record that gives three minutes of silence for those few who want to sip their "aperitifs" in the midst of gab, not music.

At any rate, the jukebox is now beginning to take its place here as an offbeat musical entry of importance. The Paris cafes may never be the same, but they are here to stay, and are rapidly multiplying. The jukes are rented or sold and make about $500 a month.

2-Way 'Triangle'

The Sonics' waxing of "Triangle Love" will travel under two flags. Side, originally recorded by the Nocturne label, has been purchased by RKO-Unique for national distribution. In New York, however, it'll remain on the Nocturne label.

Meantime, RKO-Unique has added the Sonics to its roster. Also signed last week were Scotty Carroll & His Metropolitans.

PIANO-PLAYING PEER FORMS OWN ORCH CO.

London, July 2.

Lord Adrian Foley, the piano-playing peer who's recently returned from America, has formed a company to supply orchestras for all affairs. Naturally, he'll concentrate on high society for most bookings.

Lord Foley will front his combos which will vary in size according to the stint. He will also sit in at the piano occasionally. Partners in the company are band agent Derek Boulton and Lord Foley's mother. Outfit will be called Lord Foley's Orchestras.

Dudley Manners Hops To Europe on Disk Biz

Paris, July 2.

Dudley Manners, an ASCAP member and prexy of Dudley Manners Music, publishing company, and Sodeska Records, a diskery, is here on a swing through the Continent during which he will record songs for an LP disk and place his tunes and platters. Marc Lanjean, repping Ray Ventura's Gallic pub and disk interests, has taken Manners' stuff for most of Europe except Austria. It will be via Versailles disks here.

Manners is a retired Army radiologist who had to quit when he got cataracts. In Japan he reverted to some show biz dabbling and came up with Sodeska Records. Watson heads the U.S. Army Band there and did the arrangements for most of the numbers.

L. A. Jazz Spot Folds

Hollywood, July 9.

The Los Angeles Jazz Concert Hall folded after four weeks of operation. It cost promoters Benny Carter, vet sax man, and Jack Hampton around $6,000.

Renovated nabe film house operated on a two-show nightly policy presenting name coast jazz sidemen. The weekly nut was around $4,200.

'Songs in English' on A Comeback in Britain As Rock 'n' Calypso Slide

London, July 2.

The kaleidoscopic music business is forming another pattern here. The shakeup that publishers have been keeping their fingers crossed for quite a while now, is taking place. The reshuffle means the end of rock 'n' roll in its basic form and the absorption of calypso. It also means that the ballad is regaining its lost popularity by leaps and bounds.

Over a few short weeks the barometer of popular taste, record selling charts, has undergone a transformation. Numbers with a rock beat have been falling out of the Top 10 to make way for songs with a normal tempo and lyrics that mean something. It happened quite suddenly around the middle of May when a number titled "When I Fall In Love," recorded by Nat King Cole and released here on the Capitol label, came into the disk hit lists as No. 10. In one week it jumped to third place, and hovered around that mark for a couple of more weeks surrounded by r&r and hillbilly type songs.

The next sentimental number to make the grade was the Peggy Lee rendering of "Mr. Wonderful" on the Brunswick label which also started out in 10th place. Then overnight the r&r disks took the biggest beating they'd had since the rage latched on here; three versions of "Around the World" came from nowhere and comandeered seventh, eighth and ninth places, with "Mr. Wonderful" filling the fifth position and the Cole rendering one above it.

Skiffle music has, to a great extent, replaced r&r as the favorite beat music with the youngsters, and the rock sound is being used in pop big band arrangements as just another noise. Calypso is going the same way, although it never really got started. Even skiffle has to be tuneful to latch on now. The best example of this is the Charles McDevitt recording of "Freight Train," which has been circulating around the best seller lists for several weeks, while others have come and gone just as quickly.

At long last British music publishers can settle back and look to sheet music sales as a major source of revenue without having to depend on their cut from disk sales to keep them in business.

Hollis Plucks 'Guitar'

Hollis Music, a Howie Richmond publishing outlet, has acquired global rights to "Danny's Guitar." Tune originally was published by CFG Music, like Hollis, a BMI affiliate.

Tune was recorded by its author, Danny Perri, for the Golden Crest label.

Success? Count the B.O., Says Harvard Man Who Runs Mass. Dancehall

Nantasket Beach, Mass., July 9.

Bringing Harvard Business School methods to the dancery biz is paying off for Bill Spence, young scion of a prominent Rockland banking and leather manufacturing family, who has gone all-out to revitalize the danceband biz and set the stage for return of the big band era, once a powerhouse on the New England scene.

Spence's just-opened Surf, first N. E. newly constructed ballroom in more than a decade, is being looked over by dancery op vets with respect to the new standards of operation introed by the tyro.

"The only yardstick used by professionals to measure success is boxoffice returns," says Spence as he reported that Surf profits have been made on two of its first three dance nights. Guy Lombardo drew 2,500 paying customers on June 15, where as his many dates at other greater ballrooms this year have been between 1,200 and 2,000 dancers. The Surf's second Saturday night dance, featuring solo introduction of the 21-piece Surf orch got almost 2,000

Sandwiched in between was a close to breakeven night with Kitty Kallen June 21. "We feel that dancers attracted will return, building up a big following by midsummer," Spence said. He pointed out that profit from two of three opening dance nights is considered sock, taking into consideration that another greater Boston Ballroom had weekly public dance nights for eight months before nabbing its first profit night. And he says, such cases are not unusual in ballroom inaugurals.

Spence made a survey of the dance biz, along Harvard Business School lines, before jumping in. He says he spent more advertising money before opening than all the other greater Boston ops shell out together in an entire season—over $10,000.

Witherspoon to Victor

Jimmy Witherspoon, rhythm & blues singer, has been pacted by RCA Victor. Witherspoon worked as vocalist with the Jay McShann band and came up with a hit several years ago in "Ain't Nobody's Business."

He's cutting his first sides under Brad McCuen, of the Victor specialty artists & repertoire department.

fact that the disk companies are now recording more oldies than they have done in the last couple of years. While the standards have always been heavily used for the packaged goods, now the oldies are turning up ever more frequently as singles. Even the rock 'n' roller combos have been turning to the catalog material, Frankie Lymon, for instance, having recorded "Goody Goody" and giving it his usual type of treatment. Other groups, such as Somethin' Smith & The Redheads and the Ray Charles Singers, also have been using standard songs with good impact.

Feeling is that once the wheel begins to turn it will go all the way in the direction of "good music." That is so, fundamentally, because the artists & repertoire chiefs of most of the companies play along with the trends. When rock 'n' roll was hot, they jumped on the bandwagon. When calypso started to move, they moved along with it. Calypso didn't make it on wax, but that didn't prevent the rash of singles. Now it's the good ballads and once again, there's expected to be a rush in that direction. Unlike calypso, the ballad cycle has more working in its favor in the way of musical variety.

Criterion's Writer Pacts

Hollywood, July 9.

Criterion Music, Mickey Goldsen pubbery, has signed a trio of writers to exclusive contracts in an expansion of its activities. Firm has inked Gerry Mulligan for jazz, Laurindo Almeida for latune material and Leon Pober for modern instrumentals.

Criterion already has published six Pober tunes, the latest of which, "Tangi Tahiti," has been recorded on Capitol by Nelson Riddle for release next week. Pober, once known only as a special material writer, has written such tunes as "Moonstruck in Madrid" and "Walk to the Bull Ring" since turning composer.

Lizabeth Scott to Spin In Roulette's Name Gleam

Hollywood, July 9.

Roulette Records steps up its recording activity this summer and plunges into the name field. Label's Coast topper, Jules Losch, has set a deal with Lizabeth Scott to begin recording in a few weeks for the first album in the expansion program.

Losch also has signed harmonic player Leo Diamond, recently with RCA Victor, and has made a deal with Ismald Diaz, Acapulco musician. Latter starts with an album of Latin music, largely original, cut by a 27-piece orch.

Anni of 'America'

Boston, July 9.

A double anniversary was celebrated by Arthur Fiedler and his Esplanade orch at their July 4 holiday concert alfresco style. It was the 20th anni of the concerts and the aud joined the 80-piece orch in the "Star Spangled Banner" to open the second half of the program.

Then they sang "America," on the 125th anni of its first performance at Boston's Park Street Church. Pianist Leo Litwin was soloist in Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue," feature of an all-American second half that ended with Sousa's "Stars and Stripes Forever."

record" in observing the personal rights of persons arrested as suspected dope addicts.

"Musicians are arrested, stripped, searched and subjected to shocking abuses in Philadelphia," Cohen said.

The attorney blasted the N.Y. regulation which makes it necessary for a musician or entertainer to get an identification card to work in a restaurant or cabaret.

Although minimizing the size of the problem of drug addiction among musicians, the panelists stressed that there is such a problem.

Father O'Connor said the addict often takes to dope because he wants the feeling of "belonging." He takes up the habit because he things it's "the thing to do."

The jazz musicians, Taylor and Wright, agreed with Father O'Connor on this point. Taylor said the younger musician—who wants to show he is a "man"—is led into the dope habit by the older musician. The older musician, feeling time has passed him by, often becomes an addict because of his frustration at no longer being accepted, Taylor said.

Dr. Winick linked the form of "booster" a musician takes with the type of music he plays. He expounded this theory:

The New Orleans musicians did not take opium, even though it was legal in the pre-1914 days. He was accepted and drank liquor. The effect of liquor is to make you loud and aggressive—and that's the kind of music they played.

During the 1930's, marijuana, also a stimulant, was in vogue among some musicians. Marijuana pep's you up—and that was the "swing" of the period.

Where the New Orleans and swing eras featured an outgoing type of music, the introspective and "way-out" music of the 1940's and 1950's—the cool and bop era—came in with the use of heroin, a depressant.

Dr. Winick stressed that it is difficult to judge the occupations of the 60,000 dope addicts in the U.S. But he said one survey showed the entertainment field is second only to the medical field in the number of addicts.

Guy Mitchell Surgery

London, July 9.

Guy Mitchell is due to enter the London Clinic today (Tues.) for a knee operation. He's just wound a tour of Britain, and decided to have an old injury put right while he was here.

After he's recovered he'll return to the U.S., where his ABC-TV show is scheduled to start in September. He plans to return to Britain again around the summer of next year.

Chi as '78' Town Vs. RCA Price Hike

Chicago, July 9.

RCA Victor's price increase on 78-speed disks brought raised eyebrows on Chi's record row. The old fast-spins are still a major item here because a unique situation exists in Chi where many retail outlets can peddle more 78 hits than 45s.

According to Ralph Bass, King Records' local a&r man, "Any rhythm and blues record will sell better here on 78 than 45 rpm." While excluding the heavy jukebox purchases which are all 45, Bass stated that in areas like Chi's south side, with a large colored population buying heavily on rhythm & blues labels, retailers consistently order more 78 than 45rpm's and sometimes will order 78s exclusively.

His explanation is twofold. "First, there is the large proportion of 78 players still owned by low-income groups. Secondly, owners of three-speed players don't like fiddling with special attachments for 45s."

Incidents have occurred where record distribs have not been able to meet the demand of retail outlets here for 78s when they had a hit going and have had to send to homeoffices for more platters.

Rapp's Mountain Greenery Hypo: Comic Circuit Spanning 'Dull' Days

A plan whereby a top level of nitery comics would be able to work the New York and New England mountain resort hotels for 10-week periods has been evolved by Charlie Rapp, who books more than 60 inns in those areas. Rapp has already pacted three comics and is in the process of negotiating for others. Set are Phil Foster, Harvey Stone and Lenny Kent who have been signed for 10 weeks each.

Under the plan Rapp is putting into effect, the hotels that use talent on weekends would be approached to use shows on one mid-week night with a name comic as the lure. The funsters will play one show nightly, each at a different hotel.

Rapp feels that since comics are the backbone of the mountain industry, by pacting them for work throughout the season, his booking problems will diminish for him. At the same time (it'll be possible to entice new hotels into his orbit on the basis of controlling a supply of name comics. He's enticing innkeepers to install a midweek show at a reduced rate to keep his comedy stable moving and keeping himself solvent in this regard. Thus, he may be getting $200 for a hotel on a Monday or Tuesday for the same show that he would normally charge several times that figure on a weekend night. However, he feels that he'll make up the comedians' salaries even at the reduced rate.

The major problem now comes with attempts to get the major offices to relinquish some of their funnymen for an entire summer. They feel that they may handicap themselves in servicing their regular nitery clients in this respect. Rapp feels that the guarantee of 10 weeks' work is enough to entice the bulk of the comedians into his stable during normally dull summer period.

Boston Park Commission Bans Cuffo Arts Festival As 'Too Much to Clean Up'

Boston, July 9.

The Hub's cuffo cultural Arts Festival, which concluded a 17-day stand June 30 in the Public Garden, will play there no more, the Parks and Recreation Commission declared last week. Commission informed festival directors it would stick to a previously announced decision to ban the exhibition from further use of the Public Garden. Commissioner Frank R. Kelley said the commission, in rejecting the request of Nelson W. Aldrich for permission to use the P. G. next year, explained that large sections remain unusable to the public after each festival and it takes his workmen the rest of the summer to repair the damage.

Aldrich, chairman of the Boston Art Commission and a festival director, said at the start of this year's event that his group would hire workmen and have the sod restored within two weeks. Boston Common or the Hatch Memorial Shell area were suggested as alternate sites. Aldrich said the festival trustees have given long and searching consideration to alternate sites, and it is their conelusion that the Public Garden is ideally suited for both the exhibitions and the performances.

Other locations would raise physical and financial hazards of such magnitude as to make continuance of the fest impossible in its present form, Aldrich said. The trustees asked Kelley to reconsider.

San Antonio Cafe Theft

San Antonio, July 9.

Local police were on the lookout for safecrackers who took $400 but missed $700 more at the Kit Kat Club. Dick Jones, club owner, said the money was taken from a cabinet safe.

The thieves failed in their efforts to crack the inner vault of a wall safe containing the $700, he said.

Los Angeles, July 9.

Judy Garland racked up $112,000 for her 11-night appearance at the Greek Theatre. The tally represents near capacity business.

Jose Greco and his troupe opened a one-week stand last night (Mon.) as second offering of the season in outdoor theatre.

U. S. Gets a New Slant on Jukes Via Biz Census

Washington, July 9.

How much do the average jukebox and such amusement machines as pinball games, penny arcade machines, etc., take in during the course of a year?

Uncle Sam has finally presented a picture of their earnings. This is for the year 1954 when the last Census of Business was made.

The census figures show that the take of the jukebox, nationwide, comes to $629 per machine for the year. It is higher for the other types of amusement machines —$722 per machine.

The range of jukebox earnings is very wide. Apparently the machines are played most in Nevada where the take per each was tops for the nation—$1,361 annually. Washington, D.C., was second with $1,096 per machine.

Although the figures for "other amusement machines" includes slot machines where legal, Nevada doesn't lead in this category, perhaps because that state has so many other machines to share suckers' dimes and quarters. In this category—including all types of amusement machines aside from jukeboxes—the State of Washington led the nation with a yearly gross of $1,304 per machine. Maryland was second with $1,245 for each machine.

In the study for metropolitan areas, Washington, D.C., ranked first and Boston, second, in receipts per machine for both music machines and other amusement machines.

NITERY MOVE-IN IRKS SPECIALISTS

By JOE COHEN

Bookers are seriously concerned about their club date business starting this fall. Contention is that the large-seat niteries and hotels are chewing off the private parties and much convention business, so the remainder will be only a fraction of the former volume.

The casual daters have, in the past, seen only a few of the party dates going to the niteries. However, the large-seaters are now advertising headliners far in advance in keeping with longterm bookings, so that solicitations can be made on the basis of the headliners booked. Some even have started newspaper ads playing up the long string of headliners booked in order to pave the way for solicitations.

While the timing of certain events, such as anniversaries, will not be changed because of headliners, a boniface is in a stronger position to get the date if he knows what the attraction will be at the time. Large parties can be sewn up on the basis of having a strong bill. The urge to get a greater share of party business has been one of the reasons why many nitery owners are booking far in advance. The cafemen have been able to take advantage of the fact that catering costs have gone up to the point where many organiza-

NELSON EDDY VAUDER OK 22G IN L'VILLE WK.

Louisville, July 9.

Iroquois Amphitheatre's 19th season teed off last week (1) with "Varieties of 1957," vaude type bill topped by Nelson Eddy & Gale Sherwood. Outdoor spot pulled a moderately good $22,000 for the week.

First part of the bill had Four Whirlwinds, roller skating turn; Harmonica Rogues, standard harmonica tooting and comedy; Slavenska & Brascia, ballet and jazz; Romo Vincent, m.c., in his nitery turn; Jimmy Nelson with Danny O'Day.

Second part consisted of Evers & Delorez, dance turn on wire; comic Leo De Lyon, closing with Eddy & Sherwood.

Larry Parks heads cast of "Teahouse of the August Moon" with Gene Blakely, John Alexander and others in support, opening yesterday (Mon.) as second week's attraction.

Sands, Showboat, El Rancho Vegas Fill Exec Posts

Las Vegas, July 9.

Archie E. Loveland, vet hotelman, has been named managing director of the Sands Hotel. Announcement was made jointly by Jake Freedman, president; Jack Entratter, general manager, and Carl Cohen, casino manager.

The new Sands exec has 25 years of inn experience, starting in his hometown of Portland, Ore. He was a top official at the Ambassador, Los Angeles, before coming to Vegas. Before his Sands hookup, he was at El Rancho Vegas for six years.

Garr Nelson, singing emcee at the Showboat Hotel, has been named entertainment director. Nelson will continue his song chores, and will in the future book all shows for the hotel. He will also handle publicity and advertising under the new setup.

Appointment was made by Joe Kelley, one of the hotel's owners, who had been handling the booking.

Charles R. Kahn has been appointed by Beldon Katleman as director of sales promotion and conventions at El Rancho Vegas. Kahn, a longtime executive in the retail and fashion promotion field, will coordinate a new sales incentive program for the hotel and assist owner Katleman in projected plans for convention development.

Next month, Kahn will make a nationwide goodwill tour on which he'll promote Las Vegas in general and El Rancho in particular.

E. M. Loew, the New England circuit theatre operator who started his partnership with Lou Walters about 15 years ago in the Latin Quarter, N.Y., will become a nitery chain owner on his own. He's taking over the N.Y. LQ solo as of July 22. Presently no change of operation are planned. However, it's reported that Coast nitery operator (Moulin Rouge) and booker Frank Sennes will take over the bookings of that spot. Sennes was recently in town to set a deal for Donn Arden to handle the production at the LQ. Mme. Natalie Kamerova had been doing the staging. Leon Leonidoff, senior Radio City Music Hall producer, has also been mentioned for the producer's post.

Loew in addition to operating the N.Y. spot will head the Miami Beach Latin Quarter.

The end of this historic partnership, an unusually long one in nitery annals, was not unexpected in the trade. The pair had been feuding of late, and bitterness increased when Walters stepped out of the Florida arrangement to lease the now defunct Copa City there. Since then there had been reports that the pair would be splitting.

The final split came over the weekend when agreement was reached for Loew to take over Walters' interest said to be 40%. Walters stated that his share would come to $420,000. Edward Risman is expected to remain as LQ general manager.

Walters said he would continue to operate in New York as a cafeman. He'll look around for probable sites. but hasn't made up his mind whether it would be on the east or west side. Meantime, Walters will participate in the cafe's earnings until January.

The Latin Quarter and the Copacabana have been the most successful nitery operations in New York. LQ has been considered particularly fortunate inasmuch at it's geared to a non-name production policy, but frequently brings in topliners to get an added boxoffice lift.

Walters and Loew took over the LQ in 1942 following a brief run as George White's Great White Way. Walters at that time had been operating the Latin Quarter, Boston which he sold out some years after establishing himself in New York. Loew financed the N.Y. project with initial capital of $40,000.

The site had been housing so many nitery flops that the realtor tried to persuade them not to take on the venture. Walters produced the shows, while Loew remained in the background, but both were constantly in conference. The combination was one of the longer-lived boniface pairings on Broadway, being exceeded in the nitery field only by Leon (Enken) & Eddie's (Davis).

New Jersey's Vegas-By-the-Sea

Wildwood, N. J., July 9.

Paced by Frankie Laine at the Beach Club, virtually all clubs are running at capacity with long lines awaiting entry. So any remaining rubber bands on bankrolls are being hastily removed to pact more stars. The summer talent budget here will now exceed $2,000,000.

Oscar Garrigues' 1,800-seat Manor Hotel Supper Club is currently offering Georgia Gibbs and the Mariners. Comic Artie Dann, the Lorraines and the Mike Francis band round out the show. Tony Martin opens this week. Garrigues has re-signed Joni James for her fifth return engagement on the strength of her showing during the July 4 week. She plays the Manor for a frame starting July 20.

Ted Lewis and the "Calypso Carnival" open July 14 for a ten-day stand at the Beach Club of Diamond Beach Lodge. This show was moved up 10 days when Spike Jones was forced to cancel his engagement due to his tv show renewal.

Phil Bonelli and Eddie Rossi of the Hotel Biltmore Surf Club have engaged rock 'n roll and jazz headliners. Opening yesterday (Tues.) for a frame were the Four Tunes. Screamin' Jay Hawkins will appear for seven days beginning July 15. The Billy Williams Quartet do a seven-day stint starting August 5. Lionel Hampton's band is expected to fill a late July and early August engagement. The house combos are the Hi Lads and the Nitecaps.

With the extension of the nightly music curfew until 2:30, nearly all spots are hiring at least three combos to keep the music flowing continuously. In addition, many of the groups are called upon to play matinee jam sessions.

The Matys brothers at the Hotel Grenoble club have added a new girl singer, Judy Manners. Joe Hough and Nan Jones are also in this show.

Club Esquire has the Jace Roundtree trio and the King Charles band. Savoy ballroom has Ronnie Jones and the Classmates, the Skoiaans, the Equadors and the Elaine dancers for a rock 'n roll package.

Johnny Burns trio is at Layre's Dutch Kitchen. Frankie Jones has joined the Playboys at the Elmira club. Marcia Manning and the Tune Sellers have joined the Four Aces and Fisher and Marks show at Club Bolero

Val Frances is at Herrmann's. Lee Nylon and Al Tumulo are at Fairview Keyhole bar. The Town and Country boys are at Chateau Milan, the only stronghold of country music in the area.

Norman Main is at Grandes while the Shelter Haven Marine Room has comic Pat Henry, singer Mona Carroll, dancer Gerry Costello and Len Lewy's orch. Bob Eberle and Mickey Shaughnessy have been added to the Sea Isle Casino lineup.

Club Hof Brau, in a sharp reversal from the rock 'n roll trend, is featuring a battery of professional singing waiters. They include Gene O'Neill, Andy Russell, Puggy O'Neill, Frankie Springman, Louise Duncan, Penn Faye and the Casuals.

Muriel Draper is at the Black Eagle and Viola Klaiss has joined the musical comedy cast at the Lou Booth Chateau Monterey.

Stan Sharp is at the Shamrock club while Bill Carter occupies the Shore Bar.

Organist Otto Beck, who started his career with Arthur Godfrey on a Washington, D. C., station, has returned to the Rio Grande cafe.

Nonpro Reader on The Reasons for Frisco's Downbeat Night Life

San Francisco.

Editor, VARIETY:

The article in VARIETY (June 19) on San Francisco night life and George Andros' letter set me in motion to the point of putting down on paper a few of my own reactions to these problems.

It seems to me the problems of San Francisco night life are compounded of many parts, of which the 20% tax is almost the smallest, if a part at all. First of all, and I don't say this critically but, I think, factually, San Francisco is "behind times" in many things. Our bridges were built comparatively recently . . . our freeways in and around the city are not yet complete . . . our stores and restaurants have only in the past few years remodeled or opened up with fresh new decor. Hammock-Swinging Trade Dives In 'Padlock' on Salisbury Show Biz; 'It Oughta Be Declared Disaster Area'

Salisbury Beach, Mass., July 9.

The take at concessions along the beachfront in liquorless Salisbury Beach was off anywhere from 25 to 50% last weekend, and hardest hit outside of the 40-odd niteries, bars and liquor shops were beanery and motel ops. Lack of money-spending customers is attributed to loss of the 1,200-seat Frolics as a seven nights a week big-name nitery.

From Hampton Beach, N. H., the next beach up the coast, whose vacationers customarily go to Salisbury for nitery entertainment, comes word that their biz is being hurt by bonedry Salisbury. Ralph T. Harris, real estate agent, said the closing of the top Salisbury night clubs would seriously affect Hampton's summer trade.

"People come to Hampton for their vacation and go to Salisbury for their entertainment," he said. "Now, where will they go? There's not a place in miles that they can go for dinner, dancing and good entertainment." How much Hampton will suffer this season is hard to tell right now, he said, "but it will begin to show up this weekend and we'll know pretty quickly."

"Of course the real test will come next year," Harris explained. "Many summer guests come from quite a distance and will make their reservations for this summer unaware of the change in Salisbury's status. But, next year they'll find some place else to go."

He pointed out: "I don't mean that people just come here so they can booze it up in Salisbury, but after spending all day at the beach —and the people come here for our beach—a man and his wife want to dress up, go out to a nice place for dinner, have a cocktail and see a good show. I'll be willing to bet half of the people who went to the Frolics the past years were vacationing at Hampton Beach.

At Salisbury parched cash registers were giving ops the blues. A motel owner and prexy of the town's newly formed chamber of commerce, said: "This place ought to be declared a disaster area—it looks like a ghost town." Ops were unanimous that they could see no benefits in the loss of liquor. "The drys may say that now we'll get family groups instead of sports. But the families bring their own food to the beach, they usually stay only for the day—and don't forget the family is headed by a man and he likes to go where he can get a glass of beer with his sunshine," the chamber of commerce prexy said.

Eugene Dean, amusement park op who opened a toy store to replace his shuttered Normandy Hotel, said: "It isn't the end of the world—the hurricane a couple of years ago was worse." Dean, who said the toy store was offsetting somewhat the loss in liquor trade, forecast a 25% drop in income. He predicted that at the next opportunity Salisbury will give liquor an overwhelming vote.

Dennis Mulcahy, whose Frolics played the top nitery names for more than a decade, is open weekends only with a 14-piece orch, soft drinks and food cabaret style. Without liquor to pick up the tab for the name acts, the nitery had to go to the weekends only. Mulhacy said he hoped to do okay even without liquor, but that it would still take time to tell how he would do this year.

4 Board Members Quit S.C. Auditorium in Huff; Temporary Mgr. Named

Columbia, S. C., July 9.

Township auditorium here, operated by the county, has a new manager—temporarily—and a new managing board.

The board was named by the legislative delegation after four of its five members resigned. The resignations were triggered, the old members said, by a recent report and audit of a delegation subcommittee studying the auditorium and its affairs.

New board members immediately chose C. O. Gobbel, an accountant, for a 90-day tour of duty as manager, instructed him to set up a new accounting system at the auditorium and determine what emergency repairs were necessary to the building. They said they would name a permanent manager at a later date.

Old board members told the legislative delegation, in resigning, that they did not approve of "insinuations" in the report, and were thus stepping out of the posts. Board members are not paid for their work, and serve for an indefinite period. Previous manager, A. H. Ron, already had announced his retirement, but moved up the date to coincide with the resignations.

R-B's Supermarket Sale For Its Ballpark Date

Albany, July 9.

Ringling Bros., Barnum & Bailey Circus will give six performances at Hawkins Stadium ball park in Menands, Aug. 2-4, under sponsorship of Ted Bayley and Bob Snyder. It's the first time that a major circus has showed, without a tent setup, in the Albany area. Seating capacity will exceed 10,000 for each show, scaled to $3.30.

Advance sale is to be conducted through supermarkets—Albany Supermarket, in this city.

Suit Vs. Gisele Szony

Los Angeles, July 9.

Breach of contract suit seeking $7,500 was filed in Superior Court here against Gisele Szony by personal manager William J. Harty.

Harty said he made an agreement with the dancer in October, 1955, to be her personal manager for one year at a fee of 15%. Suit alleged she declined to accept his services after February, 1956, and asked the $7,500 as commissions due on her estimated earnings of $50,000 for the year.

Brit.'s Blackpool Starts Summer Run As Cross Between Coney & Vegas

By GORDON IRVING

Blackpool, Eng., July 9.

Comedy, with a dwindling touch of rock 'n' roll, is the summer keynote at this top British vacation resort, mecca of millions of lower and middle-class holidaymakers each year from June to October.

The singers no longer hold the top place. Comedians, male and femme, have taken over. It may be a sign that the U.K. rage for warblers is dropping off, and that funny folk will again come into their own.

Gag merchants top the layout at most of the resort's dozen live vauderies, now playing to near-capacity biz at matinee and at twice-nightly performances.

Jimmy Jewel & Ben Warriss, longtime English comedy duo, headline a $90,000 George & Alfred Black production at the 3,000-seat Opera House's "Big Show of 1957," annual highspot of the town. A Burning Oil Wells spectacle is the eye-catcher. Yana, tv thrush, is featured.

Bob Monkhouse, tv panelist and comedian, gags slickly in the George & Alfred Black "Startime" next door in the Winter Gardens Pavilion, with another strong comedy support in Ken Morris & Joan Savage. Monkhouse is a new but big marquee name for the millions of tv-conscious vacationers.

'Summer Showboat'

Third George & Alfred Black (pool!) production, geared on more earthy lines, is "Summer Showboat" at the Palace, starring a homely little north-of-England comedienne, Hylda Baker, a popular name hereabouts with her local-flavored comedy. Femme funstar has recently risen from comparative normality to topline status via a few tv spots and comedy positioning at head of previous Blackpool revues at the Queen's and South Pier shows. She is limited to local market, but this is a wide one, with huge hinterland population from England's industrial belt and a guaranteed shop-window most of the year round.

Tom Arnold, London impresario, in conjunction with local showman Jack Taylor, is staging another fun-angled show in "Rocking with Laughter" at the cinema-turned-live-theatre, the Hippodrome. He is featuring two youngsters, both of the zany variety, in Ken Dodd, a rabbit-toothed comic with great potential, and Stan Stennett, slick gagman already established via London shows and tv and radio. Glamor segment is filled by blonde tv chirper Jill Day, who bowed out of last summer's Opera House "Big Show" here because of a breakdown.

Just Like The Yanks

The Hippodrome show is aping U.S. giveaway shows in featuring a weekly "Take It Away" game, with prizes totalling $1,500.

Only legit offering, apart from summer stock season of weekly comedies at the local rep house, the Royal Pavilion, is an H. M. Tennent Ltd. presentation in association with Sydney Box of "Ride A Cock Horse," new comedy by William Barrow. Stars are the tv husband-wife partnership of Wilfred Pickles and Mabel, strong north-of-Eng. favorites, teamed together in a play for the first time.

Innovations are two limited July afternoon seasons, both geared to catch the moppet and teenage trade in post-midday period before the younger element go off to evening dancing. One, presented by Harold Fielding, features rock 'n' roller Tommy Steele at the Palace Theatre, and the other stars Sooty, tv tv puppet manipulated by Harry Corbett, in eight weeks of matinees at the Queen's.

Steele, disk, vaude and tv draw in U.K., and recently starred in his own biofilm at 20, is set to be a top draw. Teenage vacationers have booked seats from all parts of Britain. One girl sent $40 to reserve a place for every performance.

Aqua At The Derby

Main other innovation of the 1957 summer is an Aqua Show at the Derby Baths, titled "Big Splash of 1957," and starring comedy gang Albert Burdon & Co., with Robert Earl, disk singer, and featuring jungle boy Tarzan Jr. with Cheetah. Special prices are being given for moppets.

James Brennan, local Lancashire impresario, stages his annual revue in the more intimate little Queen's Theatre, with comedian Vic Oliver and chirper Anne Shelton. Support acts include diminutive comic Jimmy Clitheroe, Lenny the Lion (ventriloquial act presented by Terry Hall), Musical Elliotts, and Bob Hammond's Cockatoos.

Joan Regan, English tv chirper, was originally billed for this Queen's production, but was allowed to bow out following court case after dispute over whether she was pacted for this show or for a London Palladium stint.

Three Pier productions, unique aspect of English summer show biz, go on merrily, with bright array of name acts at each of South, Central and North Piers. These are seaside pavilions astride actual piers jutting out into the ocean, furthest distant from town centre being the South Pier Pavilion. Here a comedian new to Blackpool, Denny Willis, son of vet Scot comedian Dave Willis, is being featured in "Rockin' The Pier." Production is presented by James Brennan in association with Johnnie McGregor and Pete Davis Ltd.

South Pier has to fight against its obvious distance from centre of town's festivities. Willis, already established at holiday spots in southern England, is enhancing his reputation here, but has to guard against gabbing too rapidly in Scot style.

Central Pier show, "Let's Have Fun," has comedians Morecambe & Wise, plus trumpeter Kenny Baker, singer Joan Turner, the slick Canadian group Three Deuces, and vent Dennis Spicer.

Delfont's North Pier

For the first time Bernard Delfont, London impresario and tenpercenter, has taken over at the North Pier Pavilion. The result, on grander scale than in previous years, is "Showtime," produced by tv megger Ernest Maxin, and starring Ruby Murray, Tommy Cooper, and Lancashire comedian Ken Platt, with the Four Jones Boys, Morton Fraser's Harmonica Gang, Delrinas, etc.

Arrival of Delfont on the Blackpool scene marks the end of the

Casino Las Vegas Show at $5 Top An SRO Eye-Opener in Arg. Theatre

By NID EMBER

Buenos Aires, July 2.

The Casino Las Vegas Show opened in B. Aires' Opera Theatre Friday night (28) and has been sold out since, despite a $5 top doing two shows nightly and playing the audiences of 5,000 a day.

What's more, Sol Lerner, the show's manager, and Clemente Lococo, the Opera's owner-impresario, are completely sold on each other.

Lerner feels remorseful when he recalls the brushoff treatment given the Lococos in New York when their bid was first mulled for a Casino Las Vegas tour. Unhappy experiences with some "South American" impresarios, he says, have left U. S. promoters wary of booking in this part of the world. The cold fact is that no big American show has ever before hit B. Aires. Attractions like the Joos Ballet or Dunham Dancers and Theatre Ballet have come, but mainly under concert management auspices, which does not connote the same ballyhoo.

Lococos Beat the Rap

All sorts of coin and other guarantees were demanded of the Lococos before their overtures were even considered. Each time they met a stiff demand, an even stiffer one was made. They had to put up a guarantee of four weeks' salary for the entire cast, transportation for 43, purchase costumes, music and even sent up their own decorator to the States to get ideas for the sets.

Since arrival here, Lerner has realized that if a reputable firm is involved, producers need have no qualms about booking for Argentina. The Lococo circuit has gone out of its way, to do more than was asked of it. Across the wide front of the Opera Theatre, a lavish marquee is keeping day-long crowds gaping from the opposite pavement. Centre of the sign is a huge roulette wheel, cutouts of June Taylor dancers representing the numbers. The girls rotate in a setting of fountains playing amidst tropical plants, while supporting columns list the show's features.

The theatre has been fitted with 32 dressing rooms, plus a company lunchroom, so food can be had during rehearsal. As the show has been advertised on the entire Lococo chain of film theatres, crowds storm the boxoffice every day, and though the $5 top is a severe test for most local pockets, this expenditure is a must for pleasure-loving Argentines.

Senoritas & Rock 'n' Roll

Lerner's first view of the masses of humanity in search of entertainment along the Avenida Corrientes any night a week,, practically bowled him over. "Corrientes any night" he told the press boys, "is like Times Square on New Year's Eve." This is a part of Argentine life which Americans haven't been led to expect. They have some dim ideas about narrow streets with iron-grilled windows, behind which sit senoritas in lace mantillas, listening to a guy in broad black hat twang a guitar and whisper passionate sibilants through the bars. They find senoritas riding pillion (saddle) on scooters behind leather-coated swains, chasing to rock 'n' roll sessions with LP albums of The Platters under their arms.

The point is that tv has yet to hit the Argentines, so they still go out for entertainment. This market can assure American performers from 10 to 20 weeks more work at good salaries every year, amid living conditions far cheaper than those at home.

The Lococos laid on a-steak and champagne meal for the entire company when it got off the plane in B. Aires, after the long hop from Miami. Another champagne and caviar party followed the opening night click.

The original 10-week contract may spread to 20 weeks, although June Taylor and Sol Lerner must hop back to New York next week for tv commitments. Present plans are for the show to take in Montevideo, Sao Paolo and Rio de Janeiro on the way back to N. Y.

tions as well as individuals throwing functions have found it more economical to take the party to a cafe rather than bring in caterers and entertainers.

Because of the upsurge in party business the club owners have been forced to depend on that class of business for a substantial part of their revenue. Virtually every cafe now has a banquet manager with some of the larger spots having several salesmen as well.

All this activity by niteries is bringing gloom to the orthodox club date agent. Of course, many organizations still prefer to stage their own soirees, but mounting costs in all departments are figured to cut down that number. In addition, there's a growing tendency by nitery owners to deny their acts the right to double from cafes to club dates, so that it becomes more difficult to book. Another factor contributing to the woes of the club date agent is the inability to line up headliners long in advance. Neither agencies nor acts will take a chance on ruining a longterm engagement or a profitable week for the sake of one-nighter, all of which works to their disadvantage when soliciting dates.

The industrial shows and the large conventions are becoming the major hopes of the club-daters. Occasions calling for book shows, or in situations where gigantic budgets are available, can still be worked out in favor of the casual bookers. In other fields, the going is becoming rougher.

clubs have yet to catch up with this.

Compare Fack's II, the Blackhawk, Macumba, Storeyville with similar spots in New York or Los Angeles. Admittedly there are places in both cities that are not overly inviting. Be that as it may, these and other San Francisco night clubs, bars, etc., are styled with a leftover '30s atmosphere that is depressing. Then too, San Francisco seems to have a strange custom of collecting a door charge, which immediately reminds the customer that he is going to spend more than he wants to before he even sets foot in the place.

'Thug' at the Door

What a way to start an evening of pleasure! You're greeted at the door by someone who generally looks and dresses like a thug. After being relieved of several dollars you find yourself at a table or a bar stool or a standing place and you gaze around, if you can see through the bad ventilation, at the badly decorated atmosphere. You are then, and all through the evening, accosted by a waitress who makes no secret of the fact that she is there to "hustle drinks," and hasn't the slightest interest in making your evening pleasant. Not only that, but the drinks seem microscopic in size, and when they are brought to the table you must pay for each round as they arrive. All of the above seem to be native customs peculiar to northern California. In most cities a cover charge or a minimum is accepted and you pay your bill as you leave.

Then there is this aspect of the situation. The large Bimbo or Village type of spot seems to be on the way out. The smaller places in either a bohemian or at least a fairly decent atmosphere seem to be on the increase. The problem of the hotel room is undoubtedly related to this trend. Smaller, interesting and more attractive places seem to have more of a chance, be they a jazz room, a supper club or just plain bar.

Spenders Not Attending

Another local puzzle is that, generally speaking, the people with money to spend are not educated to attending night clubs. In San Francisco such activities have not attained any social stature. San Franciscans will go out to a restaurant, be it fashionable and new such as the Ondine or Piro's . . . or colorfully old San Francisco as Jack's Amelio's etc. But to date there has been little reason to go beyond this stage of "going out." There is no cafe society here (which is just as well). There is no inducement of "being seen" or keeping up with things. There seems to be a certain stigma attached to S. F. bistros . . . left over perhaps from the City's wilder days.

The only operation that has broken through this apparent barrier is The Matador, probably because Barnaby Conrad was smart enough to have society money back him originally, and because he himself had the good taste to create an atmosphere people enjoy being in.

Although I am not in the business and have no connection with it, it seems to me there is more to running a room than providing topnotch entertainment in the form of name acts. Dick jockeys' plugs may help stimulate a certain amount of business, but over the long haul topnotch surroundings and good service will do a better job. Chester A. Rhodes.

Inside Stuff—Vaude

It's now necessary to book nearly a full year in advance if a nitery owner is to get the top layer of European acts, according to Lou Walters, operator of the Latin Quarter, N.Y., who recently returned from a trip abroad. Walters pointed out that many of the cafes in Europe hire their acts for long periods and when that's through, they generally have several choice locations on the Continent waiting. Thus an American operator has to be able to come up with a long guarantee at a higher figure and make arrangements a year ahead of the date if desired talent is to be imported.

Fay Cullen widow of Mike Cullen, longitme Loew Theatres district man in Pittsburgh and before that pilot of the circuit's Penn there, has joined "Ice Capades" company as secretary to Nate Walley, the blade show's company manager. For last couple of years, Mrs. Cullen has been working for Stanley Warner in New York. Before her marriage to Cullen, she was Girl Friday to M. A. Silver, Warner Bros. and SW zone topper, having come to Pitt with him from Albany, where Silver worked before he was transferred to Pitt to replace Harry Kalmine when latter was upped to g.m. for WB Theatres.

John Giordmaine, under-five-foot Toronto magician who recently appeared on the CBS-TV Ed Sullivan show, is a Maltese-born, ex-Swift Packing Co. electrician. He got $500 for 90 seconds on the show. He has appeared in London, Paris, Rome, Miami and L.A., but avoids regular night club dates because he dislikes "the unpleasant nomadic life of the variety artist." Giordmaine makes his daytime living performing his tricks in the magic shop of Eaton's, Toronto department store, where he's been for 27 years. He's 58 and has a son at Columbia U.

Blackpool Starts Run

Lawrence Wright regime. For the past 32 years this London songwriter and showman, known in Tin Pan Alley as Horatio Nicholls, has presented seaside shows on the North Pier. He has bowed out so he can devote more time to other projects, including upcoming film biog.

Annal Tower Circus, starring Charlie Cairoli, Anglo-French clown, is stronger this summer than previously, with comedy, acrobatic, animal and aerial acts. The Flying Marilees, aerial Texans, well-timed threesome, score with outfronters in this one-ring circus, running thrice daily at height of vacation season.

Sunday concerts are another aspect to the summer bonanza at this cross twixt Coney Island and Las Vegas. The Four Lads, from U.S., starred on June 30 under Harold Fielding banner at the Opera House, and also took part in the peak-hour indie tv series "Meet the Stars at Blackpool," now being beamed weekly from the resort in place of the winter-spring show "Sunday Night at London Palladium."

This tv program will catch many incoming U.S. acts, touring Britain's vauderies and stopping-off Sunday nights at Blackpool.

Amusement traders of every variety do a roaring business day and night along Blackpool's "Golden Mile," neon-lit promenade by the sea front. Mock-auction operators, driven from other towns, have set up shop.

Catering to both resident vacationers and day trippers, incoming traders and local shopkeepers frequently keep open until midnight, defying local regulations. Closing hours are normally 8 p.m. Some traders can take $300-$400 on busy summer Sundays.

A local body of opinion is against "degrading sex shows" on the town's Golden Mile. One Blackpool minister, Rev. George Artingstall, has gone as far as to say that Blackpool "holds a viper to her bosom by giving entertainment space to such demonstrations."

Town has no gambling casinos, as in Nevada, and only lukewarm spending is indulged in via amusement machines and games. Niteries are unknown apart from one new bid, the Pink Elephant Club, presenting a twice-nightly floorshow, with tv chirper Lorrae Desmond and emcee Ray Burns. Dancing is until 2 a.m., with members-only safeguard.

Anticipate 10,000,000

This summer 60,000 persons daily will shell out to see the town's 16 live shows. Season's total is likely to work out at approximately 10,000,000. Coach parties to figure of 3,500 per weekend will arrive, this number increasing in fall for the anual illuminations, said by many American tourists to be bigger and brighter than the lights of Coney Island.

Estimated the illuminations, billed as "The Greatest Free Show on Earth," encourage over 3,000,000 extra visitors.

Standard of British vaude is being well maintained, with production qualities of revues high considering limited stage facilities in many houses. Accent on comedy rather than pop songs is intriguing, although Yana, tv warbler, holds down a bright spot in the Opera House, and thrushes like Ruby Murray, Anne Shelton, Jill Day and Joan Turner keep up the femme interest.

It is still one of "the greatest free shows on earth." You can bed-and-breakfast still for as little as $1.80, and live quite merrily and cheaply on the English worker's staple of fish-and-chips and beer.

World show biz would be the poorer and less interesting if Blackpool were to disappear.

Uneasy Lies the Crown Of 'Miss Oregon' as TV Ed Labels Contest 'Rigged'

Portland, Ore., July 9.

Sonja Landsem was selected by a panel of five judges as "Miss Oregon" for the "Miss Universe" contest set for Long Beach, Cal., next week. She outbeautied 16 others and was declared winner by one vote. Everyone went home peacefully.

Last week, a kingsized hassle developed regarding the winner. Jack Hurd, editor of TV-Radio Preview, hollered "rigged" to both the Oregonian and Journal newspapers. The story grabbed plenty of space and air-time.

Irving Rotenberg, rep for the sponsoring American Health Studios, asked the judges to select six femmes for the finals. When the votes were tallied, Miss Landsem, also an employee at AHS, was announced winner. Hurd, one of the judges, charged that there was too much "mystery" about the balloting and too many "coincidences" surrounding the entire shindig.

The ballots were counted in the presence of several persons. Miss Landsem was the choice of the audience at the Paramount Theatre where the crowning took place.

Hurd's tirade raised a great deal of commotion and many eyebrows. It also left a bad impression of this type of contest. Oscar Meinhardt, official in Long Beach, stated that Miss Landsem will be the official rep for Oregon. Paramount Theatre manager Dick Newton and his staff were not involved in the rhubarb.

Hub Storyville Reopens

Boston, July 9.

After a two-week closing for preparation of the Newport Jazz Festival, George Wein's Storyville, now airconditioned, reopened last night (Mon.) for the remainder of the summer with a no minimum, no tax policy.

Summer attractions include Ruby Braff with a seven-piece group and Leon Sash, accordionist.

Flu Cancels Troupe

Honolulu, July 9.

Asiatic flu epidemic which has been sweeping the islands "wiped out" the floor show at the Top o' the Isle nitery in the Waikiki Biltmore Hotel last week.

Headliner Haunani Kahalewai and 12 members of her Hawaiian-Polynesian troupe were bedded by flu, as were some members of the orchestra, forcing room to rush in a substitute band.

FREED R&R'S 120G AT B'WAY PAR BEATS FEB.

Alan Freed and rock 'n' roll are still going strong in the N.Y. metropolitan area. His one-week stand at the N. Y. Paramount, which ended last night (Tues.), was a shade better than his previous appearance last February. Freed and his retinue pulled $120,000 as against $119,000 on his previous date.

He's slated for a 10-day stand at the Brooklyn Paramount, starting Aug. 30.

Paramount circuit is also putting in a spot vauder at the Radio City, Minneapolis, starting tomorrow (Thurs.), topped by Herb Shriner and the Jimmy Dorsey band batoned by Lee Castle.

Belafonte SRO In N.W. at Top Scale

Seattle, July 9.

SRO is the rule for the northwest stands of Harry Belafonte.

Orpheum Theatre, 2,600-seater scaled $5-$6, sold out 10 days ahead, for $13,000. Paramount, Portland, seating 3,000, scaled $3.50 to $5.50, was likewise an early sellout, handling $16,000. Exhibition Forum, Vancouver, B.C., with 7,000 capacity scaled $2.75 to $4.75 also SRO at $27,000.

Spokane, the fourth city on the route, with Northwest Releasing of Seattle handling the N.W. dates, is a "late" town, but at that a sellout is not likely as the Coliseum seats 7,300, scaled from $2. to $5. Seattle date is tomorrow (Wed.).

Wham $86,500, S. F.

San Francisco, July 9.

Harry Belafonte drew a smash $86,500 in seven performances at the Opera House at $5 top. SRO for 3,300-seater is $95,000.

Fat b.o. was credited in large part to promotion from William Zwissig's Curran-Geary staff.

Long '4th' Weekend Jampacks A. C.; Satchmo-Hamp-Ella at Warner's

Atlantic City, July 9.

With the weatherman a firm ally—Sunday excepted—the resort and suburban areas played to one of the greatest four-day Fourth of July weekend crowds in its history. They packed the beaches, stood in long lines for food and drinks, with hotel, motel and rooming house accommodations next to impossible to find.

All resort business worked to its full capacity. It was aided somewhat by the coldness of the surf, which registered a chilly 65 degrees on all four days. This discouraged bathing, forcing many who would have passed most of their time on the beach to don clothes and look for other amusement, which they found on the piers, in the motion picture houses, or in the 300-odd spots which dispense alcoholic beverages.

Another shot in the arm for resort business is the National Housewares Show which opened yesterday (Mon.) in the city's big Convention Hall, with 20,000-plus buyers.

Tops on the talent parade this week is the appearance of Louis Armstrong and his aggregation, Lionel Hampton and his band and Ella Fitzgerald in George A. Hamid's huge Warner Theatre with shows scheduled from tonight (Tues.) until Monday (15). This is the first live show to appear this season at the Warner this season, usually a first-run film house.

Singer Lillian Briggs and comedienne Jean Carroll headline Steel Pier vaudeville (7-13), while Maynard Ferguson and Gene Krupa Quartet play in the Marine Ballroom through Thursday (11) with Woody Herman in through July 18.

Quarterdeck Theatre, which housed legit shows for the past decade, opened last week as a motion picture house featuring foreign product and playing "Wee Geordie." Marty Portnow came into the Hotel Brighton Punch Bowl last week (4).

Rock 'n' Egg Roll

Wildwood N.J. July 9.

Bud and Dave Moore have opened the new Moore's Inlet Club with a decided change of pace from previous seasons when rock 'n' roll was the exclusive menu.

This season, the Moores are offering Indie Chino, "the China Doll of the Blues," and Two Gents.

'4th' Sans Fireworks? It Happens in Hub As Thousands Jeer

Boston, July 9.

Hub's July 4 fete was spoiled for 20,000 on historic Boston Common when the skedded mammoth fireworks show was abruptly cancelled Thursday night (4) because the contracting technicians failed to show.

Police cruisers equipped with loudspeakers brought the news to the packed throng, while city officials tried to determine what had gone wrong. Jack Brown, director of public celebrations for the city, expressed "profound regret at this unprecedented occurrence" and announced that the pyro show would go on at some evening in the near future.

The crowds were angry at the announcement of cancellation of the fireworks display for which one of the largest throngs in the history of the Common was gathered. Major John B. Hynes 'office said that Rockland Fireworks was given three contracts totalling $5,000 for displays at Boston Common, Smith Feld, Bright and Columbus Park, South Boston. By far the largest part of the money, $2,500, was to have been spent for the Boston Common display.

Casino Las Vegas Show at $5 Top An SRO Eye-Opener in Arg. Theatre

By NID EMBER

Buenos Aires, July 2.

The Casino Las Vegas Show opened in B. Aires' Opera Theatre Friday night (28) and has been sold out since, despite a $5 top doing two shows nightly and playing the audiences of 5,000 a day.

What's more, Sol Lerner, the show's manager, and Clemente Lococo, the Opera's owner-impresario, are completely sold on each other.

Lerner feels remorseful when he recalls the brushoff treatment given the Lococos in New York when their bid was first mulled for a Casino Las Vegas tour. Unhappy experiences with some "South American" impresarios, he says, have left U. S. promoters wary of booking in this part of the world. It's now necessary to book nearly a full year in advance if a niitery owner is to get the top layer of European acts, according to Lou Walters, operator of the Latin Quarter, N.Y., who recently returned from a trip abroad. Walters pointed out that many of the cafes in Europe hire their acts for long periods and when that's through, they generally have several choice locations on the Continent waiting. Thus an American operator has to be able to come up with a long guarantee at a higher figure and make arrangements a year ahead of the date if desired talent is to be imported.

Fay Cullen widow of Mike Cullen, longitme Loew Theatres district man in Pittsburgh and before that pilot of the circuit's Penn there, has joined "Ice Capades" company as secretary to Nate Walley, the blade show's company manager. For last couple of years, Mrs. Cullen has been working for Stanley Warner in New York. Before her marriage to Cullen, she was Girl Friday to M. A. Silver, Warner Bros. and SW zone topper, having come to Pitt with him from Albany, where Silver worked before he was transferred to Pitt to replace Harry Kalmine when latter was upped to g.m. for WB Theatres.

John Giordmaine, under-five-foot Toronto magician who recently appeared on the CBS-TV Ed Sullivan show, is a Maltese-born, ex-Swift Packing Co. electrician. He got $500 for 90 seconds on the show. He has appeared in London, Paris, Rome, Miami and L.A., but avoids regular night club dates because he dislikes "the unpleasant nomadic life of the variety artist." Giordmaine makes his daytime living performing his tricks in the magic shop of Eaton's, Toronto department store, where he's been for 27 years. He's 58 and has a son at Columbia U.

Blackpool Starts Run

Lawrence Wright regime. For the past 32 years this London songwriter and showman, known in Tin Pan Alley as Horatio Nicholls, has presented seaside shows on the North Pier. He has bowed out so he can devote more time to other projects, including upcoming film biog.

Annal Tower Circus, starring Charlie Cairoli, Anglo-French clown, is stronger this summer than previously, with comedy, acrobatic, animal and aerial acts. The Flying Marilees, aerial Texans, well-timed threesome, score with outfronters in this one-ring circus, running thrice daily at height of vacation season.

Sunday concerts are another aspect to the summer bonanza at this cross twixt Coney Island and Las Vegas. The Four Lads, from U.S., starred on June 30 under Harold Fielding banner at the Opera House, and also took part in the peak-hour indie tv series "Meet the Stars at Blackpool," now being beamed weekly from the resort in place of the winter-spring show "Sunday Night at London Palladium."

This tv program will catch many incoming U.S. acts, touring Britain's vauderies and stopping-off Sunday nights at Blackpool.

Amusement traders of every variety do a roaring business day and night along Blackpool's "Golden Mile," neon-lit promenade by the sea front. Mock-auction operators, driven from other towns, have set up shop.

Catering to both resident vacationers and day trippers, incoming traders and local shopkeepers frequently keep open until midnight, defying local regulations. Closing hours are normally 8 p.m. Some traders can take $300-$400 on busy summer Sundays.

A local body of opinion is against "degrading sex shows" on the town's Golden Mile. One Blackpool minister, Rev. George Artingstall, has gone as far as to say that Blackpool "holds a viper to her bosom by giving entertainment space to such demonstrations."

Town has no gambling casinos, as in Nevada, and only lukewarm spending is indulged in via amusement machines and games. Niteries are unknown apart from one new bid, the Pink Elephant Club, presenting a twice-nightly floorshow, with tv chirper Lorrae Desmond and emcee Ray Burns. Dancing is until 2 a.m., with members-only safeguard.

Anticipate 10,000,000

This summer 60,000 persons daily will shell out to see the town's 16 live shows. Season's total is likely to work out at approximately 10,000,000. Coach parties to figure of 3,500 per weekend will arrive, this number increasing in fall for the anual illuminations, said by many American tourists to be bigger and brighter than the lights of Coney Island.

Estimated the illuminations, billed as "The Greatest Free Show on Earth," encourage over 3,000,000 extra visitors.

Standard of British vaude is being well maintained, with production qualities of revues high considering limited stage facilities in many houses. Accent on comedy rather than pop songs is intriguing, although Yana, tv warbler, holds down a bright spot in the Opera House, and thrushes like Ruby Murray, Anne Shelton, Jill Day and Joan Turner keep up the femme interest.

It is still one of "the greatest free shows on earth." You can bed-and-breakfast still for as little as $1.80, and live quite merrily and cheaply on the English worker's staple of fish-and-chips and beer.

World show biz would be the poorer and less interesting if Blackpool were to disappear.

Uneasy Lies the Crown Of 'Miss Oregon' as TV Ed Labels Contest 'Rigged'

Portland, Ore., July 9.

Sonja Landsem was selected by a panel of five judges as "Miss Oregon" for the "Miss Universe" contest set for Long Beach, Cal., next week. She outbeautied 16 others and was declared winner by one vote. Everyone went home peacefully.

Last week, a kingsized hassle developed regarding the winner. Jack Hurd, editor of TV-Radio Preview, hollered "rigged" to both the Oregonian and Journal newspapers. The story grabbed plenty of space and air-time.

Irving Rotenberg, rep for the sponsoring American Health Studios, asked the judges to select six femmes for the finals. When the votes were tallied, Miss Landsem, also an employee at AHS, was announced winner. Hurd, one of the judges, charged that there was too much "mystery" about the balloting and too many "coincidences" surrounding the entire shindig.

The ballots were counted in the presence of several persons. Miss Landsem was the choice of the audience at the Paramount Theatre where the crowning took place.

Hurd's tirade raised a great deal of commotion and many eyebrows. It also left a bad impression of this type of contest. Oscar Meinhardt, official in Long Beach, stated that Miss Landsem will be the official rep for Oregon. Paramount Theatre manager Dick Newton and his staff were not involved in the rhubarb.

Hub Storyville Reopens

Boston, July 9.

After a two-week closing for preparation of the Newport Jazz Festival, George Wein's Storyville, now airconditioned, reopened last night (Mon.) for the remainder of the summer with a no minimum, no tax policy.

Summer attractions include Ruby Braff with a seven-piece group and Leon Sash, accordionist.

Flu Cancels Troupe

Honolulu, July 9.

Asiatic flu epidemic which has been sweeping the islands "wiped out" the floor show at the Top o' the Isle nitery in the Waikiki Biltmore Hotel last week.

Headliner Haunani Kahalewai and 12 members of her Hawaiian-Polynesian troupe were bedded by flu, as were some members of the orchestra, forcing room to rush in a substitute band.

FREED R&R'S 120G AT B'WAY PAR BEATS FEB.

Alan Freed and rock 'n' roll are still going strong in the N.Y. metropolitan area. His one-week stand at the N. Y. Paramount, which ended last night (Tues.), was a shade better than his previous appearance last February. Freed and his retinue pulled $120,000 as against $119,000 on his previous date.

He's slated for a 10-day stand at the Brooklyn Paramount, starting Aug. 30.

Paramount circuit is also putting in a spot vaude at the Radio City, Minneapolis, starting tomorrow (Thurs.), topped by Herb Shriner and the Jimmy Dorsey band batoned by Lee Castle.

Belafonte SRO In N.W. at Top Scale

Seattle, July 9.

SRO is the rule for the northwest stands of Harry Belafonte.

Orpheum Theatre, 2,600-seater scaled $5-$6, sold out 10 days ahead, for $13,000. Paramount, Portland, seating 3,000, scaled $3.50 to $5.50, was likewise an early sellout, handling $16,000. Exhibition Forum, Vancouver, B.C., with 7,000 capacity scaled $2.75 to $4.75 also SRO at $27,000.

Spokane, the fourth city on the route, with Northwest Releasing of Seattle handling the N.W. dates, is a "late" town, but at that a sellout is not likely as the Coliseum seats 7,300, scaled from $2. to $5. Seattle date is tomorrow (Wed.).

Wham $86,500, S. F.

San Francisco, July 9.

Harry Belafonte drew a smash $86,500 in seven performances at the Opera House at $5 top. SRO for 3,300-seater is $95,000.

Fat b.o. was credited in large part to promotion from William Zwissig's Curran-Geary staff.

Long '4th' Weekend Jampacks A. C.; Satchmo-Hamp-Ella at Warner's

Atlantic City, July 9.

With the weatherman a firm ally—Sunday excepted—the resort and suburban areas played to one of the greatest four-day Fourth of July weekend crowds in its history. They packed the beaches, stood in long lines for food and drinks, with hotel, motel and rooming house accommodations next to impossible to find.

All resort business worked to its full capacity. It was aided somewhat by the coldness of the surf, which registered a chilly 65 degrees on all four days. This discouraged bathing, forcing many who would have passed most of their time on the beach to don clothes and look for other amusement, which they found on the piers, in the motion picture houses, or in the 300-odd spots which dispense alcoholic beverages.

Another shot in the arm for resort business is the National Housewares Show which opened yesterday (Mon.) in the city's big Convention Hall, with 20,000-plus buyers.

Tops on the talent parade this week is the appearance of Louis Armstrong and his aggregation, Lionel Hampton and his band and Ella Fitzgerald in George A. Hamid's huge Warner Theatre with shows scheduled from tonight (Tues.) until Monday (15). This is the first live show to appear this season at the Warner this season, usually a first-run film house.

Singer Lillian Briggs and comedienne Jean Carroll headline Steel Pier vaudeville (7-13), while Maynard Ferguson and Gene Krupa Quartet play in the Marine Ballroom through Thursday (11) with Woody Herman in through July 18.

Quarterdeck Theatre, which housed legit shows for the past decade, opened last week as a motion picture house featuring foreign product and playing "Wee Geordie." Marty Portnow came into the Hotel Brighton Punch Bowl last week (4).

Rock 'n' Egg Roll

Wildwood N.J. July 9.

Bud and Dave Moore have opened the new Moore's Inlet Club with a decided change of pace from previous seasons when rock 'n' roll was the exclusive menu.

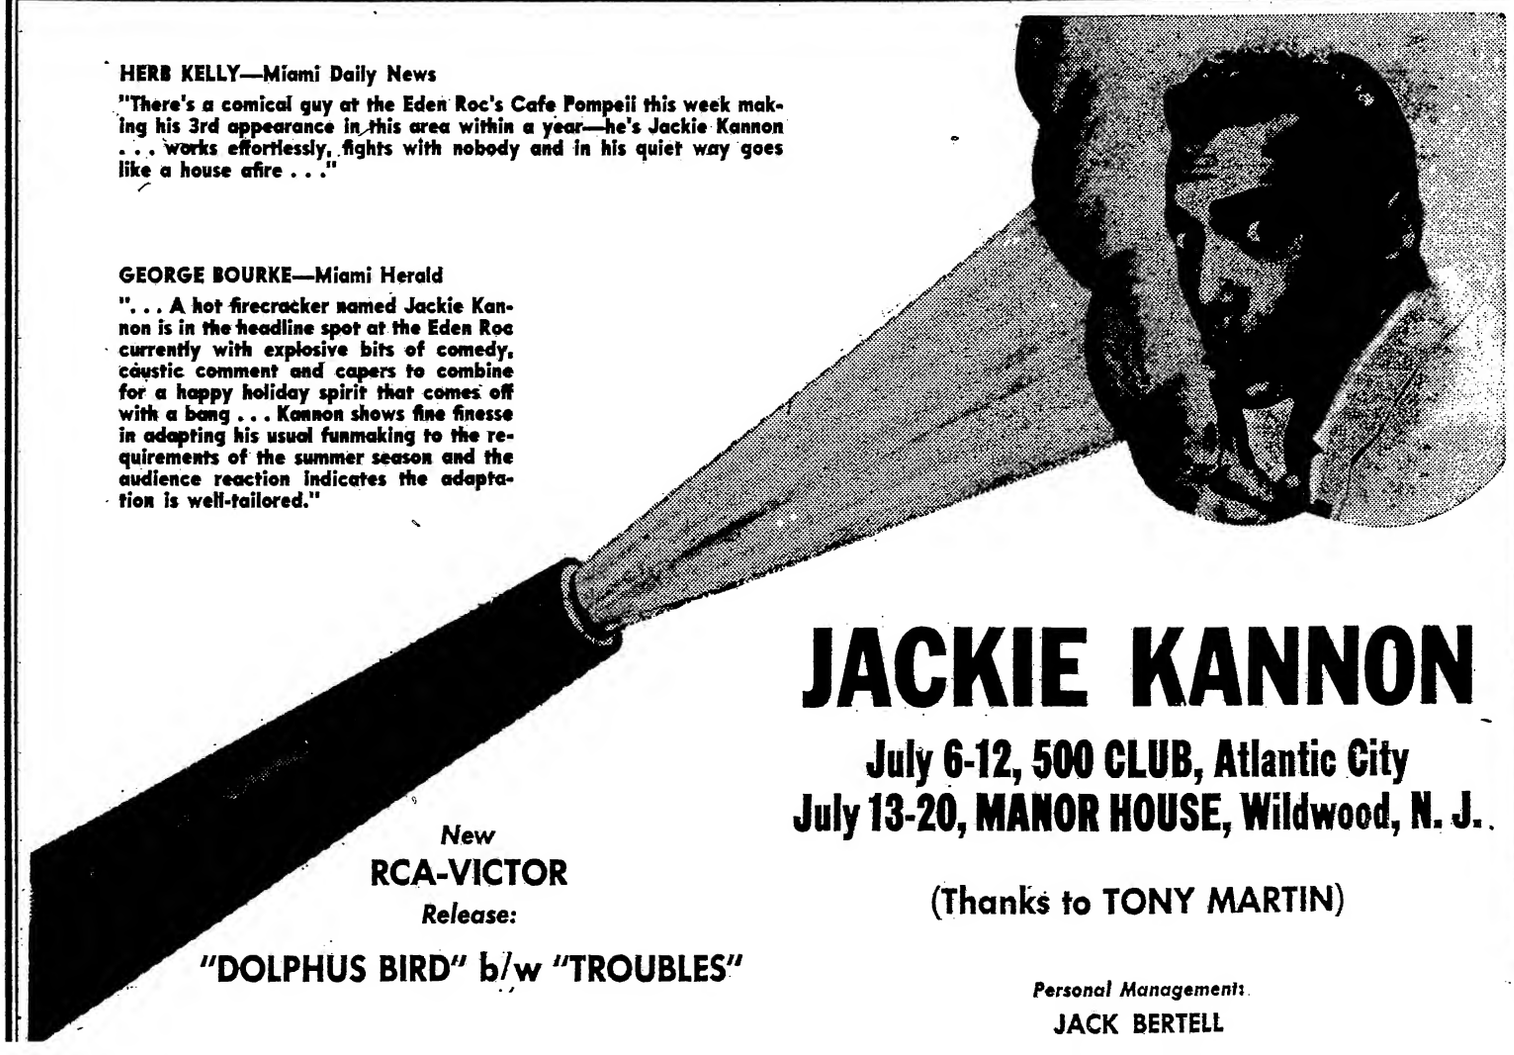
This season, the Moores are offering Indie Chino, "the China Doll of the Blues," and Two Gents.

'4th' Sans Fireworks? It Happens in Hub As Thousands Jeer

Boston, July 9.

Hub's July 4 fete was spoiled for 20,000 on historic Boston Common when the skedded mammoth fireworks show was abruptly cancelled Thursday night (4) because the contracting technicians failed to show.

Police cruisers equipped with loudspeakers brought the news to the packed throng, while city officials tried to determine what had gone wrong. Jack Brown, director of public celebrations for the city, expressed "profound regret at this unprecedented occurrence" and announced that the pyro show would go on at some evening in the near future.



The crowds were angry at the announcement of cancellation of the fireworks display for which one of the largest throngs in the history of the Common was gathered. Major John B. Hynes 'office said that Rockland Fireworks was given three contracts totalling $5,000 for displays at Boston Common, Smith Feld, Bright and Columbus Park, South Boston. By far the largest part of the money, $2,500, was to have been spent for the Boston Common display.

"There's a comical guy at the Eden Roc's Cafe Pompeii this week making his 3rd appearance in this area within a year—he's Jackie Kannon . . . works effortlessly, fights with nobody and in his quiet way goes like a house afire . . ."

GEORGE BOURKE—Miami Herald

". . . A hot firecracker named Jackie Kannon is in the headline spot at the Eden Roc currently with explosive bits of comedy, caustic comment and capers to combine for a happy holiday spirit that comes off with a bang . . . Chez Paree, Chi

Chicago, July 2.

Milton Berle with Betty George, Stan Fisher, Metropolitan Sextet, Dunhills (3); Ted Boyer, Ted Fio Rito Orch (12). $1.95 cover, $4.95 minimum.

Come summer holidays and Chez Paree niteowls are bringing along their school-age kids. While in a more lusty vein than his tv characterization of Uncle Miltie, Berle gives the lie to bluenosed assertions about what kind of comedy is adults-only material. If anything, the tots present opening night showed less embarrassment at the ribald humor than their parents. The show shapes as the most solid the Chez has offered in some time. It's strong from the start. Ted Fio Rito's orchestral backing has never been better and the audience, although numbering less than 300 opening night, was unusually responsive.

This production package is in the typical Berle format. The comic's warmup routine involves a special material patter song outlining his career. From then on the succession of performers find their acts infiltrated by emcee Berle, whose heckling and versatile talents add to the acts.

Betty George is the bosomy thrush making a big impression as a heavily fortfied member of uplifted femmes now on the nitery circuit. This attractive dark-haired girl remains well poised through Berle's heckling, and renders "Love, Love, Love" competently.

Showy harmonica capers by Stan Fisher brings him an encore. Fisher, who used to work with Berle on his nitery tours, benefits like the rest of the cast by being the butt of Berle's repartee. A harmonica duet with the headliner also brings plaudits and the wishy conversations between the two are handled with sufficient care to score with the house.

Operatic exerpts from the Metropolitan Sextet serve chiefly to give the headliner his chance for slapstick clowning. The group is capable of sufficiently loud vocals, thus freeing the mike for Berle's use, and the femmes are attractive.

Final act, the three Dunhills, is well-synchronized and relaxed male tap trio who always rate tops at the Chez with their close order drill. Berle shows his own tap talents with them as well as his usual burlesqued antics.

Hypnotist Ted Boyer continues on but not between shows as originally intended. He succeeded in keeping the first-show crowd so long that a jam-up existed when the second crowd came in. The Chez is still experimenting to find the best spot for him. Show winds up July 9 and the Vagabonds follow. Leva.

500 Club, A. C.

Atlantic City, July 6.

Tony Martin, Jackie Kannon, Phyllis Ponn, Rene & His Puppets, Lee Henderson Dancers (8), Joe Francisco Orch (18); $5 minimum.

In his first night club appearance in the resort, Tony Martin opened Paul "Skinny" D'Amato's big Vermillion Room in the 500 Club with three shows played to capacity audiences in the 1,000-seater this July 4 Saturday night weekend. Martin gives with songs old and new, supported by the addition of four violins and a cello to the regular orch. His offerings meet with excellent response. Only damper was singer's insistence that airconditioning be shut off during 35 minutes he is out front, which finds club uncomfortably warm the last part of his act.

But despite the heat, it's Martin all the way as he wins with such tunes as "All of You," "White Tie, Top Hat and Tails," "I Love Paris," "Old Cape Cod," "There's No Tomorrow," "See You in My Dreams," etc.

Outstanding are "Around the World" from the motion picture and "I Could Have Danced All Night" from "My Fair Lady." Singer gives well-balanced stint, offering clarinet bit, very well done, plus audience participation and has to beg off despite heat.

Comic Jackie Kannon in his first appearance here offers a song and patter routine which scores heavily. Kannon's stuff is surefire. He liberally ribs the girls, for great returns, and flails away at rock 'n' roll and the Chinese music fad. Tops it all with India magician act that is a show-stopper. Rates as one of the best comics to hit the club.

Phyllis Ponn is a lanky brunet beauty who does night club ballet for good mitting. Rene and his puppets round out a good bill. He has clever act working French poodles and then longhaired pianist, but much of the effect is lost because he had to perform on stage instead of platform he normally uses.

Two production numbers are offered by glamourously dressed Lee Henderson dancers (8) with Joe Francisco's orch backing solidly. Walk.

Desert Inn, Las Vegas

Las Vegas, July 2.

Patrice Munsel, Jackie Miles, Arthur Maxwell, Steve Wiland, Art Johnson, Cleone Duncan; produced by Robert Schuler; staged by Rod Alexander; special material by Irving Graham; Carlton Hayes Orch (18), Don Arden Dancers (12); $2 minimum.

Patrice Munsel's third venture into Vegas exhibits her at her versatile best—which is a strong pat on the back, since her first two trips here (at the late New Frontier) were delightful enough to pull back repeaters even among the non-opera lovers. Current stint, ingeniously staged by Rod Alexander, is a tour de force for Miss Munsel—an omnibus of long-hair & pop chirps, terps, comedy, and sex. Dramatic lighting adds to the effectiveness of the act, and strong assists are given to star by singers Arthur Maxwell and Steve Wiland, both of whom sock across showmanship savvy.

Miss Munsel's repertoire includes "Hymne Au Soleil," "Softly As In A Morning Sunrise," "Wait Till You See Him" and "Un Bel Di," latter getting tremendous mitting. Top salvos also go to "I Want To Be Loved" and "Just One of Those Things," in which she's clad in a sexy gam-revealing outfit. A clever production of "An Occasional Man" features Maxwell and Wiland with her, and she does a very funny number with Charleston and Black Bottom terps. Conductor-arranger Jerry Alters batoned the Carlton Hayes orch (18) for the act which had first-nighters shouting for encores.

Jackie Miles, extra added on bill, is a welcome returnee to the Painted Desert Room with his hep monolog which covers gambling, tv, wife and kiddie jokes. Lengthy yocks reward his Gene Autry routine reprise, and his turn is perfect balance for Miss Munsel's musical package.

An exciting Donn Arden calypso production number is held over from previous show, which features songology of Art Johnson and Cleone Duncan, and dancers (12). Show set for four frames. Duke.

Le Sexy, Paris

Paris, July 1.

Gerard Sety, Fokkers (2), Menestrals (3), Frank & Maisie Mumford Puppets, Roger Stefani, Patricia Dawsen Parakeets, Nadja Lana, Lili La Pudeur, Tilda Ellen, Rita Renoir, Rita Cadillac, Magda, Loulou Guiness, Lucienne Herve; $5 minimum.

M. Perraul's cellar club off the Champs-Elysees mixes striptease and some good acts, plus a pinch of production value to wrap this into something with enough for the flesh oglers and for those wanting some substantial entertainment. It's a staple in the nitery setup. There is name and dame value, and it looks to remain a regular.

Vague show theme is bits based on fairy tales, but it is the Wolf who is chased by Red Riding Hood, the Beast by Beauty, Bluebeard by his wives, etc. Incidentally, it always ends in a peel.

Among girls, standouts are Magda who, after a perfect cancan, still has to undrape; Nadia Lana who combines a rippling belly dance with nudity; Tilda Ellen with a hand manipulater Mephisto outfit which cleverly seduces and nudes here; Rita Cadillac and Rita Renoir for their frenzied contortions, and Lily La Pudeur and Loulou Guiness for their epidermal additions.

After the flesh comes some red meat with the witty, deft Gerard Sety who looks like he is ready for smart U.S. boite bookings. With dry, sly patter he goes through a series of transformations from Samurai warrior to Indian, pirate, Roman gladiator, etc., using only clothing props. Ingenious, glib, offbeat and yockful, this is most unusual act rating international attention.

Fokkers (2) do a neat knockabout act with comedy added by a hefty dame undering a little man. Frank & Maisie Mumford Puppets are fine stringers and beguile onstage and on customers' tables. Patricia Dawsen Parakeets are for the people as well as the birds. Roger Stefani adds a fine terp note in his graceful contorting in the cancan, and Menestrals (3) fill in with a good choral act of offbeat and folk-songs underlined by colorful production spects. Luciene Herve does a good femcee wrapup of all this. Mosk.

Latin Quarter, N. Y.

(FOLLOWUP)

Lou Walters has put in another of his periodic changes of headliners that makes a second visit to this Broadway spot worthwhile for his regulars. Both Jack Durant and Bobby Breen haven't exhibited on Broadway in quite some time, with other new addition to the talent collection being the Tokayer Troupe.

Durant has apparently abandoned his pratfalls, but is doing comparatively well as a standup comic. He gets the crowd rolling in short order. The summer run of tourists are vastly amused at his lines. Not all of them are new, but they have the virtue of a hard-hitting delivery and with the authority of a comic who knows how to hit home. He's on long enough to make a good impression on everyone in the house.

Breen, the onetime moppet filmster who boy-sopranoed a couple of decades ago, similarly hasn't been around Manhattan for a long time. A tenor is a virtually a new sound on the boards. His pipes aren't too far removed from the tones he knocked out in his boyhood. But he's still a good singer with a repertoire that includes a brace of his film tunes and others of the era when his contracts had to be approved by the courts. As a concession to the necessity of doing an act, he does a good takeoff on various kinds of singers, including the tone-deaf speciments. He gets along handsomely here.

The Tokayer Troupe, comprising four boys and a girl, do some good teeterboard tricks that embrace skillful landings into a high perch. Get a good mitting.

Other assets on this Walters layout include the Trio Cottas, the longrunning team of acro-adagio workers who have a pair of hounds providing novelty to this turn; George Matson, who specializes in record pantomimes of femme singers; Isabela & Miguel, who knock out some good flamenco, and singer Pamela Dennis. The line is still a decorative item and two parading near-nudies privide a running gag in this show.

Per usual, Jo Lombardi bats out the musical chores with precision and effectively provides dansapation. Jose.

B'ch Club, Wildw'd, N.J.

Wildwood, July 3.

Frankie Laine, Corbett Monica, Danii & Genii Prior, Keddy Lester, Barbara Bowman, Penny Parker, Bob Lappin Skyliners (3), Charlie Spivak Orch (17); $4 minimum.

Back on home soil after many misunderstandings and a sound drubbing from British critics, Frankie Laine appeared in fine fettle as he opened to a packed house and an ovation that could only be described as tumultuous. The mere mention of his name and his appearance without singing a note touched off an exciting reception. He then walked to center stage and sang simply "That's My Desire," just the three words for heavy mitting.

He starts things off with "Shine," "Moonlight Gambler," "Annabelle Lee," "Sixteen Tons" and "Jealously." At this point, he dons his now famous trademark—the dark-rimmed glasses—to peer at the audience and comment, "Oh, there you are." With his dynamic drive and song showmanship, he's never in trouble building an ovation with each number.

Next, he inserts what he calls "Torch Time," a medley of "These Foolish Things," "Once In A While" and "I'll Be Seeing You." As he works in a dull red spot, this segment seems to have great impact. He offers a treatment of his Columbia waxing, "Love Is a Golden Ring," and then presents "I Believe."

Laine's closing four numbers are "Lonesome Road," "Granada," "Without Him" and a bombastic "Jezebel." He exits leaving them begging for more. Al Lerner, his musical director, handles the Charlie Spivak orch for the Laine songalog.

Fresh and funny Corbett Monica and the zephyr-like dancing Priors set a fast pace in the early segments of the show. Spivak orch does a perfect supporting job. Math.

Royal Nevada, L. V.

Las Vegas, July 6.

Ina Ray Hutton and Her All Girl Orch (18), Rose Marie, DeMarco Sisters (4), Marilyn Orlando, Ruth Costello; $3 minimum.

Ageless Ina Ray Hutton braves the Crown Room with her all girl orch to present a pleasing hour-long review. While the boxoffice will get stiff competition for the four-week duration, comedienne Rose Marie and the DeMarco Sisters aid considerably in making the show more than just another all girl revue.

Miss Hutton's two solo vocal selections—"I Could Have Danced All Night" and "Jamaica Rhumba"—are handled silkily.

Of the two production numbers, "The Jewel Song" is the choreographic standout. The line (16) dances to "Around the World in 80 Days," "True Love," and "So Rare" while lighting effects change and cascading bubbles encase the cast at the climax. Production numbers are staged by George Moro.

Other band selections include "Granada" and "Hoedown," the latter performed by four violinists and an accordionist.

Rose Marie delights with her whiskey-voiced wit and song parodies. The comedienne sings "Hello, Hello, Hello" and "If It Weren't for the Girls." Then she clambers atop a piano for a comic sequence about her tippling "Uncle Charlie"—directed at a ringsider. Her performance is warmly received.

The DeMarco Sisters zip through "I'm Late" and "If I Were a Bell I'd Be Ringing," before launching a clever novelty number, "Four Little Misses (Looking for a Hit)." The last is a lament on the fact that the group has no hit song to present and they spin through the successes of the Andrews Sisters, DeCastro Sisters, McGuire Sisters, and the Chordettes.

A new face, 13-year-old Marilyn Orlando, is refreshing as she sings "I'm Walkin'" and "All Shook Up." Ballerina Ruth Costello performs a graceful dance that draws enthusiastic applause at the outset of the show.

Maurice Duke produces the show that is written by Hal Fimberg. Music is arranged by Jerry Vaughan, with costumes designed by Billy Livingston and staging by George Moro. Digl.

Beverly Hills, Newport

Newport, Ky., July 5.

Jane Froman, Georgie Kaye, Donn Arden Dancers (10), John Juliano, Gardner Benedict Orch (10), Jimmy Wilber Trio, Larry Vincent; $3 minimum, $4 Sat.

Overflow reception for Jane Froman after a 17-year absence sets Greater Cincy's ace nitery on the way for a hefty fortnight. Supporting her are Georgie Kaye, also a fave here, and the dependable location line and band, in a highly entertaining 75-minute floorshow.

Miss Froman's greeters include those who go back to her radio start at Crosley's WLW, from which she headed such stars as Ramona, Doris Day and the Clooney Sisters, and her growing army of tv fans. Charming in a white satin sequined gown with full length blue and white stole, the soprano holds the boards for 30 minutes. Building all the way, her cycle of pops and special tunes breaks off with "I Believe." The gallant trouper, expert with a handmike, flits about stage with no detection of plane crash injuries.

Georgie Kaye, likewise solid over a half-hour route, brings a lot of new laughs since his visit here last summer. The dapper comic, with Bob Hope eyes and Fred Allen twang, makes good use of graph props and psychiatric folly in rapidfire delivery of exceptional material. Injects a bit of hoofing for added yocks.

Sue Carson and Rusty Draper top the lineup opening July 19. Koll.

Dunes, Las Vegas

(FOLLOWUP)

Las Vegas, July 6.

Gravel-voiced Eddie (Rochester) Anderson joins Larry Steele's "Smart Affairs" in the Arabian Room to give the show the cohesion it lacked in its first eight days without him. The comic appears four times during the course of the now healthfully slimmed down "Affairs."

Rochester opens with a playback skit between himself and Jack Benny via telephone (Benny is across the street at the Flamingo). In his second number, in ragtag dress, he combines with veteran Johnny Lee in a series of pratfalls and a song, "I'm Waitin' for Jane."

Comic highlight is a Julius Caesar-Mark Anthony-Cleopatra skit, with Rochester as a toga'd Caesar and Lee as Mark Anthony. The newly added star closes with "Sunny Side of the Street" soft-shoe backed up on the piano by Maurice Rocco.

Steele has done an excellent job of trimming "Affairs." Scissored are Butterbeans and Susie and several bulky production numbers. Even the remaining dance numbers by the Beige Beauts and Beaus (18) and the "Modern Harlem Girls" (7) are successfully clipped at the right spots. Digl.

Zardi's, Hollywood

Hollywood, July 6.

Don Rickles, June Perry, Will Osborne Orch (8), Don Tosti Orch (5); $3 minimum.

Word of mouth will have to help business for this layout, since neither singer June Perry nor comedian Don Rickles are well-known on the Coast. Comment should be favorable, however, particularly in the trade, and give Zardi's a chance to develop a following for something less esoteric than the jazz for which it has been known in the past.

Rickles is a completely zany comedian who bills himself as "The Emperor." It's part of his buildup as a mad ruler type and the humor that spews forth is in keeping with the billing. It defies formal description although at times it seems to be more in the vein of a satire on both evangelists and demagogs and he evokes a steady stream of guffaws. Opening night, to a largely trade audience, he dwelt heavily on show biz items and occasional lapses into Yiddishisms. Latter attribute at times indicated he would be a better bet for Billy Gray's than for Zardi's. Throughout, the method in his madness is apparent and he gets off to salvos.

Miss Perry, a newcomer to show biz as well as to the Coast, has been attracting attention in the east for the last few months. She has a basically good singing voice and projects with ease. Her best items are uptempo tunes, particularly "Just in Time" and "How About You," but she also has an appealing delivery that registers well on ballads. Vocal quality is strong but the visual appeal is marred somewhat by a tendency to waggle her jaws. With more training she could find a niche for herself in the ranks of cabaret regulars.

Zardi's boasts a dance floor now, with Will Osborne's orch handling the brunt of the terp stuff as well as backing the show. Don Tosti's crew supplies relief. Osborne, incidentally, has neither the sidemen nor the book that made him one of the big bands of some years back, but he still peddles a listenable sound with a beat. Kap.

Minneapolis, July 6.

Ann Leonardi, Don McGrane Orch (8); $1.50-$2.50 minimum.

Setting out on a nitery career and with it making her Minneapolis debut, songstress Ann Leonardi, who undoubtedly is unfamiliar to local cafe society although there's to her credit appearances on the Arthur Godfrey and other tv and radio shows as well as some Capitol recordings, has a number of points in her favor.

She's extremely young and pretty and she also brings to her new field a passable set of pipes fully capable of handling the listenable and none too familiar numbers comprising her routine. She also has charm, freshness and wholesomeness. At her first show in a supper club she was warmly received by the plush Flame Room's guests, held down in numbers by the July 4 holiday and the fact she comes here a virtual unknown.

As far as such tonier supper clubs as this one is concerned, it would seem that her present act may need the polish, weight and glamor that might be supplied by more dressing up, fancier trimmings and original and distinctive arrangements. As presently constituted, what's now offered passes muster as a simple, unpretentious and pleasant singing session. The several times she plays the piano while chirping lend a livingroom atmosphere to the proceedings.

Don McGrane and his orch back up the performer admirably. Miss Leonardi continues through July 17, to be followed by the local Fox Quartet playing its second engagement here. Rees.

Western styled saloon is the main purveyor of the striptease. Patrons are shoehorned in every night and get a big serving of bare epidermis on the minuscule stage, plus a series of solid acts to make this an entertainment buy even if it is a hot box. The patrons are literally cheeked and jowled.

Strippers are young and sassy and more amusing than erotico. But they have elaborate production rituals which gives this word-of-mouth and makes this the Alan Freed, Cadillacs (4), Paul Anka, Teen Chords (5), Teen Agers (5), Moonglows (5), Teddy Randazza, Johnny & Joe, Clyde McPhatter, Everly Bros. (2), Chuck Berry, LaVern Baker, Big Joe Turner, Screamin' Jay Hawkins, Jodie Sands, Al Sears Orch with Sam (The Man) Taylor, Panama Francis; "Beginning of the End" (AB-PT-Rep) reviewed in VARIETY July 3, '57.

By this late date, it should be conceded that rock 'n' roll has a noisy, powerful and youthful set of adherents who support this form of music whether it be in the form of record-buying or theatre attendance. This group has seen to it that a major share of the disk sales are in that metier, with other age groups not even coming a close second. Thus it's readily seen that the Alan Freed appearance at the N.Y. Paramount on this trip should incite a juvenile invasion of this theatre and probably more business than it's had since Freed last played this house in February.

The numbers may have dwindled somewhat on this showing since many juves are either in camp or vacationing. Still, there are enough attending for Freed to realize a sharp profit even after paying off his unusually large cast.

To coin a cliche, what is lacking in numbers is amply compensated by the enthusiasm of his disciples. The screaming juveniles congregated around the front rows virtually besiege the stage and might as well be part of the cast. The youngsters, mainly girls, are constantly doing something to excite attention, hoping for either a smouldering glance from Freed or any of the entertainers onstage. The demonstration is noisy and much of it is exhibitionistic. Behavior of that kind from the first few rows isn't normal from any seat in the house.

However, it's evident that Freed has the right formula for them, despite the fact that it's not one that would bring joy to an orthodox vaude booker. Layout is a maze of obvious conflicts with its overloading of song acts. Needless to say, the show goes over first-rate with those sold on the idea.

For example, there are two Lymon groups. Frankie and his Teen Agers, the original and better known of the juve performers, hold the top spot while Lewis Lymon performs similarly but without the authority of the first group. The Cadillacs and the Moonglows bear an artistic resemblance inasmuch as the techniques and tunes are similar. There are some touching touches of naivete with the booking of Johnnie & Joe whose single rendition bespeaks of homegrown harmonics. Jodie Sands is a special case where she's fairly well known as a performer, despite an obvious lack of stage presence. Everly Bros. work guitars and songs, also with a lot of naivete. This is a hillbilly duo, rather than rock 'n' rollers, but they do help maintain a grassroots touch by Freed.

Also showing up on this ollapodrida are a pair of road company Presleys. Teddy Randazzo pitches right in which the torso movements and Paul Anka, not much older than the screeching femmes in the front rows, writhes out a tune. The clown of the r&r movement is Screamin' Jay Hawkins with a desperate kind of humor.

The professionals in the show are LaVern Baker, Clyde McPhatter, Big Joe Turner and Chuck Berry. They carry an air of authority. Miss Baker takes over the moment she's onstage, and finales with a partner who does a bit of eccentric dancing, the only kind of hoofing in the show, not counting the movements that go with the singing groups. McPhatter tenors strongly, and Berry has a hearty tone that holds onto his audience, despite the fact that the show is overlong at this point. Turner is a blues singer with feeling and authority. His reception is firstrate.

The music with Sam (The Man) Taylor at the tenor sax—he's probably the foremost r'n'r tootler—backs with pronounced strength.

The entire roller movement has long since reached the point where it needs a wider audience base. Whether Freed on a regular television will attain that aim remains to be seen. Aside from a more sympathetic viewpoint from other age groups, rock 'n' roll also needs the services of some literate and understanding composers who would know how to retain the grassroots vitality, cast out the Freudian accent, and do what the combination of George Gershwin, Ferde Grofe and Paul Whiteman did for jazz back in the '20. It was this group's Aeolian Hall concert which is generally credited with starting the stageband vogue and with it a golden era of the band biz. Freed thus far hasn't been able to entice the more substantial audiences to rock 'n' roll. His taste is limited and seemingly without the imagination to give it a wider base. Jose.

Winter Garden Pavilion, Blackpool

Blackpool, Eng., July 9.

Geo. & Alfred Black presentation, with Bob Monkhouse, Ken Morris & Joan Savage, Karen Greer, 3 Romanos, 3 Merkys, Eliane & Rodolphe, Tower Children's Ballet (32), Derek Taverner Orch.

This summer layout, mainly geared for yocks, represents bold move by London operators George & Alfred Black. They present, in star slotting, tv comedian and panelist Bob Monkhouse in his first major stageshow. Fortunately, with friendly personality and lotsa still-to-develop talent, the young Englishman, a marquee name via tv, fulfills all hopes and, working in modern quick-patter style, satisfies outfronters in song, dance and mainly comedy bits.

Main criticism, in fact, is that Monkhouse is onstage too much, and carries too large a quota of show. Using yock-fodder penned by himself and scripter-teamster Denis Goodwin, the smiling video comic clicks in sketches and in travesties of commercial tv, still a novelty in England. He tilts at jingles via operatic bit, and impersonates a tv personality hating the goods he has to sample.

Monkhouse's best bit is a finale takeoff on Liberace, whom he partly resembles in facial teeth-smile. This is done at the ivories, complete with candelabra and illuminated garbing, and he gets the customers to wish happy birthday to audience member by holding up lighted matches in darkened theatre, effect being novel and mittworthy.

Ken Morris & Joan Savage aid Monkhouse in comedy items. Pair offer their own act, with Morris impersonating various types of music conductors, including the artistic, concert hall, teashop maestro, and dancery leader.

Femme song slotting is held by Karen Greer, tall, lavishly-gowned blonde thrush making major comeback after recent mixed progress. Gal gives out in high-octave voice, and gradually divests her garbing until finally appearing in shapely tights, giving show much-needed s.a.

Layout has two strong specialties. Three Merkys, from Germany, are elastic-limbed male trio with well-paced comedy twists and falls. Three Romanos also score strongly in comedy-tumbling, accent being more on yock-garnering, in which they succeed with lightning routines. Gord.

Opera House, Blackpool

Blackpool; Eng., July 9.

George & Alfred Black presentation, with Jewel & Warriss, Yana (with Don Phillips), Holger & Dolores, Latona, Graham & Chadel, Nirska, George Mitchell Singers (8), Audrey Mann, Dancing Debonaires (6), John Tiller Girls (20) Harry Hudson Orch. Directed by Alec Shanks and Joan Davis. Dances, Joan Davis.

Addition of two U.S. dance acts gives special American interest to this 1957 summer layout, staged in 3,000-seater vaudery by London showmen George & Alfred Black.

Holger & Dolores, in from U.S. for their first booking at the English vacation resort, score solidly in stylish dancing, and cixt to some of the layout's heaviest mitting. Act has maximum quota of polish and skill. Other U.S. act, Nirska, on her U.K. bow, lifts show's spectacle slant with 24-foot wing-span butterfly dancing, and is aided in color effects by lighting of her shimmering silk wings.

Yana (Pamela Guard), blonde English thrush given local marquee value via tv, holds down the femme song slotting with decorative results. Distaffer, still to gain experience in show layouts, gives out pleasantly in tunes such as "Shoe-Shine Shop" (with aud participation) and "Mr. Wonderful." Her s.a. is evident, but she might profitably exude more come-hither seductiveness to blend with naturally aloof style. Don Phillips, English composer-pianist, handles the ivories for the lush thrush.

Jimmy Jewel & Ben Warriss, comedy twosome making 21st anni date as a team, offer familiar but strong brand of comedy arguments. Best item is "Line Engaged," sketch by Hills & Green, in which they play two husbands calling each other by telephone at dead of night as ruse to escape from their wives. Pair also offer bright first-half finale travesty or rock 'n' roll, Jewel garbed as London rock 'n' roller Tommy Steele and Warriss as Elvis Presley.

Latona, Graham & Chadel, Australian males, win solid palming for energetic knockabout, done with pace. The George Mitchell Singers add vocal backing for several eye-catching scenes, and the Tiller Girls, expertly drilled line of 20 lookers, are high steppers with polish and zest, scoring in a "Diamond Bracelet" item and in "Rainbow Melody" finale. Audrey Mann works hard as soubret, but is hampered by ugly hair-styling, plus fact that she doesn't match up to show's high quality. Dorothy Dampier and Herbert Hare do satisfying stooging in sketches.

With flames flickering and crackling, billowing of smoke and falling of derricks, a spectacular but too brief novelty is "The Burning Oil Wells" scene, result of skil'u mechanics onstage. Lighting and garbing in "Rainbow Melody" finale is eye-appeal climax. Show-backing by Harry Hudson orch. Gord.

Palace, N. Y.

Ortiz & Sheppard, Michael Chimes (5), Jack Powell, Julia Cummings, Gautier's Steeplechase, Jan Welles, Frank Marlowe, Vernettes (2), Nick Francis House Orch; "The Midnight Story," reviewed in VARIETY June 12, '57.

The holiday fare at this venerable vauder brings some solid fare for visiting firemen. Layout is especially strong in the comedy division with Frank Marlowe and Jack Powell, and most of other turns on the bill make the grade.

Powell, the vet blackface drummer, gets a maximum response from the crowd with his trick drumming. His chef's getup, a logical lead-in to the pounding on kitchen utensils, plus the trick skin arias put him easily in the lead. Marlowe's serio-comic antics also bring him a rewarding session.

The bill is loaded with novelties including the venerable Gautier's Steeplechase with its assortment of ponies, dogs and a monkey, run through their tricks in a manner that meets audience approval. Michael Chimes and his family, comprising three sons and a daughter, provide a series of tunes and get off well. Julia Cummings has an assortment of impressions that do nicely for her. Some of her material is out of date, but the delivery is smart and applause winning.

A new novelty in these precincts is Jan Welles, a singer with a background of bullfighting in the Mexican rings. Her background isn't sufficiently publicized for her to take advantage of the torero trappings. She opens with a bit of authentic capework, which isn't as picturesque as the stage versions, and thence into song. Her tunes seem to have a pre-occupation with life as opposed to a bullfighter's thoughts of doom. Her voice is hearty and fulblown with an overdramatic touch at times. Miss Welles' elaborate bullfighter costuming adds a touch of splendor to her work which is well received.

The taps in a Latin motif by Gene Ortiz & Artie Sheppard provide some picturesque patterns for a good opening. The Vernettes are in New Acts. Nick Francis showbacks expertly. Jose.

Unit Review

We're Having a Ball

London, June 24.

Val Parnell & Bernard Delfont production of revue in two acts. Music and lyrics, Phil Parks, Cyril Ornadel, Leslie Bricusse, David Croft, Edwards & Raleigh, Robert Allen, Arthur Harris. Staged by Robert Nesbitt; choreography, George Carden; decor, Edward Delany and Tod Kingman. At Palladium, London, June 21, '57; $2.20 top.

Cast: Max Bygraves, Joan Regan, Kaye Sisters (3), The Goofers (5), Clark Bros. (2), Carsony & His Twin Bros., Page & Bray, Maralyn Smith, William Martin, Angela Bracewell, Bernard Eastoe, Mary Allen, Deirdre Ottewell, Rosalind Vicarey, Brenda Harper, Valerie Dawling, Liz Field, Loretta Stevens, Claire Courtney, Janet Malcolm, Mathew Winston, Peter Scott, Ron Desmond, Pat Hopper, Maureen Blaine, Joyce Chapman, Jureh Czapla, Jaz Rene, Ken Lawton, George Carden Dancers, George Mitchell Singers.

The new Palladium summer revue is clearly a b.o. smash, which should hold up easily for the season. The combination of Robert Nesbitt as stager and Max Bygraves as star pays off handsomely. The sumptuous quality of the staging provides a visual treat, while the star insures the marquee appeal.

"We're Having a Ball" marks a switch from normal revue practice, inasmuch as not a single sketch is featured in the production. Instead, the emphasis is on music, provided not only by the star, but by Joan Regan, the Kaye Sisters and by the Goofers, a zany quintet from Manhattan. All told, it adds up to a lively rhythmic entertainment.

Bygraves, a relaxed entertainer who knows how to sell a pop and to deliver a comedy line, makes a satisfying and enjoyable headliner. He's an easy-going performer and has no difficulty in winning the spectators and getting them to participate.

His earlier appearances in the first half, although solid, are little more than teasers for his main stint as the climax of the show, in which, accompanied by Bob Dixon at the piano, he makes a sock impact. One of his best entries is a "Frankie and Johnnie" parody, which extracts plenty of laughs at the expense of tv commercials.

The production is strong on the specialty side, but top honors easily go to the Goofers, making their British debut. Their act is loaded with original gags, but a dominating feature is the lively beat they constantly maintain, even when playing their instruments while swinging on a trapeze; and their exit on pogo sticks provides a smash finish.

Carsony and his Twin Bros. have an impressive hand-balancing routine, highlighted by a handstand on two neck-to-neck champagne bottles, with arms and legs constantly on the move. The Kaye Sisters, a youthful vocal trio, make a decided and pleasing impact with several spots on the bill. They have a well drilled close harmony style and eager manner. Their delivery is clear and fine and their diction is excellent.

The Clark Brothers, an energetic stepping duo, make a stout impresh with some fancy tap numbers, while Page and Bray offer a terping contrast with their smooth and tuneful ballroomology display.

Second vocal spot on the bill is filled by Joan Regan, another name local singer, with a hefty following. Her straight style is fine for her choice of numbers and her first appearance in a production number is socko all the way. Her gowns, in the best Nesbitt tradition, add an additional touch of color.

In addition to the principals, the big dancing line, the specialty terpers, the George Mitchell singers and quartet play on an important part in achieving the overall effect of vitality and gaiety. Myro.

Crazy Horse, Paris

savviest strippo spot in town. Georgina Schweppes is a cowgirl who shoots out the lights for changes in poses; Dodo De Hambourg writhes in a hammock on a hot African night; Bijou bathes; Cara Sirocco does it by adding long strings of beads as she peels; Duzia does it via frenetic wrigglings, and Delia Cucculis uses an arrogant gyrating bit before the pop-eyed public.

With the Croque Monsieurs (2) there is a sop for the ladies—and there were many present—in a mock strip of two men. Other acts stress sight values to make them naturals for the international aud that favors this boite.

Georges Lafaye Puppets (2) have a disembodied feather boa and tophat act out a hilarious, expertly notated love affair to Stan Freberg's clever disk parody, "John-Martha." Mitts are mighty for this. Monty Landis essays a knockabout jape to disks for good laughs, and Mac Ronay is a fey wrong-way magico whose tricks end in disasters but engender laughs on his timing and expressions.

Trebla is an automaton who intros show via pointing out the heat potential of the femmes on an outsized thermometer. Jack Ary & Ann Rey have a deft disk mime act with enough invention and uncanniness in timing to make this of interest for U. S. boites or video. In a carioca song, a telephone is unearthed under the girl's poncho. A voice is quelled by pouring water into it, but it retaliates later by a jet into the perpetrator's eye. Act builds with clever bits as a bug gets into the act, or in a take-off on Les Paul & Mary Ford with recalcitrant guitars, etc. It is an original act, and the timing and miming of the duo and are tops.

Micro Boys (2) also utilize mime as one acts out trouble with an automobile as the other does all the necessary sounds vocally. Somewhat overlong; it is still a deft act and, if tightened up, shapes another offbeater for U. S. chances. Mosk.

Billy Gray's Band Box, L. A.

Los Angeles, July 2.

Billy Gray, Leo Diamond, Bert Gordon, Carol Shannon, Ric Marlowe, Lettermen (3), Bob Baily Trio; $3 minimum.

After four months of darkness, Billy Gray's Band Box is alight again with some old and new hilarity that should keep the ropes up for some time. If it's overlong, chalk part of it up to opening night and part to Gray's oft-expressed philosophy that "we have a long show because we have no dancing."

This layout is a partial reprise of the show that opened a year ago and ran to fine business, the "My Fairfax Lady" satire. A few changes have been made in the running order and material, but it still remains a funny and sometimes hilarious spoof of the Broadway smash, transplanted to the bagel belt. With it this time is a satire on "Baby Doll," which is more in the low humor vein usually associated with Band Box presentations. Like "Lady," it was written by Sid Kuller, but this one lacks some of the inherent humor, partly because the gags frequently stem from a repetition of a single theme.

Apart from the satires, Gray is back with a fine standup monolog, virtually all new and cleverly keyed to times and conditions, including a sly reference to the creation of a "trust fund to pay off the plagiarism suits." He has a fund of new dialect stories that score strongly, all delivered in the inimitable Gray style.

Aiding and abetting in the satires are Ric Marlowe, Carol Shannon and Bert Gordon. Marlowe also vocals Fats Wallers' "Black and Blue" to good effect and Miss Shannon is spotlighted as a vocalist on a couple of numbers that click. Gordon serves only as a foil for the "Lady" sketch.

Leo Diamond is back with some excellent harmonic work, highlighted by a piece of sock showmanship in a presentation of "Around the World," with slides of world scenes projected as he plays. He also uses some of his own gadgets for full instrumental effect, particularly a bongo combination that lets him sound like a full calypso combo on "Day-O."

Opener is the Lettermen, an affable vocal trio that helps set the stage, and the Bob Bailey combo provides fine instrumental backing. Kap.

Hotel Monteleone, N.O.

New Orleans, July 2.

Jon & Sondra Steele, Nick Stuart Orch (7); $3 minimum.

Jon & Sondra Steele, making their fourth appearance in this hostelry's plush Swan Room, regaled first-nighters with a musical turn that's shrewdly devised and projected with know-how. It's socko 45-minute offering of songs and able keyboarding.

Sondra is a goodlooking, green-eyed strawberry blonde with a statuesque chassis and sensuous vocal equipment that's above par. Her range and phrasing technique reflect plenty of savvy in getting the most out of a lyric. Her partner is an extremely versatile entertainer who plays the 88s deftly and sings with a definite flair.

Tableholders go for Miss Stella's piping of "Everything I Have Is Yours," "Street Where You Live" and "Don't See What They See In Me," the latter a novelty with a rib at southern belles. She can deliver with a tear in her voice or with coquettish overtones.

Steele spells her songs at the piano, giving smooth renditions of "Deep Purple," "Lilacs In The Rain" and a boog-beat version of Bizet's "Habanera." Duo also blend voices nicely in their theme, "My Happiness," which was a hit disk back in 1946 or so, and "Could Have Danced All Night." Femme encores with "St. Louis Blues" for sock finale. Work of Steeles add up to a plus performance for all types of bistro audiences.

Nick Stuart and his combo continue to dispense a danceable brand of rhythm. The personable bandleader-emcee leads his very capable charges through sweetly sentimental, dixieland, pops, latinos and other rhythms to attract dancers to the floor. Cheri Chandler, band warbler, share's evening's applause with top-drawer piping. Linz.

New Act

VERNETTES (2)
Juggling
8 Mins.
Palace, N. Y.

The Vernettes, mixed juggling pair, have obviously been around, but haven't been cased for the New Act files. They do most of their work with clubs and balls, and most of the patterns revolve around each taking over for each other. Some of their manipulations are picturesque, but few are original.

Their capper is done by the male in which he balances himself on two tiers of bricks and lowers himself by removing one brick at a time. Okay for most sight situations. Jose.

Package Show Tours

however, does not effect shows outside the city, where the licensing department has no jurisdiction. There's thus no licensing problem in packaging tours for European and out-of-town shows. There have been two recent developments in the hinterland field, however.

A special show bus service from Los Angeles has been launched by the American Legitimate Theatre Service for Saturday matinees at the La Jolla (Cal.) Playhouse. The tab on the package, which takes in luncheon, dinner and theatre ticket, is $7.25 per person. The other development involves Martin Snyder, who operates Theatre Holiday in N. Y. He recently set up a cross-country legit package tour service to cater to out-of-town patronage for touring shows.

Also, on the N. Y. front, Theatre Trains & Planes is expanding its tour serve to Europe, with the first of five scheduled European Show Planes getting underway next month. It's being sponsored by the Rocky Mountain News, Denver, and is scheduled to leave there Aug. 27. There will be stopoffs in N. Y. before and after the European visit, with patrons getting a looksee at Broadway's "My Fair Lady" and "Auntie Mame."

TT&P, incidentally, is setting up a special office to handle Broadway theatre tickets. This, in accordance with a N. Y. Supreme Court ruling, makes the operation eligible for a broker's license.

Violinists & Pianists

is called here) lasted a bit over two weeks. Every day and all day for that length of time, violinists and pianists played. There was a jury of internationally famed musicians, who normally earn thousands of dollars a day, but who showed up here at the Salle Gaveau for 15 days and spent all day listening. And judging.

Audiences were admitted (at a $1.50 top) to all sessions and the four or five times this reporter showed up, the theatre's 1,200 seats seemed to be about 80% occupied. Then, the final day, when the prize awards were made, the show moved to the 2,000 seat Theatre des Champs Elysees and was a total sell-out at $3.50 top, with many turnaways.

How seriously the French took all this is best indicated, perhaps, by the fact that the National radio chain sent the final session out via direct coverage from the theatre, a three and a half hour session cancelling out all news and other broadcasts for the evening hours.

The rules of the 'concours' are extremely simple. Any violinist or pianist under the age of 30 may compete but the entry can be made for him (or her) only by a 'recognized' music teacher, who attests that the contestant is ready for public appearance. This 'concours' just ended showed up 43 pianists and 36 violinists. They came from virtually every country in the world, though it seemed as though the iron country reps predominated. There is a separate contest in each group. The two pianists adjudged as best each win a prize of 350,000 francs (approx. $1,000) and the two violinists ditto. That, of course, is not much, but there are many tags which are much more important, such as recording deals with Pathe-Marconi, concert bookings, etc.

For the record it had perhaps better be mentioned that the first and second prize winners among the violinists were from Soviet Russia. The first prize winner among the pianists was a Hungarian and the second prize-winner another Russian. Runner-ups were British, American, Japanese, etc. Virtually every European concert manager was present or represented, both leading U. S. concert managements, Hurok Attractions and Columbia Artists Bureau, were on hand, and contracts were being negotiated all over the place.

The heroine of the whole business is probably Marguerite Long, one of the most famous pianists ever turned out by France. Whitehaired, 83 years old, she is still highly active in music circles here and plays an occasional concert. Also she actively operates the Marguerite Long Music school. The late Jaques Thibault, whose name shares the billing with her, was a famed French violinist who died a few years ago. Nominally, Marguerite Long pays the freight for the whole business, which is run once every two years, but the French government foots most of the bills, via a subsidy.

Sponsor Snafus

a lipstick advertiser, for example, shows the model painting her lips with a closeup of her wristwatch included, with an appropriate plug for the watchmaker. Typical of the conflict cross the webs have had to bear in recent weeks are these examples:

Item: Max Factor placed an alternate-week order on CBS for "Sally" on Saturdays at 9:30 (back before the show ended up on NBC and before the CBS spot was sewed up with "Have Gun, Will Travel"). It was rejected because Helen Curtis was in at 9 on alternate weeks.

Item: Colgate pulled out its cosponsorship deals with R. J. Reynolds. Reason—it wanted to start a new copy line on its toothpaste, to wit, that Colgate Tooth Paste removes nicotine stains better than any other toothpaste. It couldn't use this with Reynolds as its alternate, naturally.

Item: Helene Curtis had a helluva time placing an order on CBS for "Dick & the Duchess," not because of any direct Saturday night conflict but because a switch in product advertising on its half of "What's My Line" would have run into a conflict with Revlon on $64,000 Challenge."

Item: Libby-Owens-Ford was interested in taking over Colgate's half of "Mr. Adams & Eve" on CBS Friday nights. That was killed because part of its copy reflects its position as a major glass supplier for General Motors—and Ford sponsors "Zane Grey Theatre" just prior to "Adams."

Item: Ed Sullivan innocently tied in with a Popular Photography magazine promotion, part of which emphasizes the new Ansco color film. So what happens? Sullivan gets Eastman Kodak for a sponsor next fall.

And, as the song says, "round and round" it does. The situation has one bright note, however. Some sponsors have come to realize the networks' difficulties and have accepted compromises which would have never been thought possible a year ago. Thus, the webs find Procter & Gamble as an alternate sponsor on Tuesday at 8 and Lever Bros. in at Tuesday at 8:30 on CBS—on alternate weeks, of course. And the Curtis deal for "Dick" was made possible by an okay from Revlon for the product switch with an alternate-week adjacency on Sunday at 10 and 10:30. The sponsors, having split nighttime in so many pieces that conflicts are unavoidable, are starting to give a little in what until now had been a rigidly tabu situation.

sophical tag to these spots besides the taking carryings-on.

Springboard

2. The new talents such as Yves Roberts, Freres Jacques (4), Jacques Fabbri, found the cabaret a natural step on their way legitward. Here was a crisp, close audience relationship and many of the top legit actors, writers and innovators started there. However, when they made it the night spot was out.

3. It was still a mode and it wore itself out in 10 years, giving way to the more touristically appealing, no-think naturals like strippos, etc.

4. Real talent was soon reserved for the big money show biz facets and every savvy newcomers did not waste their top talents in boites. The big names spawned by the boites were now too high-priced for them and the rebirth of the vauder here, on a large scale, could give top prices and star billing to these stars, and helped wean them almost completely away from the clubs.

5. Financial aspects were also important for the heavy taxation did not help the specialized boites which depended not so much on volume as on loyalty.

Survivors

Of the offbeaters still making the grade here, most depend on a climate effected by the boniface or the still unusual types of shows that still manage to get a clientele now disposed to straight spec, and leaving their more demanding entertainment to the other types of show biz so prevalent in this city.

Fontaine Des Quatres Saisons gives a unique show depending on new and solid talents plus a vest-pocket parody, but clientele keeps falling. L'Ecluse offers a cheap price and a scad of new names, but there does not seem to be as much young stardust around as there was right after the war.

Liberty's and Chez Gilles still give good atmospherics and intelligent shows, but they are also losing their top names to legit and pix. L'Amiral is lucky to have two chansonniers giving out with a puckish, clever revue, but it has little touristic value unless the lingo is understood. Galerie, Milord D'Arsouille, Le Cheval D'Or, Echelle De Jacob, Chez Agnes Capri, Port De Salut all depend on relaxed entertainment and warm bonifacing, but the era of the specialized boite seems to be fading here.

Sol Hurok

touring. His general managers, George Perper and Walter Prude, are also on vacation until the end of this month, but meantime the Morris execs are mulling ways and means to expand their booking organization so as to handle Hurok's many clients on a split-fee basis.

The Morris agency is sufficiently elastic for television, legit, production, niteries and the like, since longhair personalities are no longer limited to the dignity of the concert-opera stage.

The Hurok-NCAC schism dates from the time that ex-Met baritone Luben Vichey bought out Marks Levine two years ago.

Hurok and NCAC worked together on a booking basis only, the impresario retaining full control of his roster of talents and utilizing the concert-and-artists outfit for routing agency only.

When he returns from abroad in September, the Morris agency tieup will probably be finalized.

Aside from the injunction, Simcoe asks $500,000 damages plus $150,000 exemplary damages. Screen credits for "Jungle" list Kleiner as author of the screenplay based upon articles by Lester Velie. Story concerns labor unions and employers in New York's garment centre.

Williamsburg-Jamestown, $85,000,000 'Colonial Spec' in Showmanship Spree

By HERMAN A. LOWE

Williamsburg, Va., July 9.

They've stepped up the entertainment pace on the Williamsburg-Jamestown Axis, one of the nation's great centers of history and tourism.

Showmanship and show biz have been tapped to glamorize and tell the story of the 350th anniversary of the founding of the first British colony in North America — at Jamestown, in 1607.

Some miles away, at the great naval base city of Norfolk, the International Naval Review and its attendant entertainment program have come and gone, first big feature of this celebration. But at Colonial Williamsburg, into whose restoration nearly $60,000,000 of Rockefeller money has already been poured, and at Jamestown, six miles away, where $25,000,000 has been spent—the show goes on. It will run through the summer and into the fall.

And, because you don't fold a hit, it will be running next year at the old stand.

Jamestown In 3 Parts

The Jamestown Festival divides nicely into three parts: the Paul Green drama, "The Founders"; the restoration begun at the original Jamestown site; and the exhibition building and ships.

Perhaps the most striking is Paul Green's newest opus, "The Founders," a story of the first 15 years of Jamestown Colony. It must rate as one of the best and liveliest of the whole series of Green historical dramas—"The Common Glory," "Faith of Our Fathers," "The Lost Colony," etc.

Green has let himstlf go. He has not only told this priceless fragment of American history—but he has told it excitingly. Unlike the

Frisco Critic Bewails New ('Lady') Popularity; (This Ain't News in N.Y.)

San Francisco, July 9.

The imminent arrival of the hottest boxoffice draw in Frisco history, "My Fair Lady," provoked an ironic lament last week from Hortense Morton, drama editor of Northern California's biggest daily, The San Francisco Examiner. The aisle-sitter's column read in part:

"This is the time of year when I am one of the four most popular people in town. The other three are my critic confreres.

"For two months my charm, seemingly dormant and invisible before that, has been so excessive and rampant as to constitute a public menace.

"All because 'My Fair Lady' is due and tickets are as scarce as—tickets for 'My Fair Lady.' I'm supposed to have an 'in' with the boxoffice.

"My phone rings every half-minute,

"Strangers spot me around corners two blocks away.

"I'm sought for under-glass cuisine soirees. People hang on to my every syllable.

"If I had sideburns and played the guitar, I couldn't be more popular.

"This bloodbath of adoration has happened twice before — when 'Oklahoma' and 'South Pacific' each came around the first time. Before that, and before my time, 'Ben Hur,' back around 1902, had them waiting in carriages all night to buy seats.

"I wish my charm weren't so elusive between hit shows.

"The cold, harsh truth is that a critic has nothing to do with the boxoffice. That's one of the facts of life every parent should tell his child when he starts to ask questions."

An indication of just how hot a ticket the G. B. Shaw-Alan Lerner-Frederick Loewe musical is here, lies in the fact that opening-day window sale at the Frisco Opera House amounted to $107,345. The musical opened its local run last night (Mon.).

If Miss Morton thinks she has troubles, she ought to step into the brogans of Tony Buttitta, who's been pressagent for the Frisco Civic Light Opera for more than a decade. Says he, "No use heading for the hills, the dam's already burst and I'm 50 feet under water."

London Tele Producer Plans 'Chalk' in Aussie

London, July 9.

A production of "The Chalk Garden," to tour Australia with Sybil Thorndike and Lewis Casson as stars, is planned by Lionel Harris, of Associated Television Ltd. He planed to Switzerland last week en route to Australia to prepare the Enid Bagnold comedy-drama.

Harris plans to look over the Swiss tv setup and then to stop off in the U.S. on the way home to gander video on the Coast and in New York. He also figures on huddling with Maxwell Anderson on a possible London production of the latter's "Winterset."

Philly Looking For Big Season

Philadelphia, July 9.

On the basis of advance bookings and Theatre Guild-American Theatre Society subscriptions, Philly's coming legit season looks lively. If only the supply of touring shows is of comparable strength, it may seem like old times hereabouts next fall and winter.

There are already 11 shows tentatively booked for local engagements next fall. In addition, more than 9,000 subscribers have enrolled, without a single subscription play being announced. According to Lewis D. Cook, local TG-TS subscription rep, the subscription list last season totalled less than 11,000. That meant about $300,000 for the 10 subscription shows playing here.

Although no subscription shows are definite, the likely items include "No Time for Sergeants" and Katharine Hepburn in "Merchant of Venice," in which she's starring this summer at the American Shakespeare Festival at Stratford, Conn.

The indie (William Goldman) Erlanger Theatre's bookings include "Gang Way," Sept. 9, and "Copper and Brass," Sept. 23.

The Shubert-operated Forrest has "Four Winds," Sept. 9, and "Romanoff and Juliet," Sept. 23.

The Shubert gets "Jamaica," Sept. 16.

The Shubert-operated Walnut gets "The Egghead," Sept. 16, and "Square Root of Wonderful," early October.

Also pencilled in for early fall, with no theatres designated as yet, are tryouts of "The Music Man" and "Miss Isobel."

Melvin Fox, a film exhibitor in Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey, has been dickering with the Shuberts for the Locust Street Theatre, which they must dispose of under the terms of a Government consent decree, but an agreement hasn't been reached on price. Fox plans to continue the house as a legiter if he acquires it.

'Remembered' for Boston

Boston, July 9.

The Colonial Theatre has one of the earliest bookings in several seasons with the Playwrights Co. production of "Time Remembered" set to open Labor Day, Sept. 2. The Jean Anouilh romantic comedy will be the first production of the Playwrights' 20th season.

The tryout will be on subscription here.

Lorella Val-Mery Now Plans 'Shoes' for B'way

Pittsburgh, July 9.

Road pressagent Lorella Val-Mery, currently ballyhooing the Civic Light Opera Association season at Pitt Stadium, plans debuting as a Broadway producer next fall with the presentation of Frank Merlin's one-character play, "I Got Shoes."

The script has previously been under option to several managements, including Eddie Dowling and Louis M. Simon.

Charlton Heston Seeks 'Capt. Wirz' Legit Rights

Hollywood, July 9.

Charlton Heston is negotiating for the legit rights to "The Trial of Capt. Wirz, the Andersonville Jailer," the Climax teleplay in which he starred last week. Script was written by Saul Levitt.

Heston wants to convert the play into a platform presentation, along the lines of "Don Juan in Hell" and "John Brown's Body," and tour it next fall.

802 at It Anew With Attempt At Show Angel Ban

Despite two previous turndowns by its parent organization, Local 802 of the American Federation of Musicians is again trying to prevent its members from investing in Broadway productions. The latest move is a demand that legit producers be prohibited from accepting investments from Local 802 members. The union is currently negotiating a new contract with the producer organization, the League of N.Y. Theatres.

A measure passed by the Local last year and subsequently set aside by the AFM Executive Board, would have forbidden members from working or being musical contractors for shows in which they invested. About five years ago 802 passed a similarly-intentioned rule barring its members from investing in legit productions. In both cases the edicts were held up by the parent union after protests by Meyer Davis, a bandleader, musical contractor and prolific legit backer.

The latest union maneuver, which is seeking to have the producers apply a tabu on investments by musicians, is also being appealed by Davis to AFM president James C. Petrillo. The protest asks that the Local be reprimanded for the new move and ordered to withdraw the demand. Petrillo has not yet given an answer.

The 802 opposition to its members investing in Broadway shows is in line with agitation of certain musicians who claim that by backing such productions Davis obtains a competitive advantage in dickering for the contractor spots involved. Davis has pointed out that most of his investments are in non-musical shows, for which no contractor is used, and that records demonstrate that he has not obtained a preponderant number of musicals in which he has invested.

Basically, however, the bandleader-contractor-investor argues that the various 802 proposals are illegal, and he has indicated that if necessary he will take court action to test the matter.

Musical 'Irma' Will Run Through Paris Summer; Also Set for West End

Paris, July 2.

"Irma La Douce," current musical hit by Alexandre Breffort and Marguerite Monnot, will set local precedent by continuing through summer at the Theatre Gramont. Standard procedure is for Paris legit to suspend for the summer.

Show will be done in London next season by H. M. Tennent and has been reported sewn up for the U. S. by Gilbert Miller. However, Loulou Gaste, a Paris musician, says he has the Western Hemisphere musical rights.

"Irma La Douce" is a romanticized look at the Paris underworld, with a prostitute and her bourgeois panderer as the leading characters. Although there is some resemblance to the Kurt Weill-Bertolt Brecht "Threepenny Opera," the French tuner lacks the pungent social satire, depth and bitterness of the latter.

It has made stars of Colette Renard and Michel Roux and put the legit company of Rene Dupuy on the theatrical map. The show may well run through next season.

David Broekman is musical director for the third annual Stony Brook (L. I.) Music Festival, which opened recently in the Dogwood Hollow Amphitheatre.

Terrell-Moses Case to Retrial; Suggest New Producers for Park

The controversy between tent operator St. John Terrell and N.Y. City Park Commissioner Robert Moses over legit in Central Park is going back to the N.Y. Supreme Court.

A ruling against Terrell in his action for revocation of Moses' grant to Michael P. Grace and Chris F. Anderson for the presentation of a summer series of musicals at the Wollman Memorial Skating Rink in Central Park had previously been issued by Supreme Court Justice George Tiller. The ruling was subsequently argued in Appellate Court, where a decision was handed down to have the charge amended.

The Appellate Court's feeling on the matter reportedly was that Moses had no authority to enter a lease for the park and that the agreement with Grace and Anderson appeared to be a lease. On that basis, the court recommended that Terrell file his action as a taxpayer, which he's done. The case now goes back to the Supreme Court for a new ruling. It's understood that the city claims that the grant is a permit, which Moses has the right to lease.

In his original action, Terrell objected to the "secretiveness" of the deal between Moses and the park producers and the manner in which the transaction, involving a concession on public property, was handled.

Meanwhile, sentiment in the trade has reportedly been growing for some way of arranging for another management to take over the Central Park operation from Grace & Anderson. The latter's initial presentation of dance programs, followed by the obviously inadequate revival of "Rosalie" and the current nitery floor show, has aroused concern in professional circles lest the whole Park project be ruined.

It was suggested late last week that the Park operation might be turned over to Lee Gruber, Frank Ford & Shelly Gross, who now have showtents running at Westbury, L.I.; Camden, N.J., and Valley Forge, Pa. The possibility was seen that shows already produced or in preparation for those three tents might be booked into the Central Park spot.

It's figured that the N.Y. City Center musical comedy production setup under Jean Dalrymple might ordinarily be well equiped to handle the Park operation, but its staff is now presumably only in skeleton form and there's insufficient time for it to get shows in actual production for the remaining weeks of the summer.

Rome Archbishop Bans 'Immoral' Aristophanes

Rome, July 9.

Considerable comment has been aroused in Italy over the presentation of Aristophanes' "Woman in Parliament" in Benevento. Catholics were warned by public proclamation not to attend the "immoral" classic. This came day before the play's premiere in the restored local Roman forum, in disuse for 16 centuries.

Archbishop Mancinelli, in asking the faithful to abstain from the "immoral" performance also condemned the authorities for permitting the show and for making the selection.

Performance went on as scheduled with Olga Villi, Tino Buazzelli, Mario Carotenuto, and others, and directed by Luigi Squarzina. Version used, it's pointed out, had already been extensively trimmed and had been regularly passed by the appropriate censorship groups.

ATPAM Strikes Terrell's Tents

St. John Terrell's music tents at Lambertville, N.J., and Asbury Park, N.J., have been declared "unfair" by the Assn. of Theatrical Press Agents & Managers. As a result, the union has pulled Max Eisen from his dual job as pressagent at the two spots and Harry Mulhern as treasurer at Lambertville.

The ATPAM board blacklisted Terrell for refusing to hire two pressagents, one for each of the tent operations. The producer has objected to the union demand, on the ground that not all of the tents currently in operation employ union publicists. One theory is that the union action was taken to strengthen its position in canvas-tops where its members are employed.

Regarding the two Terrell tents, Eisen, with the union's approval, had handled both spots in past years. According to an ATPAM rep, that was permitted because there were no publicists available to take on one of the tents, while Eisen handled the other. Therefore, the union spokesman claims, Eisen was allowed to ballyhoo both teepees in preference to having a non-union p. a. brought in.

The current request for two pressagents, one in addition to Eisen, is due to the present availability of union drumbeaters for the second job, the ATPAM rep says. It was pointed out that producers Lee Gruber, Frank Ford and Shelly Gross employ three union pressagents, one each for their tents at Westbury, L. I., Camden County, N.J., and Valley Forge, Pa.

Mulhern, who's been treasurer at Lambertville for eight years, is also a member of ATPAM and therefore was called off the job also.

REPORT ST. JAMES, N.Y., SOLD TO ST. P. GROUP

A Saint Paul syndicate, represented in New York by legit company-general manager Sam Schwartz, is reportedly purchasing the St. James Theatre, N.Y., from the Shuberts for $1,700,000 cash. It's understood the house will change ownership next Aug. 1.

The St. James, a 1,028-seat musical house, is one of the Broadway theatres the Shuberts are required to sell under the terms of a Government consent decree.

Boating, Anyone?

Recreational boating is the theme of a proposed new musical comedy being fashioned by Arthur McCaffery, radio writer, and Leo Mishkin, film critic of N.Y. Morning Telegraph. Both men go down to the seas in small boats themselves.

McCaffery has authored a volume of sketches about the Sheepshead Bay area, under the title "Cape Cod on the Subway."

Center's Panned 'Widow' Set for '57 Opera Season; Retain Floyd's 'Susannah'

"Merry Widow" which got pretty badly dusted off when revived this spring as part of the N. Y. City Center Light Opera series, will nonetheless be included in this fall's opera season at the house. Well-wishers are reportedly warning the management to do something about the book.

At least one surviving item of the 1956 fall season under Eric Leinsdorf, who quietly folded his tent and departed, will be included in the repertory. That is Carlisle Floyd's folk opera, "Susanah," which won a Music Critics Award.

Julius Rudel is now general director of the Centre's opera season. He's expected to line up midway between the old box set scenery (originally bought from St. Louis) and the "moderne" skeltonized cutouts introduced by Leo Kerz along with a revolving slanted stage which prompted VARIETY's headline, "Lilt With A Tilt."

Season will open Oct. 9 with "Turandot," Puccini work not heard locally in seven years. Another novelty will be Manuel de Falla's "Amor Brujo." Both of these revivals will be under baton of Jose Iturbi, in the unaccustomed role of opera conductor.

Regular bread and butter work at the house will include "Traviata," "Boheme," "Carmen," "Butterfly" and "Fledermaus."

Sally Perle, head of Central Casting Corp., left Sunday (7) on a 10-day trip to the Coast.

Barns Fear Big Hurricane Season; 'Audrey' Early Starter; Other Silos

Hurricanes, which took last summer off after being the scourge of the strawhat circuit several years previously, are off to an early start this season. Thus far, a single storm, Hurricane Audrey and its far-flung edges, wrecked two showtents, damaged another, and flooded a third theatre area. A flooded a third theatre area. Local electric storms have also blown down two more convastops.

On the theory that these tropical-bred disturbances may tend to come in cycles, barn managements are beginning to be apprehensive. In previous years the hurricane season has generally started about mid-August and extended through mid-September. In some cases the big blows have occurred at intervals of about a week, but thus far there has never been more than one bad one a season.

Although the center of Audrey remained in the sub-tropics, causing maximum destruction and loss of life in Louisiana, the fringe of the storm flattened the Northland Playhouse teepee at Detroit, leveled the Finger Lakes Lyric Circus tent at Skaneateles, N.Y., damaged another canvastop at Warwick, R.I., and brought flood conditions serious enough in Indianapolis to force the cancellation of a performance at Avondale Playhouse. Several weeks ago a local squall blew down the showtent at Valley Forge, Pa., and a similar storm capsized a teepee at Concordville, Pa.

Whether a hurricane season is predicatable or only a possibility, may be a matter of opinion. Actors Equity has taken the attitude that the big winds are predictable at certain times of year, and a couple of season ago revised its "act of God" rule to cover the situation. In most shore resorts in New England and the middle-Atlantic states, the season has tended to taper off about mid-August the last couple of years as vacationers have headed for home rather than risk the possibility of getting blown and/or washed away.

Atlantic City Reopens

Atlantic City, July 9.

Chelsea Playhouse in the Hotel Chelsea on the downtown boardwalk, is again operating, with Sonia Barrett presenting June Walker in "Champagne Complex" starting last Friday (5). Shows are presented in the hotels' convention room. James Day and Al Baker Jr. are working with Miss Barrett.

A 10-week season is planned, with Yolande Betbeze in "Bus Stop" as the next offering. Shows are being given seven days a week, with matinees Saturdays, and Sundays. Prices scale from $2.50 top to 93c.

The resorts' other former legitimate spot, the Quarter Deck theatre in the Hotel Morton, is playing foreign films this summer.

The Mill Playhouse, located at Pleasant Mills, N.J., a 20-mile drive from the resort, was dark last season, but has been reopened by Ada Fenno and Gianni Pitale. "Curious Savage," was the first offering playing last Tuesday-Saturday (25-29). Clark Jones and Bob Herget are directors, and Gianni Pitale is manager.

Barn at New Egypt, N.J.

New Egypt, N. J., located 18 miles from Trenton between Camp Dix and McGuire Air Base, will have a summer theatre this year. The barn, tagged the New Egypt Theatre, will be an Equity operation. The season began last night (Tues.) under the production auspicies of Michael Gould.

The Theatre, a renovated film house, is a 360-seater and is air-conditioned. Maurice Alevy is managing director.

Open Lake Hopatcong

Lake Hopatcong, N. J., July 9.

The Lakeside Theatre, which opened here June 29 under the new management of Buff Cobb and Syeus Mottel, will offer a novel production of Schnitzler's "La Ronde" the week of July 30. Miss Cobb will play all the femme roles in the show, which will be staged by Mottel.

Malcolm Raphael is business manager of the spot, with Philip King stage manager and Betsy Rapport scenic designer.

Set Terp Troupes For Annual American Fest

New London, Conn., July 9.

A 23-piece orchestra composed of members of the N. Y. Philharmonic-Symphony will be an innovation at the 10th annual American Dance Festival to be held here Aug. 15-18 by Connecticut College.

Appearing will be Dore Hoyer, of Hamburg, Germany, making her U. S. debut, plus the Henry Street Playhouse Dance company, Mary Anthony Dance Theatre group, Jose Limon's troupe, Doris Humphrey's company, and Daniel Nagrin, Pauline Koner, Ruth Currier and Glen Tetley.

'Yankees' Profit $804,748 So Far

"Damn Yankees" has passed the $800,000 gross profit mark. That includes income from the current Broadway production, the recently-closed touring edition and subsidiary rights.

Giving the Frederick Brisson-Robert E. Griffith-Harold S. Prince operation its biggest profit boost in recent months was the national company's next-to-closing stand at the Riviera Theatre, Detroit. The three-week run there netted $49,591 on a total $184,167 gross. That represented a record take for the tour, which ended May 18 at the Royal Alexandra Theatre, Toronto.

The Broadway production, currently in its 114th week, moved last May 7 from its longtime berth at the 46th Street Theatre to the Adelphi Theatre. Since then the tuner has been on twofers and is figured to have been making a profit on most weeks. The financial status as of the May 25 accounting was as follows:

Original investment (repaid), $250,000.

Total gross profit to date, $804,748, including income from film sale.

Distributed profit, $700,000, split evenly between management and backers.

JUDY TYLER, HUSBAND KILLED IN AUTO CRASH

Judy Tyler who with her actor-husband Gregory Lafayette, was killed July 3 when the automobile in which her husband was driving collided with another near Billy the Kid, Wyo., was making the show biz grade the hard way, rising from a winner of beauty contests, into the line at the Copacabana, N.Y., modeling, video, and finally, legit, niteries and films.

She had just completed lead roles in "Jailhouse Rock," opposite Elvis Presley for Metro, and "Bop Girl Goes Calypso." Prior to that Miss Tyler worked briefly in niteries having played the now defunct Le Ruban Bleu, N.Y. Her major legit showcasing had been in Rodgers & Hammerstein's "Pipe Dream." For some time she was in the videoshow, "Howdy Doody."

In the instances of the legiter and her nitery career, she was advancing far ahead of herself. In "Pipe Dream" her performance was described as cryptic, while in the cafe, Miss Tyler was described as needing direction before she could enter top ranks in this field.

Miss Tyler, born Judith Mae Hess, was the daughter of industrialist Julian S. Hess, of Nutmeg Ridge, Ct., an oldtime trumpet player, while her mother, Lorelel Kendler, ex-"Ziegfeld Follies," at one time understudied Marilyn Miller. Miss Tyler was married previously to her onetime vocal coach, Colin Romoff, whom she divorced last year. She married Lafayette a little more than three months ago in Miami Beach, with Patti Page as her matron of honor.

Miss Tyler was due back in New York to appear on "Pantomime Quiz" over CBS-TV in which she was to have been a regular panelist. Funeral services were held yesterday (Tues.) in New York.

2 Coast Spots Waver

Hollywood, July 9.

Players Ring, which has operated two local small-capacity legiters for some time, may have to close one shortly because of declining business. Players Ring, offering "Mrs. Gibbons' Boys," and the Gallery, playing "Me, Candido," have a joint weekly nut of around $2,500. Each seats around 200.

Ted Thorpe and Paul Levitt, coproducers of the houses, both double as actors and they have been seeking film work in an effort to help meet the weekly deficit.

Hub's Wilbur Reverts To Legit Under Kavanagh

Boston, July 9.

The Wilbur Theatre here will resume legit bookings this season. Michael J. Kavanagh has taken over the house, which was relinquished by the Shuberts last season in compliance with the terms of a Government consent decree. Kavanagh, former general manager for the Shuberts in this city, has the theatre on a year's lease with options. He says he's already booked solidly from September through mid-November.

Kavanagh also had the house on a verbal agreement part of last season and booked in two tryouts, "Long Day's Journey Into Night" and "Happiest Millionaire." The only other entry to play the spot during the semester was "Harbor Lights," also a tryout and the last show booked under the Shubert banner. Kavanagh gave up the house later in the season when Mike Todd was considering using it for his film, "Around the World in 80 Days."

The film project was subsequently dropped and the picture is now playing-the Saxon Theatre, formerly operated by the Shuberts as the Majestic. Another former Shubert House, the Plymouth, has also been taken over for films. That leaves the town with four legit houses, the Shubert, Colonial, Opera House and Wilbur.

Shows Abroad

John Gielgud

Zurich, July 2.

Schauspielhaus presentation of "An Anthology of Shakespeare" recital by Sir John Gielgud. At Schauspielhaus, Zurich, June 24, '57; $3.50 top.

In these days where recitals and platform readings have almost become a permanent part of legit, especially in the English-speaking world, this one-man homage to the genius of Shakespeare by John Gielgud stands out as a distinguished addition to the phenomena.

British actor presents a careful selection of monolog, sonnets and short scenes, chosen from George Rylands' anthology "The Ages of Man." The program is divided into three parts, Youth, Manhood and Old Age, illuminating character in respect to vigor. For example, childhood, magic and fairy, nature, sport, love, jealousy and lust go with Youth; war, civil strife, kingship, government and society, passion and character relate with Manhood; and death, sickness, sleep, man against himself and time point to Old Age.

Represented by a rich variety of passages from "Hamlet," "Macbeth," "Romeo and Juliet," "Julius Caesar," "Merchant of Venice," "Much Ado About Nothing," "Winter's Tale," "Tempest," "King Lear," "Othello," the various "Kings," Gielgud's impeccable diction, his tremendous versatility in changing with no effort from subtle comedy to pathos to high tragedy, make this a stunning theatrical experience. Mezo.

Japanese No Troupe

Paris, July 9.

The Japanese No Troup from Tokyo has left most of the Parisian critics and audiences nonplussed, but it filled the Theatre Sarah Bernhardt to SRO during its four night stay during the Theatre of Nations' season.

The liturgical, ritualistic theatre whose symbols and meanings were mainly lost on occidental audiences still exhuded a hypnotic charm and the sheer elegance of costumes, the strident but dramatic music, and the intensity of playing were respected.

For the States this would be very limited to specialized highbrow audiences able to take the formal, rigid, oriental beauty and symbolism. Mosk.

'Journey' a Long Night's Paris Hit

Gets Ovation Despite Heatwave, Uncooled Theatre —Critical Praise for Cast

Paris, July 9.

Despite record-breaking heat, lack of air-conditioning and the fact that four-hour dramas are unknown in Paris "Long Day's Journey Into Night" was a spectacular success here last week. The Eugene O'Neill play had a tumultous reception at its opening last Tuesday night (2) as a feature of the Theatre of Nations season at the Sarah Bernhardt Theatre.

The engagement was a solid sell-out at all five performances through Saturday night (6). In fact, the huge house (2,500 seats) went clean several weeks ago, within a few hours after the start of the sale. There was tremendous interest in the show, with a press list of 500 pairs of free seats. Critics from some 35 countries were on hand to cover it.

Although "Journey" is much longer than normal for audiences (it rang up at 8:15 and, with two 10-minute intermissions, continued until 12:50 a.m.), with lengthy, intense stretches of dialog and little physical action, it offered the first opportunity for Parisian critics to review the work of the top American dramatist. In general, the reaction was that the play tends to be an ordeal, but has undeniable greatness.

Following the opening performance, concluding with a five-minute ovation, much of the celebrity-studded audience trooped backstage to congratulate the cast. They included U.S. Ambassador Amory Houghton, Maurice Chevalier, Edwige Feuillere, Gerard Philipe, Marie Bell, Christian Dior, Irwin Shaw, Preston Sturges, Francoise Rosay, Olivia de Havilland, Francois Perier and Pierre Fresnal.

There was immediate interest in a French language production. Lars Schmidt has the rights and plans to do it, possibly with Miss Feuillere in the femme lead or perhaps Fresnay and Yvonne Printemps costarring. Meanwhile, the drama is slated for presentation in Italy next season and the Soviet Satellite countries are also bidding for the rights.

The dean of the Paris critics, Robert Kemp, of Le Monde, called "Journey" a severe test for the audience, but a drama of genuine grandeur. Jean-Jacques Gautier, of Le Figaro, noted the play's oppressive, desolate flavor and mentioned that he disagreed with his American colleagues as to its greatness, but he praised the acting, especially citing Florence Eldridge, Fredric March and Jason Robards Jr.

Paul Gordeaux, of France-Soir, likened the work to a theatrical monument that could be reached only by climbing a 500-step spiral stairway. Most of the reviews approved the staging of Jose Quintero, who attended the opening with his producer-partner, Theodore Mann. The setting for the show, constructed here, was a duplicate of that used on Broadway. The plan is to use it for the London production in the fall of 1958.

Following their final performance last Saturday night, the Marches (Miss Eldridge) left for a vacation in Greece, where they will remain until time for re-rehearsals and the opening of the play Aug. 25 at the Helen Hayes Theatre, N.Y.

Show of Month Club In Boston Starts in Fall

Boston, July 9.

Boston now has a Show of the Month Club, sponsored by Panorama, Boston guide magazine. It starts this fall with an estimated membership of 2,500.

The plan offers members each month a legit show at reduced ticket prices. No membership fee is required and there is no obligation to purchase tickets to any shows during the season.

The 2,500 membership enrollment, with each member purchasing a pair of seats at discount price, means a 5,000 admissions potential each month, according to Jerome M. Rosenfeld, prexy of Jerome Publications, publishers of Panorama.

Lease on Love

New Hope, Pa., July 1.

Michael Ellis production of three-act comedy by Aldo de Benedetti. Staged by Stanley Kauffmann; setting by W. Broderick Hackett; lighting by David Hale Hand. At Bucks County Playhouse, New Hope, Pa., July '57.

Cast: Philip Bourneuf, Frances Reid, Will Kuluva, Adelaide Klein, Leonard Mulhern, Don Walter, Margie Battles, David Lange, William Conn.

A romantic comedy with no kissing, no clinches—and no love until the last five minutes. That's "Lease on Love," a new comedy by Aldo de Benedetti which made its bow at Bucks County Playhouse.

There's a new twist here. Instead of love at first sight, "Lease on Love" features marriage at first sight.

Whether the new angle is enough to support the play as a Broadway vehicle is a question. The theme of mature love is a light one, but de Benedetti's writing is so entertaining and skillful that the play just might make it.

Philip Bourneuf and his wife, Florence Reid, who own the production rights to the Italian comedy, tried it out last February under the title of "The Last Five Minutes" at Columbia U., playing the leading roles themselves. They talked Michael Ellis into letting them try it out again at New Hope. Now they must convince some Broadway producer. Or perhaps they might risk it themselves.

The setting is an apartment in present-day Rome. A wealthy and graying bachelor meets a pretty spinster dressmaker who's not too happy at still being a virgin. Both want to rent the same apartment. Over good food and wine in the barren apartment they work out a marriage-for-convenience arrangement, and after three plausible, amusing acts there's the obvious-from-the-start happy ending.

Bourneuf gives the harassed husband the necessary debonair, yet confused quality. Miss Reid is equally excellent as a brainy woman who generally knows what she is doing but has her flighty moments, too.

Adelaide Klein is properly excitable as Miss Reid's dress-making partner and stooge. Will Kuluva, although overdoing the basso profundo approach, still scores as Bourneuf's accomplice.

Surprise situations are what hold "Lease on Love" together and director Stanley Kauffmann has done a good job of keeping things moving. W. Broderick Hackett transforms the apartment from barren to stylish for the second act. Bitt.

Multiple Fest in Stratford, Ont.

Besides Shakespeare in New Theatre, It Offers Opera, Jazz Concerts and a Film Fest

By ROBERT A. McSTAY

Stratford, Ont., July 9.

Although the emphasis is on the drama phase of the operation and especially the new theatre building, the Stratford Shakespeare Festival which opened here last week for its fifth season is now a full-scale entertainment-arts project.

The Festival opened Monday night (1) of last week with a production of "Hamlet," staged by Michael Langham, with two Canadian-born players among the leads, Christopher Plummer in the title role and Frances Hyland as Ophelia. The other revival, "Twelfth Night," staged by Tyrone Guthrie and starring Irish-born Siobhan McKenna with Plummer as Toby Belch, opened Tuesday night (2).

The twin openings were sellouts, and on the basis of the hefty advance sale, attendance will apparently be heavy through the season, ending Sept. 7. The two plays will alternate in repertory, with matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays.

The new theatre is built on the site of the former tent and encloses the original auditorium and three-sided apron-stage. It is air-conditioned and sound-proof, the latter feature eliminating noises which heretofore, distracted audiences and actors. Most important, the acoustics are excellent and the most remote seat is only 65 feet away from the centre of the stage. There are no obstructing pillars.

The financial support of Canadians from coast-to-coast has made the building of the new theatre possible. The city of Stratford alone gave $140,000, or an average of $7 from every man, woman and child. Larger individual donations came from governments, foundations and industries, with Canadian theatregoers also pouring in contributions.

The Festival theatre is one of the few completely round structures in the world and possibly the only theatrical buiding of its kind. It was designed by Robert Fairfield, Toronto architect, who has retained the original auditorium bowl and apron stage, enclosing these in a concrete structure, with outside wood and glass for a modernistic appearance, plus fluted roof topped by a coronet and flying pennants. With its undulating, conical pattern, the copper roof of the theatre retains its tent origin.

Key to the planning of the whole building has been the stage, designed for the first Festival by Tyrone Guthrie, director, and Tanya Moiseiwitsch, designer; with Tom Patterson, the originator of the Festival, supervising. With its three sides and seven levels, plus acting balcony, the Elizabethan stage brings the actors right into the audience. The architect and Miss Moiseiwitsch are also responsible for the subdued blues and greys of the interior decor.

The new theatre is a circular building 200 feet in diameter and 70 feet high. The increased seating capacity includes a balcony of 858 seats.

But the two legit presentations are only part, although by common consent the major part, of the overall Stratford Festival operation. Other elements, present and future, include the scheduled tour next winter of the Festival Players in several major Canadian cities and probably Detroit and New York; the appearance of the company in two 90-minute tv spectaculars over Canadian Broadcasting Co. facilities.

Also, film productions of the "Hamlet" and "Twelfth Night" revivals; the first North American appearance of the English Opera Group from London in Benjamin Britten's "Turn of the Screw," with the composer conducting; a series of jazz concerts by Duke Ellington, Count Basie, Billie Holliday and others, and the International Film Festival.

The focal point of interest, of course, is the new permanent Festival theatre. This seats 2,180 in the orchestra and balcony, as compared with 1,980 in the old tent. It cost $1,500,000, plus a token payment to the architects and contractors, covering cost of building. Of the required $1,500,000, the Festival raised $1,300,000. The $200,000 deficit may be earned this summer.

'FANNY' FEEBLE 30G FOR 2D WEEK, DALLAS

Dallas, July 9.

Second stanza of "Fanny" tallied $30,000 for seven performances through the closing matinee Sunday (7) at State Fair Musicals. Revival, second of the six shows in the Musicals' 16th season here, was produced by Charles R. Meeker Jr., and starred Bill Hayes, Nicola Moscona, Hiram Sherman and Margot Moser.

Tuner braved this summer's first heat wave, with temperatures from 100 to 105 degrees the last five days. Shows have been staged in air-conditioned State Fair Auditorium since 1951.

"Texas, Li'l Darlin'," top grosser of the six shows here in 1951, opened last night (Mon.) for a fortnight's run. Comedy repeat has the same trio of stars back—Jack Carson, Jet MacDonald and Danny Scholl. Featured are Howard Smith, William LeMassena, Karen Wolfe, William Mullican and Helen Blount.

'Lady' 80G Again, 'Match' 21½G, L.A.

Los Angeles, July 9.

An all-time Los Angeles legit record was set by "My Fair Lady" as the first offering of the Civic Light Opera Season. Tally for the 10-week stand hit $778,000. It departed Saturday (6) and was replaced last night (Mon.) by "South Pacific," first of two shows this season which will star Mary Martin. Second will be "Annie Get Your Gun."

Estimates for Last Week

Matchmaker, Huntington Hartford (C) (1st wk) ($4.95; 1,024; $30,000) (Ruth Gordon, Loring Smith, Virginia Cutts). Okay $21,500 for the first of two frames.

My Fair Lady, Philharmonic Aud (MC) (10th wk) ($5.95; 2,670; $80,000) (Brian Aherne, Anne Rogers). Another capacity $80,000 on the windup.

'Cat' Feeble $8,100, Chi; Ending Tour This Week; Not Returning to B'way

Chicago, July 9.

"Cat on a Hot Tin Roof," sapped by multiple cast replacements and slugged by a combination of hot weather and the July 4 weekend doldrums, is tossing in the sponge next Saturday (13) and ending its tour here after an 11-week stand. The Playwrights Co. had been considering taking the Tennessee Williams drama to Broadway for a return engagement, but last week's $8,100 gross, representing a drop of about $5,300 from the previous stanza, put the freeze on that idea. The show has a $5 top at the 1,335-seat Erlanger Theatre.

With Thomas Gomez, Marjorie Steele and Alex Nicol in the starring roles originated respectively by Burl Ives, Barbara Bel Geddes and Ben Gazzara, the show play drew mixed reviews here, but got by profitably its first three weeks on subscription. It tapered off thereafter, however, and when a parade of cast replacements set in (an even dozen actors arrived from New York to take over most of the roles, excepting Miss Steele's femme lead), the show was doomed.

With the demise of "Cat," all local theatres will go dark for an expected period of at least six weeks.

Minn. U. Group to Tour German Bases & Brazil

Minneapolis, July 9.

U. of Minnesota Theatre will make two international tours this summer under sponsorship of the American Educational Theatre Assn. First tour will include military bases in Germany for the Defense Dept. After that, the group will go to Brazil as part of the International Exchange program of the State Dept.

The 14-member company leaves July 21 for Germany to present "Midsummer's Night Dream," and is due back Aug. 17 in New York. Three days later it will depart for Brazil, returning Sept. 30. In Brazil the troupe will appear at universities and the Sao Paulo Festival, offering "Our Town" along with "Dream."

July 4th Holiday Cripples B'way; 'Girl' $52,200, 'Fella' 27½G, 'Hole' 12G, 'Abner' 48½G, 'Happy' 40G, 'Love' 10½G

Broadway was slugged last week. Business, which fizzled over the long July 4th holiday weekend, is expected to pick up somewhat this frame. On the basis of sinking receipts, one show is closing next Saturday (13) and it's likely others may do the same in the next few weeks.

The only capacity entries were "Bells Are Ringing" and "My Fair Lady."

Estimates for Last Week

Keys: C (Comedy), D (Drama), CD (Comedy-Drama), R (Revue), MC (Musical-Comedy), MD (Musical-Drama), O (Opera), OP (Operetta).

Other parenthetic designations refer, respectively, to weeks played, number of performances through last Saturday, top prices, number of seats, capacity gross and stars. Price includes 10% Federal and 5% City tax, but grosses are net; i.e., exclusive of taxes.

'Hatful' $12,300, Philly; Set Last 2 of Season

Philadelphia, July 9.

"Hatful of Rain," starring Kim Hunter, grossed a substantial $12,300 last week at the Playhouse in the Park, Philly's municipally-operated tent theatre on Belmont Plateau in West Fairmount Park. George Jessel opened last night (Mon.) for a week's run with his musical program, "Showtime."

The final two shows of the season were announced last week by Sam H. Handelsman, Playhouse managing director. "Career," currently an off-Broadway hit in New York, will be presented Aug. 26-31 with a cast including Charles Aidman, Constance Ford and Mary James.

The season closer, Sept. 2-7, will be "The Dazzling Hour," Nancy Mitford's adaptation of Anna Bonacci's original comedy, with French actress Mony Dalmes as star. Gilbert Miller has the play under option for fall production in Broadway.

'Pacific' $56,343, 'Sgts' $25,700, S.F.

San Francisco, July 9.

"South Pacific" ended a record-breaking five-week run at the Curran last Saturday (6) by smashing the house record again. Total take for the five weeks was $278,900, tops for any five-week engagement in the house's 35-year history.

In addition, the Frisco Civic Light Opera had an advance sale of $600,000 for "My Fair Lady," which opened last night (8) at the 3,300-seat Opera House. This is only $90,000 short of a complete sellout for the six-week run.

"Reluctant Debutante" opens tomorrow night (Wed.) at the Alcazar until Aug. 24, and "Fanny" opens next Monday (15) at the Curran for a five-week stay. "Diary of Anne Frank" will take over Aug. 26 at the Alcazar.

Estimates for Last Week

South Pacific, Curran (5th wk) ($5.50-$5.90; 1,756; $57,000) (Mary Martin, Giorgio Tozzi). Sellout $56,343; previous week, $55,926; this was lightest subscription of the five weeks and thus allowed house to come closest to full potential; exited for Los Angeles last Saturday (6).

No Time for Sergeants, Geary (1st wk) ($4.40-$4.95; 1,550; 36,000). Over $25,700 for seven performances.

'Pacific' Passable 45G 2d Week, Kansas City

Kansas City, July 9.

"South Pacific" wound up a run of two weeks at the Starlight Theatre in Swope Park Sunday night (7) with a moderate $45,000, despite threatening weather. That was $1,000 better than the previous week. Howard Keel, Martha Wright, Gloria Lane, Benny Baker and Jim Hawthorne headed the "S.P." cast. It was the first musical produced by the Starlight staff, but the second offering of the season. First was the Liberace unit.

"High Button Shoes" opened last night (Mon.) with a cast including Paul Gilbert, Hal LeRoy, Denise Lor and Jill Corey.

'Waltz' Languid $29,000; 1 Rained Out in Pitt

Pittsburgh, July 9.

The Pittsburgh Civic Light Opera Co. had another slow grosser last week in "The Great Waltz," with Lois Hunt, Bill Shirley and Terry Saunders heading the cast. The musical, the second of the current season, drew $29,000 at the al Fresco Pitt Stadium. The July 4th holiday and a washout Saturday (6) night contributed to the poor showing.

The Saturday evening performance had to be called because of rain after about 45 minutes. Refunds were made. "Pajama Game," with John Raitt, Patricia Marand, Neile Adams and Coley Worth, is current.

GASTON-ALPHONSE ACT TAKES TO THE BARNS

Saratoga, N. Y., July 9.

The traditional rivalries of straw-hat operation don't seem to worry John Huntington, producer at the Spa Summer Theatre here. During his between-acts curtain spiels he's been advising audiences to patronize his "opposition," the musical "Pajama Game" at the Sacandaga Summer Theatre, about 25 miles away.

Besides pointing out that the Sacandaga presentation is the only chance local residents will have to see the musical, Huntington has told his customers that the Anthony Brady Farrell operation offers good productions. He called John Larson, managing director of Sacandaga, "one of the finest summer theatre managers."

Edward Everett Horton, costarring at the Spa last week in "Reluctant Debutante," also gave a public plug to Sacandaga. In an interview over Schenectady radio station WGY, the actor mentioned that he planned to attend the "Pajama" matinee that day, July 3. The interviewer, Martha Brooks, agreed that Sacandaga is a fine theatre, but mentioned that the spot's aluminum roof is noisy during rainstorms.

(After years of wary rivalry, there is now friendly mutual-plugging between the Bucks County Playhouse, operated by Michael Ellis in New Hope, Pa.; and the Music Circus run by St. John Terrell just across the Delaware River in Lambertville, N. J.)

Set 'Godot' for Coast

Hollywood, July 9.

Coast rights to Samuel Beckett's "Waiting for Godot" have been acquired by Monte Hellman for production next fall as the first offering of the new Playgoers Co.

Group plans a season of four plays.

Williamsb'g-Jamest'n

somewhat stilted handling of "Common Glory" and "Faith of Our Fathers," he has made this one a cowboy & Indian story, a lively melodrama that moves. And for a change of pace, he's added some slightly bawdy comedy which gives an earthy feel to the whole play.

This is, of course, the story of the first settlers, of Pocahontas and Captain John Smith; of John Rolfe and how the colonists came to grow tobacco; of hunger tnd Indian massacres.

"The Founders" is being shown in the new Cove Amphitheatre built specially for it, on the campus of William and Mary College in Williamsburg.

Interesting angle is that it is virtually next door to the amphitheatre in which "The Common Glory," the Revolutionary War play, is now running for the 11th consecutive summer.

Doubling In History

In order to avoid confusion or conflict, "Founders" plays matinees and "Common Glory" at night. Both are under the auspices of the Jamestown Corp. They share the same director, Howard Scammon; the same choreographer, Myra Kinch; the same general manager, Allen Matthews; the same technical people; and even have some actors doubling in both shows.

At Jamestown proper, an elaborate Festival area is marked out. On the little off-shore island where the settlers first put down their roots, foundations of the early homes have been located and uncovered. In another location has been built a replica of James Fort of 1607—an enclosure of whattle and clay and timbered houses protected by a log "palisade." Nearby is a replica of Jamestown's first industry, a small glassblowing plant in operation; and a copy of the "long house" of Indian Chief Powhattan. In the James River are moored full-size replicas of the three ships which brought the settlers in 1607—the Susan Constant, Godspeed and Discovery.

Finally, there is a modern exhibit area — streamlined fair buildings housing historic exhibits from this country and England.

Williamsburg was the child of Jamestown and succeeded it as the capital of colonial Virginia. Its restoration project is world renowned—and the work still continues. To the more than 400 restored and reconstructed buildings, there has been added this year another restaurant — a restoration of Mrs. Campbells' Coffee House, of the 18th century.

Crustaceans at Campbell's

History tells that George Washington ate there frequently in pre-Revolutionary days. It was then noted principally for its seafood. Today, it also specializes in seafood. In the 18th century it featured Black Velvet, a mixture of champagne and stout. You can still order a black velvet at Mrs. Campbell's

Also, the non-profit Williamsburg Corp. has struck a blow for the steadily mounting flow of tourists. In addition to its colonial style "Inn" and "Lodge," it has gone modern and has opened one of the plushiest motels anywhere. Place has over 200 rooms, swimming pools, a large and very fine cafeteria; and a new information centre with space to park 1,000 cars. This modern area is away from and completely screened by trees from the colonial restoration. Among its features are two motion picture theatres which offer a new specially made historical color film "Williamsburg, The Story of a Patriot."

Pic, scripted by Emmet Lavery, directed by George Seaton, and with a professional cast, takes Williamsburg up to the start of the Revolution. It tells of such historic figures as Patrick Henry, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, Richard Henry Lee, et al. A thoroughly professional job, it was produced under contract by Paramount.

Opera Reviews

Moses und Aron

Zurich, June 18.

Stadttheatre production of opera in two acts by Arnold Schoenberg. Musical direction, Prof. Hans Rosbaud; staged by Karl Heinz Krahl, Paul Haferung, Jaroslav Berger; choir direction, Hans Erismann, Filip Razlag, Ellen Widmann, Fred Barth; assistant musical direction, Paul Gergely, Gustav Meier, Erich Widl. At Stadttheatre, Zurich, June 10, '57. $4.65 top.

Solo Voices ..... Friedrich, Keller, Davenport, Dick, Toth, Gillig

This first performance with scenery of Arnold Schoenberg's unfinished opera of biblical proportions, written 1930-32 and judged unperformable by the composer himself, has been a prime topic of conversation here among musicians and laymen alike. It is perhaps the costliest undertaking in the history of the Zurich Stadttheatre, made possible only by municipal subsidies, and rehearsals have been going on since last fall, totalling over 230 for choirs and orchestra alone. All this whetted the public's curiosity. Resultantly the skedded three performances during the Zurich June Festival were advance sellouts.

Written in Schoenberg's own 12-Note system combined with rhythmic speaking choirs, opera requires utmost concentration and unerring musicality by every single member as well as a huge stage equipped with a multitude of technical devices. For this world premiere, the technically insufficient Zurich stage had to be extended into the auditorium, sacrificing the first two rows plus 18 proscenium boxes. The orchestra was enlarged, the regular choir was tripled and a sharply trained speaking choir added.

The result is one of the most impressive productions seen here in many years. Whether "Moses" will develop into a repertory piece, however, is dubious. Companies will shy away from physical difficulties plus the fact that Schoenberg's admirably expressive, but uncompromisingly atonal music is not everybody's dish.

The composer's own libretto concerns the Exodus from Egypt episode from the Bible, playing up the difference between Moses, whom the fluency of speech is denied, and his half-brother Aron, the glib talker, designed by God to set Moses' ideas into words. Highlight is the orgy around the Golden Calf, followed by Moses' smashing of the decalogue and despairing over his task while Aron leads the Jews on their way to the Promised Land. The uncomposed final act would have shown the re-encounter between Moses and Aron, with the former's ideas at last triumphant.

Stadttheatre production was initiated and energetically spurred by its newly appointed artistic manager Karl Heinz Krahl who assumed the terrific burden of the staging, along with Hans Rosbaud, whose musical direction is no less laudatory. They were importantly assisted by designer Paul Haferung who created the strikingly effective set and costumes, enhanced by skillful use of ultra-modern, symbolic background slides. Special praise is also due to the four choir directors who probably have more vital function here than in any other known opera.

It is one of Schoenberg's most ingenious ideas to have written Moses as a speaking part whereas Aron's fluent tongue becomes a lyrical tenor. Counterpoint of these two idioms makes for fascinating effects. Both roles are filled superbly here by Hans Herbert Fiedler (Moses) and Helmut Melchert, both from Germany. The other parts, too, are excellently cast.

Call it a highly rewarding theatrical experiment. Mezo.

The Rake's Progress

Amsterdam, June 28.

Netherlands Opera production of Stravinsky's opera. Directed by Peter Potter. Stars Graziella Sciutti, Eugene Conley, Otakar Kraus, Mimi Aarden, Frans Vrooms, Gee Smith. Libretto, W. H. Auden and Chester Kallman; conductor, Erich Leinsdorff; set designer, Kenneth Green. At Stadsschouwburg, Amsterdam, June 15, '57; $4 top.

Weak effort, both artistically as well as financially, is the Netherlands Opera's new production of Stravinsky's "The Rake's Progress." Cost of this tribute to the composer on his recent 75 birthday is only partially defrayed by a subsidy granted by the Holland Festival. The grant is expected to cover 25% of expenses. Mediocre quality of the presentation, moreover, likely won't generate enough business to meet the balance of the nut.

In an attempt to create a production on an international level, a number of expensive guestars were imported. They include conductor Erich Leinsdorff, director Peter Potter, set designer Kenneth Green and three singers. This was a major factor in the company's financial burden.

Opera is inspired by a set of Hogarth engravings and Mozart's "Don Giovanni." Being cerebral, it needs electric talent to bring it alive. This was lacking. The artists did not always achieve the meaning of the Stravinsky work. Often their performances bordered on insincere and artificial impressions.

Peter Potter's direction came close to having the singers act and live their parts, but he missed out entirely with the choir. Graziella Sciutti sang the part of Anne with feeling and distinction. Eugene Conley's Tom was effective, especially in the last acts, while Otakar Kraus' Nick Shadow also scored. Leinsdorff conducted the Netherlands Opera orchestra as Stravinsky probably would have admired, i.e. more technically reasoned than inspired. Saaltink

Freedley's Book On Lunts

George Freedley, drama critic and curator of the theatre collection of the N.Y. Public Library, has delivered his book on the Lunts to Rockliff, London publishing house which specializes in Theatre World Monographs on Living Actors. Alec Guinness, Dame Edith Evans, Peggy Ashcroft, Emlyn Williams and Margaret Rutherford constitute the previous subjects. Alfred Lunt and Lynn Fontanne will be the sixth in the series. Rinehart, Macmillan and Holt are interested in the American publication rights.

Freedley told Raymond Mander and Joe Mitchenson, who edit the Rockliff series of monographs, that he would accept their invitation to do such a book providing the Lunts fully cooperated; also, that he had heard that Lunts himself was writing such a book. Latter said he didn't have the time for his memoirs and the team did cooperate. The Freedley book was consummated chiefly by correspondence because of the Lunts' extensive touring.

Incidentally, Mander & Mitchenson are ex-actors who have a theatre library service in England, a la the N.Y. Public Library, but unlike Freedley's department the Londoners operate it as a private venture for fee purposes.

Show Biz Bestsellers

Eddie Cantor's "Take My Life" made its third appearance this week on the N. Y. Times national bestsellers, rating 12th. Gypsy Rose Lee's "Gypsy" has been five weeks on the national rosters, last rating No. 16.

Ellin (Mrs. Irving) Berlin's memoir, "Silver Platter," and the Diana Barrymore-Gerold Frank book, "Too Much, Too Soon," are also up there.

Allen Ward's Added Chores

Allen Ward, publisher of the New Hope (Pa.) Gazette, has become managing editor of the Bucks County (Pa.) Traveler, a monthly mag he previously owned. He and his wife, Alice, continue as publishers of the Gazette, a weekly, with Mitchell Wunn as managing editor, Jacques K. Francine advertising manager and Mrs. Ward's women's editor.

The Gazette, which suspended publications a couple of years ago after running in the red for several years, picked up when Ward changed the format from its magazine size to regular tabloid size, so it could handle mats of national ads. The paper grossed nearly $40,000 last year and had a small profit. The Wards recently turned down an offer of $17,500 for their 52% interest in the sheet.

The Bucks County Traveler, now owned and published by Alan Miller, is a slick-paper, extensively illustrated mag with a rural flavor. It currently prints 20,000 copies. Ward formerly covered New Hope, Trenton and Princeton for VARIETY.

'Impossible' Greeting Cards

Film and tv scripter Leonard L. Levinson, onetime VARIETY staffer in the Hollywood office, has whipped up a bright 35-center for Pyramid Books titled "Impossible Greeting Cards."

It's in the same idiom of Levinson's offbeat humor when he became head of an indie production outfit which he labeled Impossible Pictures.

"Impossible Greeting Cards" is replete with zany captions and illustrations. Abel.

Not A Lotta Bull

Rex Smith, newspaperman turned American Airlines exec (now veepee in charge of publicity) is a corrida buff. So are a lot of American writing fellers from Hemingway down but none has done as generous a valentine to the Spanish national sport as the editing job by Smith on "Biography of the Bulls" (Rinehart; $7.95), a handsome anthology of Spanish bullfighting.

It has pieces by "Papa" Hemingway, Barnaby Conrad, Robert Ruark and other aficionados but, more, this is loaded with legend and lore, and compressed between the covers of a kingsize work is all the pageantry and glory of the man-against-beast. It is historical and monumental, dramatically illustrated with halftones, line-cuts and photographs, and is a terrific gift item for anybody this—or the other—side of the Castellana Hilton set. Abel.

Habima, Paul Green, Kimball

Raikin Ben-Ari, a member of the original Habima Theatre in Russia, who has worked with Stanislavsky, Vachtangov, Reinhardt and Meyerhold, has been head of the Dramatic Workshop of the New School of Social Science in N.Y., and now drama director of the Brandeis Institute in California has written a thorough book on the group, which was founded in 1919 in Moscow. The Jewish theatre troupe still flourishes in Israel with a core of some of the original members. Harold Clurman wrote the intro for this Thomas Yoseloff publication ($5), which was translated by A. H. Gross and I. Soref.

Samuel French has just published Paul Green's symphonic outdoor drama, "The Founders" ($3) in a special Jamestown Festival Edition.

The story of the Kimball piano and organ is between covers as "Music For Millions," by Van Allen Bradley (Regnery; $4). It marks the 100th anniversary of the founding of the firm in Chicago by William Wallace Kimball. Abel.

The Story of Sardi's

"Curtain Up At Sardi's," by Vincent Sardi Jr. and Helen Bryson will published this fall by Random House. It's a book of recipes along with the story of the famed theatrical restaurant, Victor Borge wrote the foreword.

A couple years ago a biog of Sardi Sr., who founded the West 44th St. (N.Y.) eatery, was published. Sardi Jr. is its present operating head.

Other RH anthologies due include "Best Television and Radio Plays of 1956," winners of the Writers Guild of America awards, as selected by independent judges who included Al Capp, John Daly, Groucho Marx, Norman Corwin, Dr. Frank Baxter, Gilbert Seldes and others. Preface by Clifton Fadiman. Another is a $30 deluxe three-volume, boxed edition of "The Complete Works of Shakespeare," with over 3,500 pages, and more than 740 photographs of famous scenes featuring Sir Laurence Olivier, Claire Bloom, Anthony Quayle and others.

Cartoon collections include Whitney Darrow Jr.'s 200 New Yorker sketches under the title, "Stop, Miss!", and the New York Morning Telegraph and Racing Form's "Peb," whose "The Equine Comedy" puts accent on the gee-gees.

Random House prexy Bennett Cerf's wife Phyllis Cerf and Edith Young have edited "The Complete Family Fun Book" ("puzzles, quizzes and games for everyone") for RH publication in November. An anthology of another sort, "A Treasury of American Anecdotes," edited by B. A. Botkin (who did "N.Y. City Folklore" and "A Treasury of American Folklore") is also a Random House item the same month.

H'wood and TV Novels

Screenwriter Libbie Block's novel, "The Hills of Beverly" (with a Hollywood background, natch!), due via Doubleday in August.

TV comedian Ernie Kovacs' first novel, "Zoomar," is also a Doubleday entry come October.

Signet's Pix Reprints

Signet is making capital of paperbacks based on motion pictures, and this month has three on the stands, "The Prince and the Showgirl," from the Terence Rattigan screenplay (WB); "Hatful of Rain" by Michael V. Gazzo (20th); and "Sweet Smell of Success (and other stories by Ernest Lehman)" from Hecht-Lancaster (UA).

Publisher will also release "The Life, The Loves, The Adventures of Omar Khayyam," a novel by Manuel Komroff based on a Paramount screenplay by Barre Lyndon.

Jesse Lasky; Calendar Girl

Among the breezy show biz items is Jesse L. Lasky's very readable "I Blow My Own Horn," in collaboration with Don Weldon (Doubleday; $4.50) which, as is always true when the author has been subjectively prominent in his field, gives an authoritative, firsthand, closeup on Hollywood. As one of the few surviving pioneers of stature, Lasky's personal history traverses the Hollywood and Broadway canvas of the picture business, its ups-and-downs, and his own mercurial career from a vaudeville bandmaster to a film giant, and his current status as an indie "independent" producer.

In another idiom, also frank, is nude-art poser Gloria Gale's "Calendar Girl" (Fell; $2.95), revealing lowdown on the al fresco profession which, according to the author, has some sharp standards of its own. No. 1 cardinal rule is "don't touch the candy," i.e. nobody in the studio must ever develop hand trouble, for all the frankness of the undraped posturing. Abel.

Sobel's Vaude Book

George Jessel is writing the introduction to Bernard Sobel's "A Pictorial History of Vaudeville" for Citadel Press, due in 1958.

Sobel's "A Pictorial History of Burlesque" was published by Putnams last December. His vaude book will be a companion edition although via another publisher.

Ted Prager's Memoir

N. Y. Daily News assistant city editor Ted Prager has written a memoir of his newspaper days as a "Police Reporter" which Duell, Sloan & Pearce will publish next month.

Viola Ilma, longtime Paris newspaper columnist and publisher of a newsletter titled "Ilma's Paris Grapevine," has also written her autobiog for the same pub, titled "The Political Virgin," due in November.

N. Y. Times Book Review editor J. Donald Adams has edited and written the foreword to an anthology titled "Triumph Over Odds," also a DSP fall item. Still another newspaper-tv source is "Operation Success" by Quentin Reynolds and Wilfrid S. Rowe based on the video series of that title as scripted by Rowe.

Another Jazz Novel

George Lea, who won first prize in the major fiction division of the (the late playwright) Avery Hopwood writing contest at the Univ. of Michigan (1956), where he attended, is having the book, "Somewhere There's Music," published by Lippincott. It's in the ultra-modern cool jazz idiom.

It will be released first as a $1.50 paperback and published at $3.50 in hard covers after its issuance next January.

Two other Lippincott publications due sooner are aviatrix Ruth Nichols' "Wings for Life," autobiog (September) and Ernst (Putzi) Hanfstaengel's closeup on Hitler titled "Unheard Witness," when the Harvard-educated, Munich-born Ernst F. Sedgwick Hanfstaengel was the Nazis' propagandist in America.

Barnum Revisited

"Barnum, Showman of America," by Helen Wells (McKay; $3.50), is a new study, prepared to a large extent from the great P. T.'s autobiog, which the impresario rewrote at various times in his career, usually to replenish his bankroll after one of the five disastrous fires which, at different times, wiped out Barnum's exhibitions and canvas tops. Book contains nice slant on showman's dealings with his prize "properties," Tom Thumb, Jenny Lind, and Jumbo, the world's biggest elephant.

No revelations in this tome, but it provides satisfactory refresher on P. T.'s life and good times. Down.

SCULLY'S SCRAPBOOK

By Frank Scully

Oslo, July 9.

In the magazine rack on the plane from New York to Oslo was a publication called Billed Bladet. From where we sat it featured what looked like a topside view of Ike's balding dome, and was plugging a feature entitled "Visit The World's Friendliest Cannibals."

I had to check if that meant us Americanos. Having seen "Visit To A Small Planet" at the New York Booth a few nights before, I thought the friendliest cannibals might have been the Virginians. But the author meant the man-eaters from the Fiji Islands.

How the Virginians were ever selected as representatives of our small planet is the only baffling thing about this otherwise delightful comedy. Cyril Ritchard playing Kreton said he picked Virginia because he wanted to see how people on this earth fought and he particularly wanted to see Generals Grant and Lee in action.

For such a brilliant foreigner, it's amazing that his timing should be so far off. He was late for the Civil War by nearly 100 years. From what I have heard about people from outer space, by those who have claimed personal contact with Saucerians, they are supposed to be so far ahead of us that not only would wars not interest them but they couldn't possibly make a mistake like this. In keeping tabs of our bellicosity they are said to have a way to turn even H-bombs into duds.

Wasn't Dizzy A Dean Too?

Myself depressingly referred to at saucerian conventions as "The Dean Of Flying Saucer Authorities," I get a lot of bounce to the ounce out of seeing what playwrights can do with the vast and mysterious subject—especially if they are funny on both high and low planes.

Former U.S. Asst. Attorney General Thurman Arnold touted this play while on a visit to Palm Springs, which many people think is a satellite to this earth, not really a part of it.

"Small Planet" is another proof that if a thing is pretty good on television it can be much better on stage or screen. "Planet" originated as a tv comedy on the Goodyear Playhouse. It was produced by Gordon Duff and Robert Alan Aurthur for NBC over two years ago. Then, as now, Cyril Ritchards starred in the play and directed it.

But there were other changes in the play version. Edward Andrews played the role of the pompous commentator on tv, the part being played now by Philip Coolidge on the stage. Another switch was in the role of the befuddled General Powers, now played by Eddie Mayehoff. It was originally done by Alan Reed. Andrews succeeded Eddie Mayehoff on July 1 as the general.

The Cliff Gordon of the UFOs

Any one of these couldn't flop with the part, but not since Cliff Gordon has there been a double talker quite like Mayehoff. Any visitor from Elsewhere would have been amazed and delighted to think that idiocy could produce such a shining example as General Powers of the Pentagonians, a strange race holed up in the Pentagon and wearing fright-wigs to give authenticity to their fearful communiques.

The question could be asked, Will Success Spoil George Axelrod? He and Clinton Wilder present "Small Planet." With "The Seven Year Itch," "Rock Hunter" and now "Small Planet" behind him, Axelrod certainly will have to be watched before he zooms into the blue and begins setting up a Broadway along the Main Stem of whatever planet the charming and well-dressed Kreton character came from.

Axelrod caught "Planet" on the Goodyear Playhouse program and leaped to option Gore Vidal's script, saying he would quit writing himself and turn producer if Vidal would expand his comedy to a full-length stage play. When Vidal said he could and would Axelrod signed Ritchard to direct and star in the play version.

But that wasn't the end of the problem. No theatre was available for that kind of play in 1955, so the whole project was shelved to the season which has just closed. Ritchard filled in the time staging for the Metropolitan Opera "Tales of Hoffmann" and the little known Offenbach opera comique, "La Perichole," in which he sang, danced and acted a leading comedy role.

Although Axelrod felt he had a hit in "Small Planet," actually there was little grounds for this opulence as science-fiction had long been held suspect by Broadway audiences. In fact, it well be remembered that Arch Oboler's 'Night of the Auk," produced by the otherwise sapient Kermit Bloomgarden, fell flat on its face at its opening, stumbled along for five performances and went to Campbell's funeral parlor for a suitable burial in prosed-poetry. This one had an impressive cast—Wendell Corey, Claude Rains and Christopher Plummer being its stars. But the audience wouldn't buy it. Its saucer was too heavy to get off the ground.

When "Planet" received a mild reception out of town, the backers were fearful that theirs would be going the way of all auks. They felt they had an audience show, but didn't feel they had enough dough to hold on if the critics tossed in a flock of dissenting opinions. What happened was quite the opposite. The show got all-favorable notices, being one of the rare occasions in a long time when the critics turned in a unanimous decision.

Axelrod and Wilder hardly expected this. But the advance sale was so meagre that if critical praise had not been such a landslide in favor of the play, the visitor from outer space would have been on his way home within two nights of the plays' opening.

Vidal Wakes 'Em Up

But fortunately for those who play longshots, the sleeper was a sellout on its second performance, though not a seat had been sold for it in advance. It now looks sure to run a solid year, the term for which Ritchard had been signed.

Meanwhile, George Axelrod has gone to Hollywood to write a script for Hecht-Lancaster and Clinton Wilder is working on a London production starring Robert Morley for next fall.

Gore Vidal, the author of this interplanetary success, is a grandson of the late Senator Gore, the blind senator from Oklahoma. His father was Eugene L. Vidal, a West Pointer before he directed the Bureau of Air Commerce and founded Northeast Air Lines.

Now 32, this is Gore Vidal's first play but he has been writing since he was 20. He has published eight novels, sold a gross of television plays and adaptations and even did the film version of Paddy Chayefsky's "The Catered Affair."

After that he wrote the script for "I Accuse," the story of the Dreyfus case, in which Jose Ferrer is starring and directing, and "The Death of Billy The Kid," starring Paul Newman. Like "Planet," "Billy The Kid" is an expansion of one of Vidal's tv shows.

Though there have been many attempts to blow down the saucerian inquiry, the subject seems to hold interest and, like girls, is here to stay. "Behind The Flying Saucers," which I wrote eight years ago, is still selling and a host of latterday personal historians are doing quite well in explaining that the mystery is no mystery.

The day we arrived in Norway the papers were carrying a story of a flying saucer seen by six persons in Lodingen. They observed the presumably unidentifiable object for 90 seconds.

Unlike the Americans, European editors seem to print these tidbits with no comment or snide remarks. Our news services have begun dropping them off since Stronthium 90 began crowding UFOs for newspaper space, but the objects are around in numbers and even the scoffing Pentagonians (on retiring from active service) seem to join the believers, especially if there's money in it. But none of them will make as much as Vidal, and they don't deserve to, for they lack humor and charm, both of which "Visit To Small Planet" has plenty of.

"Teahouse of August Moon" (M-G) packed them in at the Corso. It looks like one of the top U. S. pix at the b. o. here this season.

Contest arranged by Radio Freies Berlin (Free Berlin) for the best short feature about Berlin was won by a Swiss, Dr. Robert Garbade.

Schauspielhaus preparing world-preem of a play, "The Immortal One," by Jean-Pierre Giraudoux, son of the late Jean Giraudoux.

The Zurich tv station will telecast a live opera for the first time. It will be Puccini's one-acter "Gianni Schicchi," and direct from the Stadttheatre here.

Theatre am Central's last offering of the 1956-57 season, which was almost exclusively devoted to Anglo-U. S. authors, again is a Yank play, Avery Hopwood's farce "The Model Husband."

OBITUARIES

JUDY TYLER
GREGORY LAFAYETTE

Judy Tyler, 24, and her husband, Gregory Lafayette, 19, were killed July 3 near Billy the Kid, Wyo., when their car, driven by Lafayette, swerved onto the opposite side of the road to avert hitting a car that suddenly came out from a roadside shop.

Details in Legit. Both were players.

ART VAN HARVEY

Art Van Harvey, 73, longtime radio and tv actor, died July 7 in Chicago. Van Harvey, whose real name was Arthur H. Van Berschot, was best known as "Vic" of the old "Vic and Sade" series on NBC radio, which ran from 1932 to 1944.

Van Harvey started in vaudeville at the age of 24 as the first member of an act billed as "Mike and Olney." In the 1920's he began performing on radio as a mimic until he landed the part of Victor Rodney Gook, the drawling accountant on "Vic and Sade." The show was revived on television last January for the Chicago area on WNBQ, but lasted only a couple of months.

He was also familiar to daytime tv audiences as Calvin Sperry, the pharmacist, on the NBC-TV soaper, "Hawkins Falls," running from 1951 to 1954. He had had a heart condition for a number of years.

Surviving are his wife, a sister and brother.

KURT SCHULZ

Kurt Schulz, 44, co-founder and co-owner of Berolina-Film, died June 27 in Berlin from a liver ailment. Schulz started as an assistant projectionist 30 years ago, worked then in a printing plant and became newsreel cameraman. He made his first feature film in 1937.

He and Kurt Ulrich formed Berolina-Film in 1948 which soon became one of this country's top producing outfits.

Schulz always remained a cameraman and has lensed nearly all Berolina pix. The fact that one of Berolina's bosses was active in the studio all day long was thought to be one of the reasons why Berolina could register so many unuusual financial successes.

AL SHAW

Al Shaw, 63, longtime member of the vet vaude and musical comedy team of Shaw & Lee, died of a heart ailment at St. Joseph's Hospital, Burbank, Cal., July 7. Shaw was the first patient admitted to the hospital under a recently instituted agreement with the American Guild of Variety Artists.

The team played all the top vaudeville houses in the U.S. and toured Europe for many years. They headlined the Palace, N. Y., on several occasions and were featured in George White's "Scandals," among other shows. The song and comedy duo featured simultaneous patter and parodies.

CBS Engineers

Local 1212, which poses an embarrassing intra-union situation insofar as picketing is concerned. So when the recording engineers threw the picket line in front of 485 Madison Ave., the engineers working at CBS Radio master control, located on the 23d floor of 485 Madison, moved in cots and haven't been leaving the building. Picket line covers the entrance to Colbee's Restaurant on 52d St., since that provides a side entrance to the 485 building. But the engineers have been eating in Colbee's, since they don't have to cross the picket line.

Thus far, the master control engineers are the only broadcast personnel affected by the picket line, since that's been restricted to the 485 building. In the event the line were extended across the street to the CBS studio building on 52d St., the studio engineers would probably have to bed down as well. Similarly, if pickets were thrown around CBS-TV's various studios and theatres, engineers, cameramen, boom men and other technical personnel would have to live within the buildings in order to avoid crossing a picket line set up by their own union.

Wagner's Grandsons

Picasso style, and substituted a tree in Nurenberg's famed park by using a huge suspension balloon, Nurenberg traditionalists screamed outrage — and some of the fund-supplying members of the Society of Friends of Bayreuth withdrew. This year no advance rumblings have come out to indicate that the classicists will be so deeply offended by the new production of "Tristan," and he'll probably die a quiet, effective death.

The 81st Bayreuth Wagner Fest will run through August 25, with 27 performances of seven operas by the old German master. Astrid Varnay, George London, Ramon Vinay, Herman Uhde and Jean Maderia are among the warblers, and Hans Knappertsbusch, Andre Cluytens and Wolfgang Sawallisch share the batons that swing over the 80-member chorus and 169-player orchestra.

With tickets for a single performance ranging from an expensive $5.95 upward to $10.90, the event has been entirely sold out from the start of this year. 50,000 visitors are due to crowd in, and the gate should tote up to around $275,000.

But even with this tidy take, the Society of Friends of Bayreuth has to come in with the extra pay to make this event break even. Cost of the unusual and new production effects, pay for the chorus (who are selected from the best soloists in the various city opera houses throughout Germany) and pay for the singing stars who get about $250 a performance, brings the expenses up higher than the gate every year.

Enjoying the show in the 1,800-seat theatre that Richard Wagner himself designed to give the perfect accoustics for the music will be an audience that is predominately foreign — over half of the visitors generally come from France, about ten percent of the audience is American, and about one percent trickles in from under the Iron Curtain, music lovers from Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Romania, Poland, Russia.

Also studding the formal evening attired audience will be top stage directors from all over the world, who come annually to see what new tricks of lighting and staging they can learn from the Wagner pair.

Bayreuth is 20 minutes by car from the Russian-controlled East German border.

David Kogen, a young accountant friend, to organize Cameo Productions and set out to make a feature film.

How does one make a picture for $6,000? As explained by Weiss and Chambers, who are both in their early 30's, it isn't easy but it can be done with youthful exuberance plus an ability not to take "no" for an answer. For one thing, everybody involved in the picture, including the 17 featured players, the extras, the cameramen, the make-shift technicians, etc., are all on a deferment of wages. Except for film raw stock and several other necessities, not a single cent was paid out to any of the participants. For example, an extra, who would normally receive $70 a day under Screen Actors Guild rules, was given stock in the company equal to his or her employment fee. The same system was followed with players and others.

The company frankly bypassed the craft and-talent unions. According to Chambers, who served as director and co-producer, a satisfactory agreement, however, has been worked out with the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage Employees. He added that the company would negotiate with SAG when the picture is ready for release, but that it expected no difficulty with the union.

In addition to the use of "free" talent and technicians, Weiss' ability as a promoter represented an important asset. He promoted the use of the apartments of Greenwich Village friends for interiors and obtained the cooperation of various New York City departments for the use of a four-car subway train, fire boats, the Brooklyn Bridge, and police to hold back the crowds during street shooting in the Village. He was also able to promote various facilities from a number of business corporations.

The film, based on an original script by Lee Gillen, was shot in 20 days. The first work print has been completed and the pair are occupied with the editing and scoring. Even the processing of the film was done by DeLuxe Laboratories on a deferred basis. No release deal has been arranged as yet.

film tag—"the nation's first Negro matinee idol."

He added:

"They call me the 'King of Calypso,' the man who almost bumped off Elvis Presley at the juke box... I was catapulted out of drama school into a series of compromises like these pictures. And into monstrous competition among performers. And into a vicious scramble for tv ratings—stupid IBM tallies.

"I hate Madison Ave. and Hollywood and the cliches of American culture, which is efficient in form but makes content secondary."

More gratifying, probably, is the $60,000 to $80,000 gross his present show—12-man chorus, two guitarists, half-dozen key musicians and technicians—figures to take in seven performances at the 3,300-seat San Francisco Opera House.

Helen O'Connell Show

With a minimum of props, and a naked stage standing unashamed with all its technical devices showing, the "Helen O'Connell Show" provided a quarter-hour of fast-moving top-drawer entertainment. Of course when you start with a lovely gal who has talent-plus, you can't miss.

Miss O'Connell as emsee and star proved once again that you don't have to make with the big productions to turn out fast-moving, highly-entertaining musical fare.
Charlotte Summers.

THE HOLLYWOOD REPORTER

"The dimpled, diminutive Helen O'Connell was plumped into an honest backstage setting utilizing the simplest of props which she, for the most part, handled herself. The resulting informality made for no strain and pleasant viewing. In a formal, decollete gown, Helen's charm was emphasized ever more by her offbeat surroundings, giving her a sort of Alice in Wonderland quality. Helen never looked cuter, never sang better." —Hank Grant.

HAYLOFTS' HYBRID HEADLINERS

Critics Disagree on B.O. Influence, Stress Truth, Freedom, Fairness

Accuracy, independence and fairness. Those seem to be the three prime objectives of a drama critic, according to the answers to VARIETY's annual poll of the New York first-string reviewers on their estimate of the Broadway season and of the theatre as a whole.

"To tell the truth as he understands it," is the way Brooks Atkinson, of the Times, sums up a critic's function. As to the desirability of being "right," or "tough" or "charitable," he says, "I have not objections to kindness when it is not at the expense of truth."

The Times aisle-sitter doesn't specifically reply whether the critics can help the theatre and, if so how. "They can't help it by lying," is his only comment. On the question of the boxoffice effect of criticism, specifically as to whether any serious plays have in recent seasons have survived adverse notices, he counters, "Can you name any serious plays that have been saved by good reviews? I'm sure reviews have some influence, but I'm equally sure that no one knows what it is."

Ought to Guide

Richard Cooke, of the Wall Street Journal, reasons that "a critic should try to tell his reader whether the play is worth seeing, not ride his own hobby horse." He thinks critics can help the theatre "by being good critics."

Tom Dash, of Women's Wear Daily, disagrees as to the impact of reviews on boxoffice. "Hardly a play that opened on a Monday or Tuesday night to unanimous

'Agents Priced Their Acts and Hotel Pierre's Policy Out of Business'

Blaming agents and the seminames who formerly made the Hotel Pierre's Cotillion Room an important Gotham showcase for "pricing themselves and the room's original talent policy out of business," it is going into a "super-Chez Vito" policy. Meaning 25 fiddles and two or three medium-priced ($300-$400) strolling singers for the al fresco musicomedy, light opera and operatic excerpts. In actuality this is the Monseigneur-Casanova-Shehe-razade-Dinerzade (Paris) policy, with beaucoup romantic fiddlers to alternate with the dining-dancing.

Stanley Melba, artistic director of the Hotel Pierre, would retain his No. 1 dance band, with Joseph Sudy probably continuing to helm it, but the continuous dansapation policy with Alan Logan's waltz-Latino band would be eliminated. And, in theory that 25 violinists would come to around $2,500, as against the $3,000-$4,000 names, which sometimes have not panned out boxoffice-wise, it is figured that

Aluminum & Glass Tested for Scenery

Lenox, Mass., July 16.

Inauguration Monday (15) by the Opera Dept. of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., of a workshop for stage directors, designers and conductors is designed not only to foster leadership training, but also to develop an entirely new kind of lightweight scenery which will "revolutionize opera and the whole theatrical world."

Director Boris Goldovsky has cooperation of Alcoa and Owens-Corning, whose aluminum and fiberglass products will be extensively used in the experiments. Fabricated from light metals, plastics, dacron and other new industrial products, the scenery will be easily transported, quickly assembled and dismantled, imperyious to weather.

PLAY POETS, PUGS, PIPERS, PEELERS

By JESSE GROSS

Summer stock has become a show business melting pot. The perennial strawhat stampede of name talent from all entertainment media is running the gamut this year from poets to pugilists and from bistro singers to burlesque strippers.

Sandwiched in between these specialty performers is the usual flock of actor refugees from Broadway legit, pictures and television. In most cases they're touring the summer theatre circuit in packages, which are continuing to dominate the production schedules of several major barns.

In effect, the package boom is reducing the number of do-it-yourself strawhat producers. The barn operator using ready-made offerings is actually functioning as a theatre manager who books shows rather than mounts them.

This, however, applies only to the larger spots that can afford the star packages and are buying them. The bulk of the professional barns still put on their own productions with a resident company and sometimes a guest star.

As usual, the conglomoration of talent hitting the rustic trail adds up to a casting field day for the package producers and barn impresarios. That's probably best illustrated by the femmes lined up for at least five different productions of "Will Success Spoil Rock Hunter."

Those applying their dimensions to the role originated on Broadway by Jayne Mansfield include film actress Marilyn Maxwell, film-television actress Marie Wilson, tv actress Roxanne, pop songstress Eileen Barton, who's principally a recording artist and nitery per-

New Inflationary Spiral Due for TV As Battle for Guest Stars Looms

By JACK HELLMAN

Hollywood, July 16.

A price war that will rock the financial structure of television and skyrocket budgets out of all proportion to past spending is rumbling ominously in the talent marts as battle lines are being drawn for next season's donnybrook in the rat(e) race. The guest will be king and around him revolves the fight for his favor at prices that will send "ceilings" crashing down on the heads of those who will attempt to hold the line against inflated fees for guestars.

Upwards of 50 network shows, now that ABC will be in the thick of it, are booking talent well ahead to skim the cream in the fiercest battle for occasional star appearances of any previous season. The webs and packagers have established pay ceilings which they insist must hold if the medium is to survive the reckless spending. Talent agents are just as positive that imposition of ceilings is just wishful thinking, what with the demand far exceeding the supply (some agents claim there aren't more than two dozen "hot" guestars) and the bidding to get out of all reasonable hand.

40G Sinatra Shot Still Tops

While prices will soar to record heights it is not believed that Frank Sinatra's $40,000 guest fee last season with Dinah Shore will be approximated. Dinah's top next season will be $12,500, with $7,500 for secondary guests and $5,000 for third-raters. Said NBC's talent head in Hollywood, Hal Kemp,

Plenty Legion 'B's For Top Pix Crop

Though the National Catholic Legion of Decency last year found fewer objectionable films, a large majority of Hollwood's big important releases still find themselves tagged with a "B" (Objectionable in Part for All) rating.

What balance out the picture are, to a large extent, the smaller films in which the emphasis is more on action than sex. With the exception of "Baby Doll" there hasn't been a Legion-condemned film for considerable time.

The preponderance of "B" ratings among the important, big-budget releases raises the question of the real impact of the "B" classification on theatres and the general audience. General impression is that they have little meaning outside a comparatively small Catholic group that takes the Legion ratings so seriously and is strictly guided by them.

Company executives discussing the Legion ratings on films with controversial or "daring" themes

Camp Shows' Honorable Discharge

By JOE COHEN

After 16 years, Camp Shows has been given its separation paper by the Dept. of Defense. The show biz branch which serviced the Armed Forces through two wars will be disbanded on Nov. 2 when the final unit returns to the U.S., and will be liquidated as of Dec. 31 of this year.

The step was taken as a result of a decision by its parent organization, United Service Organizations, to withdraw funds from its live entertainment arm. It was originally believed that when this was done, Camp Shows would break away from USO, raise its own funds and continue to service troops on its own. Thinking at the Pentagon was in favor of USO continuing its identity and performing the same function. However, after kicking it around in Washington, the brass decided to go along with USO.

CS Refuses Bid

Earlier in the year, USO told Camp Shows that it would want the organization to remain as a cadre to process volunteer shows only, and money already allocated to CS would go to build more USO units. Camp Shows refused to go along on that basis, especially since the Dept. of Defense stated that it would require entertainment units in the Pacific, Far East, North Africa and European Theatres requiring a budget of $1,250,000. With the USO refusing to budge from its original position, the board voted to disband unless it could proceed in accordance with Armed Services requirements.

Hereafter, all entertainment reaching the Armed Forces, no matter where located, will come from the military's own special service branches and volunteer units which will serve sans pay.

Camp Shows involved the entire entertainment industry. Agencies served as advisors and union reps were numbered among its backers. Camp Shows derived its funds from USO, which, in turn, was supported by Community Chest campaigns. Camp Shows was prepared to campaign for coin on its own and would have set up its own fund-raising organization which would involve the entire show biz world, when the Pentagon decided against the plan, despite the glowing recommendations from many in the field as to the value of Camp Shows, both in peace and in war.

CS was started pre-Pearl Harbor as The Friends of the Soldiers,

Barbara Hall Finds 64G Prowess Springboard To Television Drama Career

For a young actress looking to break into television, there seems no better way than to become a contestant on a television quiz show. At, least, that's what Barbara Hall, currently a "$64,000 Question" winner, has discovered.

As a result of her appearances on the show, as an expert on Shakespeare, she's been booked for her drama bow Sunday (21) on the Ed Sullivan show (she'll do a scene from "Cavalcade"), is set for "U.S. Steel Hour" July 31, and will appear on "The Last Word" on Aug. 4, in the latter spot as a panelist. She was on $64,000 Question" again last night (Tues.) in an effort to double her 64G stake.

Miss Hall was in summer stock a couple of years ago when she was discovered by agent Grace Lyons. Acting roles were few and far between, so Miss Hall worked parttime as a restaurant hostess, then got a job in the line at the Copacabana. From there she

Sept. 23 Champ Fight to 93 Cities; Special Trade Attention Because Of Pending Home-Toll Disputes

Decision of the International Boxing Club to close-circuit theatre televise the Ray Robinson-Carmen Basilio middleweight championship bout takes on added significance in light of the current controversy relating to home-toll television. This type of boxoffice tv is actually the only experience with a wired form of pay television.

The telecast, originating from the Yankee Stadium, N.Y. on Sept. 23, will be handled by Nate Halpern's Theatre Network Television, which has operated all of the IBC's closed-tv bouts. Although there have been 15 previous fights seen on a theatre network system, the upcoming sports attraction, it's believed, will be eyed carefully by government observers and pro and anti toll-tv advocates. Since this method of transmission is via telephone wires direct to theatres, no approval from the Federal Communications Commission has been necessary. Several years ago theatre interests, which had honed that theatre tv would develop into an important income source, sought separate tv air channels facilities from the Government, but were turned down on the ground that the present facilities of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. were adequate.

The Robinson-Basilio bout will be

Greeks Shoot Bankroll For Callas Concerts And U.S. Legit Performance

By IRENE VELISSARIUN

Athen, July 16.

Following the path of many another European country in enticing tourists via the come-on of entertainment, Greece's Drama and Music Festivals, both, wax more prestigeful. Due here is a band of American actors who will take the leads in "Prometheus Bound." Players are aboard the Greek vessel "Queen Fredericka" of the Home Lines, their passage deadheaded as part of the cooperation between the Greek Government here, its Embassy in Washington and the U. S. State Dept. operating through its talent-placement adjunct, American National Theatre & Academy.

"Prometheus" was actually promoted by American producer James Elliott, who some years back was Broadway's "boy producer." He is now in Athens but his production will be subject to the artistic supervision of Clarence Derwent, former president of Actors Equity Assn. in N. Y. and a classically-trained actor out of England's repertory.

American party which includes Blanche Yurka will travel to Greece for a single performance,

John Gilbert's Son In Wildwood Show

Wildwood, N. J., July 16.

A heaping dish of nostalgia is being served up to patrons of Lou Booth's Chateau Monterey this summer. One of the stars of an original musical comedy production, "Hit the Jackpot," is John L. Gilbert, son of the late silent film star.

Gilbert is a comedian and singer.

Lou Costello to Stay In Show Biz as Team of A&C Calls It Quits

Hollywood, July 16.

One of the major show biz partnerships, Bud Abbott & Lou Costello, is now officially over. What had been a few dates as a single for Costello, while his partner was taking it easy, was really the forerunner of a permanent schism. Abbott, now past 60, will take it easy and devote himself to his stable of horses, while Costello, about 10 years his junior, will still be around the entertainment circuits.

The parting was amicable, there being no arguments of late to precipitate the parting. There was a period, just after the war, when both were feuding even as the pair were doing a tour of arenas and vaude houses for benefit of the Lou Costello Jr. Foundation, founded in memory of his late son. The pair held press-conferences at which

GERSHWIN SONG SALES RULED A CAPITAL GAIN

Washington, July 16.

The sale of several Gershwin song properties to motion pictures is rated as a sale of property, subject to capital gains tax, not as ordinary income, the U. S. Court of Claims has ruled.

The suit, on appeal from the Internal Revenue Service, was taken to the Federal court by Ira Gershwin and the other executors of his mother's estate.

In 1945, Mrs. Gershwin sold film rights to her share of several unpublished George & Ira Gershwin songs for $150,000. She had inherited the interest of her son, the late George Gershwin. Government officials taxed this as ordinary income which was paid on that basis.

The Gershwin executors sued to recover $36,666 of the taxes. The Court of Claims did not specify the amount to be recovered, leaving this for later determination.

FREEDLEY TO LONDON

N.Y. Theatre Curator Now In Royal Society

George Freedley, newly elected fellow of the Royal Society of Arts of London, flew to London this week-end to attend as a delegate the second International Conference on Theatre History and to report on progress on the World Theatre Microfilm Project.

The meeting is the first full-scale session of the newly founded International Federation for Theatre Research which grew out of the first conference held in London in 1955.

Freedley's post as Curator of the Theatre Collection of the N.Y. Public Library long ago exposed him to the inevitability of microfilm for the preservation of memoribilia and also as a practical means for preserving books, periodicals, manuscripts and the like which are frequently researched. Among the most referred to publications, in the main branch of the N.Y. Public Library at 5th Ave. and 42nd St., which houses the Theatre Collection, are the bound files of VARIETY. These have been long since microfilmed, and several volumes of the same years are frequently in constant reference use, hence Freedley's decision for microfilming multiple copies of the back files. Researchers seem to lean heaviest on VARIETY for data concerning the 1920s, when vaudeville was in its twilight stage and the picture business boomed, capped by the advent of sound-films.

London Hipp To Become a Cafe

London, July 16.

London Hippodrome, currently housing a vaudeville season, is due to be remodelled at the cost of over $400,000, and will reopen as a super nitery. It will continue as a Val Parnell operation.

As far as can be anticipated, it will be redeveloped on lines similar to the pre-war London Casino, which staged elaborate entertainments in a theatre atmosphere, with extensive dance space.

Approval for the rebuilding was given last week by the Westminster Licensing Justices, who were told there would be two shows nightly, each running for about one-and-a-half hours. The gallery, circle and the present stage were to be removed and another ceiling was to be built below the level of the present one. The conversion involved the building of a new stage and a dance floor, which would be surrounded by dining tables.

The current vaude bill at the Hippodrome, headlined by Lonnie Donegan and Alma Cogan, will be replaced next Monday (22) when Shirley Bassey tops the bill.

SINATRA OFF THE HOOK IN NEVADA ON TAXES

Las Vegas, July 16.

A $109,997 income tax lien which has tied up the Nevada holdings of Frank Sinatra for the past four years was lifted last week in the Clark County Recorder's office by direction of an eastern revenue agent.

The lien, when filed, stated that Sinatra owed taxes for 1946, 1947, 1948 and 1951, and tied up his local holdings—the most valuable of which has been 2% of the Sands Hotel. Sinatra is now free to dispose of any Nevada property.

DELAY ON KITT BIOPIC

Actress Not Free To Appear In Own Life Story

Hollywood, July 16.

Eartha Kitt's "Thursday's Child" biopic has been postponed until next spring because of the pressure of other commitments. Film had been slated for fall lensing by Lloyd Young and Associates with interiors to be lensed in London and exteriors on-location in North Carolina, New York and Paris.

Miss Kitt is set for a season of strawhat stints to be followed by the W. C. Handy biopic and saloon dates thereafter and will not be available for "Child" for some time.

Good at Dishing It Out?

Television is taking quite a ribbing from Hollywood.

Several pictures in recent months have been poking fun at the rival medium, using it almost as a "prop" for comedy scenes. Very rarely is tv given a straight pitch as an important medium of communications.

TV industry apparently isn't bothered by the potshots taken at it in the films. That's in sharp contrast to the much greater sensitivity shown by motion picture execs in earlier days, when tv shows lampooned the movies.

One notable instance involved a Martin & Lewis show in which Jerry Lewis had a crack about empty theatres. This cued an incensed letter of protest to the network from Arthur L. Mayer, then operating head of COMPO.

Two theatrical releases giving tv a rough going-over include "Face in the Crowd" and the upcoming "Affair to Remember." Elia Kazan, directing "Face," took off on tv generally and tv commercials particularly. In "Affair," Robert Q. Lewis has a bit as a none-too-bright tv announcer interviewing Cary Grant. Paramount's "Loving You" also has a lengthy tv sequence that's not kind to the medium, though it doesn't lampoon it as does, for instance, "Face in the Crowd."

In many other films, tv shows and advertising people concerned with creating them come in for brief attention. It's rarely favorable.

Germany's Hot Summer Legit Biz In Castles, Cloisters & Courtyards

By HAZEL GUILD

Frankfurt, July 16.

With very little air conditioning indoors, with most of the city legit theatres having closed their doors for the hot months, with film receipts down as the thermometer soars, still the stage is flourishing in Germany, and for an excellent reason.

Every summer, German theatre goes to the outdoors, and the ancient castles, city courtyards, ruins of famed houses, sights that the tourists are too warm to enjoy in the daytime, are turned into outdoor theaters at night —and the playgoer can choose a castle courtyard or a meadow in the woods for his theater seat.

Most large German cities run the summer theatre just for weekend eves, although in some hardy communities the plays are done nightly until the end of September, with a usual start in July.

Several hundred temporary campchairs are set up, and it's usually theater-in-the-square instead of theater-in-the-round, with the audience on three sides facing a regular rectangular stage of wood or just plain earth, and with perhaps a simple painted backdrop, or just a natural wall of trees and bushes.

Performances generally begin at 9, to make sure of darkness. U.S. servicemen stationed in Germany and foreign tourists dot the audience, and if the box office take is unequal to paying for actors and costumes, the city usually underwrites the performances.

Top roles are generally performed by well known German stage and screen actors, the most popular being recruited from the standout theaters in Duesseldorf, Berlin, Munich and Hamburg as summer guests. These legiters settle for a small salary in return for summer employment, an outside

Protestant Defends Priest-Panned 'Tattoo'

Hartford, July 16.

In a sermon to his congregation Sunday (14), the minister of the First Congregational Church in Litchfield, in upstate Connecticut, strongly defended "Rose Tattoo." Play had been cited by a Catholic pastor there as a reason for the faithful to shun the Litchfield Summer Theatre.

While defending "Tattoo," Rev. Donald W. Morgan took a hefty swipe at the film "10 Commandments" for making people less prepared for genuine religious experience. The film, he said, "for sheer sex and sensuality" beats "Tattoo" by a mile. Latter "leaves something for the imagination. DeMille spectacle leaves nothing."

As to the Tennessee Williams play, "If Protestant leaders remain silent, the impression wrongly created is that all Christians are agreed that this play is morally and spiritually dangerous." The clergyman dissented from the recent stand of Father Lawrence E. Skelly.

BUNCH BIGGIES, B.O. BACKFIRES

'Look, I'm a Valentine!'

Chicago man bedecked himself with $28 worth of stamps and walked into the Post Office with blocked letters sewn on his shirt identifying himself as a mailing piece to be sent to Sophia Loren.

The mail clerk was befuddled, but then came the manager, who recognized the gimmick, and instructed, "Call the cops."

The pressagent, who had been waiting in the wings, whisked the stooge off to safety.

Up Abe Schneider at Columbia, Rube Jackter as Gen. Sales Mgr.

Major realignment of Columbia execs has been set by president and studio chief Harry Cohn in the wake of the death nearly a year ago of his brother, Col co-founder and exec v.p. Jack Cohn.

Abe Schneider, whose appointment as 1st v.p.-treasurer was ratified by stockholders last November, is now the top fiscal officer.

Abe Montague, v.p. and general sales manager, now takes the post of v.p. in charge of distribution. This means Montague will have a stronger voice in administrative matters, in addition to running the distribution organization.

Major appointment is that of Rube Jackter to the post of general sales manager, in which capacity Montague has functioned the past 25 years.

Other promotions also are due to take place concurrent with the new upper-echelon assignments.

It was specifically stated that Schneider is taking over the duties of Jack Cohn, which in effect makes him No. One man in New York, while Montague will give increased time to policy and management.

Leo Jaffe, v.p., has been given title and duties of treasurer, Louis J. Barbano, v.p., adds the duties of chairman of the finance committee of the international department to his present position as financial adviser to the Col parent.

Paul N. Lazarus Jr., v.p., has been given supervision over all publicity activities of the entire worldwide organization.

Mull How Nasty A Nazi Brando Is In 'The Young Lions'

Paris, July 16.

"The Young Lions," intended for 20th-Fox, will have some six weeks of location in and around Paris, another week in Germany and then wind-up in Hollywood. Edward Dymtryk is directing from Irwin Shaw novel as screenplayed by Edward Anhalt. Players are Marlon Brando, Montgomery Clift and Dean Martin.

Tale concerns the pre-war life of a young Nazi, played by Brando, an American Jewish boy, Clift, and a skirtchasing singer, Martin, and the mingling of their destinies during the war.

Nazi character has been changed somewhat. In the book, he became a Nazi out of ideology, remained one and grew bitter and cruel along with the real ones. In the film he is more of an idealist who is disillusioned by the Nazi horrors and is inadvertently killed at the end.

Two endings are being discussed. One having the Nazi completely sickened by his first look at a concentration camp, going off into the woods where he runs into the two Americans. His first impulse is to shoot but he has had enough of killing and fires into the air and is killed by their reflex action. Other ending would have Brando trying to surrender only to be killed by a triggerhappy, ruthless American type, a counterpart of a Nazi type in the film who had done the same thing with other allied soldiers.

Pic looks to be a three hour affair and is in black and white and CinemaScope.

HUCKSTERS VS. HEALTH; FILM HITS NICOTINE

Hollywood, July 16.

Cigaret controversy will be the subject of the fourth film producer-director Andrew Stone will make at Metro.

Stone is a strong believer that nicotine is harmful to humans. He's prepping a fiction yarn on a scientist's battles with tobacco firms and ad agencies as a result of his anti-nicotine research findings. It will mark the first time that the raging controversy, which has occupied an increasing amount of public attention in recent years, has been the subject of a film.

Stone currently is prepping "Cry Terror" at Metro and is slated to do "Guided Missile" and "Infamy at Sea."

British Academy's Delayed Awards

London, July 16.

British Film Academy Awards (for 1956) were presented Thursday (11) at the Odeon in Leicester Square, having been postponed three months because of the gas rationing due to the Egyptian situation. Ceremonies preceded premiere unreeling of Rank's new "Miracle In Soho" starring John Gregson and Belinda Lee.

Awards were as follows:

Best British Screenplay: Nigel Balchin's "The Man That Never Was."

Best British Actor: Peter Finch, "A Town Like Alice."

Best British Actress: Virginia McKenna, same film.

Best Foreign Actor: Francois Perier, "Gervaise."

Best Foreign Actress: Anna Magnani, "The Rose Tattoo" (Par).

Most Promising Newcomer: Eli Wallach, "Baby Doll" (WB).

ZANUCK C'SCOPE 55ER TO BE 'DELUXE TOUR'

The 20th-Fox brass and producer Darryl F. Zanuck last week had their first look at a theatre showing of CinemaScope 55, projected from "The King and I" in C'Scope 55.

Several CinemaScope 55 pictures have been made, but they were always reduced to normal 35m CinemaScope and projected that way.

Now, 20th will make Frederic Wakeman's "Deluxe Tour" in the widegauge method, with Zanuck producing. It'll be shown in selected houses via a widegauge print. Result, if not necessarily a larger picture, at least will be a sharper one. It's claimed further that the process provides greater audience participation.

Zanuck expects to put "Deluxe Tour" into production immediately, using locations throughout the world.

1957 MAY TEACH BIZ NEW LESSONS

How goes the summer boxoffice battle? First reaction in Manhattan film sales headquarters amounts to this: 1957 may be teaching some new lessons. Producer experience may, for once, be coinciding with exhibitor warnings against "bunching" of product.

Picture business may have too much of a good thing at the public and as a result productions which ordinarily would click—judged by the conventional standards—are faltering. Specifically, at this usual better-business turning point on the calendar for Hollywood, the various producer-distributors, hoping to reel in the big money, sent to market so many top releases that the public just couldn't support them all. The competitive sweepstakes became so keen that only the best are cleaning up. The moderately good "A" entry, as distinguished from the "B" and the "nervous 'A'" is finding that the traditional easy picking of mid summer vanished this year.

Opinion Divided

New York homeoffice execs varied in their size-ups of business conditions at the moment in accordance with the boxoffice experience of pictures each was handling. Those with product that has been missing out since July 4th say, in effect, "we must adjust our thinking, all pictures are off, the seasonal upswing is nothing more than a myth."

But Independence Day is still the time the public begins to liberate its money for Hollywood's wares, according to those fortunate enough to have benefitted from the liberalization.

Between these two extremes are the majority—those who frankly concede (however, privately) that the "good" picture suffers when it's vying with the "blockbuster" for the ticket-buyer's dollar.

Too Much of a Muchness

This, of course, brings up the inevitable question mark about the unlikely situation wherein there are too many "good" pictures. The answer, according to some film men, is that the big-money downtown areas are supported to large extent by tourists—the city dwellers go to the country and the coun-

Todd Jr. Sees Recoup of Costs From U. S. Roadshows of '80 Days'; 45 by Sept. 1, 65 Units Ultimately

Mike Todd will more than recoup his investment in "Around the World in 80 Days" from the film's American roadshow engagements alone, according to Mike Todd Jr., general manager of Michael Todd Inc.

Picture is generally thought to have cost around $6,000,000. Adding in prints, advertising, distribution and other expenses, that would mean a break-even point of around $9,000,000 to $10,000,000. Todd said he expected 45 roadshows running by the end of August, with the eventual total hitting "no more than 65."

Todd noted that exhibitors were being given the choice of running the Todd-AO version, or a printdown version of "80 Days." Former is of course more expensive to play since it requires the installation of new equipment.

Todd emphasized the impressive staying power of "80 Days" in most situations. Many houses are playing to capacity. Others are actually grossing over and above their first weeks' take. It's playing to advanced admissions everywhere. "No one in this country will see '80 Days' for less than $2 a head for a long time. We are making this an event. I think people actually would rather pay more, and get good entertainment and good service."

There won't be a single "80 Days" engagement in the Todd-AO process abroad. One was originally planned for London, but the deal for Todd to acquire the Palace Theatre fell through. Current showing is a 35m printdown. Installation of the wide-gauge equipment elsewhere on the Continent wouldn't be economical.

One of the best "80 Days" engagements is at the Coronet, San Francisco, where the 27th week was the highest non-holiday week chalked up by the picture. Only other week to beat it was at New Year's. At the Blue Mouse, Seattle, the b.o. hasn't varied more than 10% since the picture opened. At the Uptown, Washington nabe the 13th week (over July 4) was $23,-

ROGER LEWIS ASKS OUT OF MPPA AD-PUB JOB

Roger Lewis notified his confreres at the Motion Picture Assn. of America this week that he wants to resign as chairman of the MPAA's ad-pub committee. Term of office was supposed to have been six months, he has served nine, and now feels that the job interferes with his work as ad-pub director of United Artists.

Lewis also pointed out that the industry's business-building program is now ready to roll, with all the organizational work gotten out of the way and his successor in the MPAA post will thus be free of this burden. Exec put in many man-hours on this project. Another factor behind his desire to bow out is that the job of MPAA ad-pub coordinator is now filled; Oscar A. Doob was appointed to it last week.

In directing the affairs of the MPAA ad-pub unit Lewis ran into trouble spots. Coast publicity execs often didn't see eye to eye with the easterners and Lewis was the focal point of their hostility.

Weltner 4th Veep Of Par's Parent

Paramount board of directors at a New York meeting Friday (12) elected George Weltner vicepresident of the parent company. Functioning as global sales manager, exec is president of the Par Film Distributing and Par International subsidiaries.

Weltner, who has been with the outfit 35 years, is the fourth v.p. of the parent organization. Others are Paul Raibourn, head of economic planning and television activities; Louis Phillips, general counsel, and Y. Frank Freeman, studio head.

National Boxoffice Survey

Biz Spotty; '80 Days' No. 1, 'Prince' 2d, 'Wonders' 3d, 'Sun' 4th, 'Bernardine' 5th

Post Independence Day holiday business is spotty this week in key cities covered by VARIETY. A plethora of holdovers tended to hold down grosses while rain and heat in some localities militated against wicket activity.

Winner of the money sweepstakes this frame and still champ is "Around World in 80 Days" (UA). The Mike Todd production, with heavy playdates, is making an impressive b.o. showing. Trailing in second place is "Prince and Showgirl" (WB), same as last week.

"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama), fourth last round, moves up to third as holiday tourists made this widescreen spectacle a "must see." "Island in Sun" (20th), now in extensive holdover bookings, dropped a notch to fourth.

"Bernardine" (20th), still mopping up among the bobbysoxers, is fifth followed by "Sweet Smell of Success" (UA). Longrunning "10 Commandments" is seventh, same as last week. "Fire Down Below" (Col) and "Delicate Delinquent" (Par) round out the Top Nine.

Runners-up are "Beau James" (Par), "Love in the Afternoon" (AA) and "Man on Fire" (M-G). "Love," the Gary Cooper-Audrey Hepburn starrer, was disappointing in some of its initial dates but last week it demonstrated better pulling power in a number of situations.

"Pride and the Passion" (UA), not yet in general release, is revealing potential longrun b.o. stamina in holdover dates in N.Y., L.A. and Chicago. "Bambi" (BV), a Disney reissue, augurs tremendous biz by dint of sock grosses in three keys. Hot in Chicago, it's great in Philly and big in Denver.

Due to be heard from are "Band of Angels" (WB) and "Rising of the Moon" (WB). Former is solid in N.Y. while "Moon" is boffo in same town. "Silk Stockings" (M-G), brisk in Washington, is shapely in Chicago.

"Seventh Sin" (M-G) is bad in Toronto. "Curse of Frankenstein" (WB), bright in Boston, is fancy in Buffalo. "Monte Carlo Story" (UA), okay in Boston, is thin in L.A. switched to the "Ziegfeld Follies" legiter.

When a Sunday feature in one of the New York papers played up the angle that "chorines aren't so dumb" and gave them a test to prove it, the high-scoring Miss Hall came to the attention of Entertainment Productions Inc. (EPI), the "Question" packagers. She appeared on the show, and Life mag decided to do an upcoming cover on her. Since then, Miss Lyons has been hard put to keep up with the bookings.

Robert Moscow Raps 'Holdback' In May & June

Robert Moscow, Atlanta and Chattanooga circuit operator who was visiting Gotham the past week, stated he can't figure the "industry statisticians who purposely hold back on good pictures in May and June and encourage the public to seek entertainment other than the film theatres."

The situation was particularly severe this year, said the exhibitor. He reported that in the two month span his Rialto Theatre, Atlanta first-run, grossed only $3,000 weekly, whereas the average is $8,000. On the eight-week basis, the loss caused by the holdback of boxoffice product amounted to $40,-000.

Then came the long July 4th weekend and theatremen were faced with a spate of top releases from all companies. His booking calendar became so crowded that he's been forced to bypass an important entry, "Pride and the Passion," Moscow related.

Wisdom behind releasing schedules was questioned by the man from Dixie. That the pre-July 4th period can be comercially important was proved conclusively by Paramount's "Gunfight at O. K. Corral" and 20th-Fox's "Island in the Sun." Playing mostly against second-rate product, these two productions did top-notch business, according to Moscow.

INDIE PRODUCERS, COLORFUL BUNCH BUT TENSE, VEXING & FLEXING AT CRITICS

By ROBERT J. LANDRY

A new scenario is in the writing for one more attempted "industry" vendetta against film critics, as disclosed in another story, this page. Thoughtful Manhattan observers immediately evaluated this as "emotionally due." It's been a year and a half since the last big eruption against reviewers and meanwhile, and especially recently, a number of important releases have bumped into cool critiques.

In the present tension-temper of the motion picture industry the philosophy of expectation argues that producers and distributors must periodically blow their tops and, logical thereto, seek "punitive" satisfaction against the critics. Marked increase in the number of independent producers alone testifies the personal affront psychology in Manhattan. Nowadays it's pointed out that failure of reviewers to "enthuse" is almost as offensive to some producers as an actual pan. There main objective, of course, is profit but they also crave artistic prestige, a part of the promissory note of future shooting money.

Too much in investment and in hope rides on costly release for the anxious sire to greet criticism with Voltaire-like dispassion, " I loathe what you write but will defend to the death your right to write it." The typical emotional reaction is more apt to be, "who qualified him as a judge?"

Have You Heard Exhibs?

One comment that puts the rage against the reviewers into perspective is this: "Nothing the critics said about some of the releases in May and June was one-quarter as rabid as circuit and exhibitor cracks." The point apparently is that theatremen don't write under by-lines.

Granting that indie producers color, and to some degree dominate, the current situation, it is remarked in Manhattan that the changed status of many individuals in the past few years introduces new, painful experiences along with the increase of fortune. Various stars with either full rank as producers or with profit participation go on the road and meet critics, columnists, aircasters. Where local reviews are disappointing the significance is brought home in a way that would not be true to a star with no tax axe to grind who stayed in his Hollywood villa.

Significantly one star-producer, Burt Lancaster, recently took strong umbrage at a woman interviewer in Washington who failed to fancy his "Sweet Smell of Success" while a participator, Jerry Lewis, touring for "Delicate Delinquent" got ensnarled with "opinion makers" up in Toronto. Without presuming to draw any moral but simply making the point of actors wearing the cap of business men, tiese two instances are not precedental.

Pulverized Preminger

The producer-director who really "got the works" recently was Otto Preminger. He was roundly drubbed for his decisions in scripting and casting "St. Joan." Indeed it is seldom that any film showman of such standing is singled out for such pin-pointed-to-the-chief attacks. The blame was directly

Dick Einfeld, Producer

Hollywood, July 16.

Richard Einfeld, son of 20th-Fox pub-ad veepee Charles Einfeld, makes his debut as a producer on "Ghost Divers" to be made under the Regal Films banner for 20th release.

Einfeld penned the original screenplay with Merril G. White, who will direct the film, which goes before the cameras Aug. 12.

Paris No Rapture For U.S. Films, Per Hope & Oswald

Paris, July 16.

Though many Yank producers and directors, who have already made films in France, have been emphatic in praise of French filmmaking facilities, Bob Hope, producer of the recently completed "Paris Holiday" (UA), and director Gerd Oswald, do not go along with this attitude.

They feel that Paris technicians do not stack up to their U.S. counterparts, overtime here is costly and difficult, and work is generally slower and somewhat less efficient. Films usually come in for about as much as, and sometimes more than, it would have cost in Hollywood.

Of course the local color is always a good reason for shooting here, if the story calls for it, according to Hope and Oswald, but they wonder if it is really worth it. Trouble with co-star Fernandel led to various script changes throughout the shooting and then his scenes had to be speeded up so as to free him for his other commitments.

The Parisian weather was also against them, but in spite of these squawks Hope and Oswald feel they could not have made it anywhere else. Pic may be over two and a half hours long and Hope is thinking of roadshowing it, to make it the first comedy of this kind to get upped priced bookings. This is still in the talk stage.

The Venetian 'Value'

Mystery ended: MPEA's official entry at Venice Film Festival will be "Something of Value." (Metro). Venice also will invite 20th-Fox's "Hatful of Rain."

Columbia will be repped via its British picture, "Esther Costello," produced by Romulus Films.

Inside Stuff—Pictures

A hassle between film star Burt Lancaster and femmecaster Patty Cavin became town talk in Washington recently. Since neither side pursued the issue further, incident was limited to brief mentions in local columns and some behind-the-scenes palaver as to the proprieties involved. Flare-up came during a routine taping session scheduled as part of Lancaster's current tour for "Sweet Smell of Success." Lancaster, according to Miss Cavin of WRC's "Capital By-Lines" grabbed the tape and ordered her out of his Hotel Statler suite when she gave her opinion verbally of his film. According to her, Lancaster solicited this. Actor, she reported, told her she was "not a critic," and repeatedly ordered her to scram.

Embarrassed, United Artists and Loew reps caught in a public relations nightmare, refused comment, backing away from taking sides but one dared corroborate fact that Lancaster ordered the blonde and good-looking interviewer to leave.

WRL-NBC execs, to whom Miss Cavin reported the incident, decided not to press for return of tape.

The United States Government imposed no special restrictions on the showing of British pictures, and distribution was governed by public taste and commercial factors, Ian Harvey, for the British Foreign Secretary told a Member of Parliament in the House of Commons. Harvey had been asked if, as part of the campaign to improve British information services abroad, he would start talks with the Yank and Soviet Governments to try and secure wider distribution of British pictures. Harvey said there would be no point in starting discussions on the matter in America.

On Russia, he said the commercial terms they'd so far been offered by Soviet importers had been "quite inadequate." The subject had however been mulled over by the British Ambassador at Moscow and the Soviet Minister of Culture, and it was hoped that it might be possible to persuade the Russians to reconsider the position.

List Industries, parent of RKO Theatres, was among the most active stocks traded on the big board last week, predicated on report of new acquisitions. Insiders point to the current bullish market as reason for churning up activity, especially in the pop priced issues, and also that a similar spurt occurred some time ago, when List acquired another business, at which time the stock shot up to $12. It's now around $9, the high for this year.

Hyman's AAP Near UA Tieup

Associated Artists Productions, outfit which has the Warner Bros. backlog for television and other rights, and is now engaging in new theatrical feature production, may tie up with United Artists. AAP president Eliot Hyman and UA execs have made substantial progress toward a deal under which UA will finance and distribute AAP's initial four productions.

These comprise a Susan Hayward western, two Audie Murphy starrers and a Robert Carson original titled "Wall Flower."

Hyman had been negotiating with Columbia anent a possible alignment but this fell through.

Plot to Overthrow Courtesy

[FOR FILM CRITICS]

By GENE ARNEEL

Film critics of consumer dailies and magazines may find the red carpet pulled from under them. In an early stage talk among some members of the ad-pub fraternity in New York is the idea of a formal meeting at the Motion Picture Assn. of America where all companies would be canvassed on a proposal to cease romancing the journalistic pic appraisers.

This would take the form of no more special screenings, special favors and courtesies.

Critics, who are alternately loved and maligned, have particularly riled several independent producers of late and the latter are putting the pressure on homeoffices. They don't want the costs of private showings charged to their pictures, particularly when the beneficiaries of these courtesies rap the product in print.

No single company would cease wooing the critics on its own—there's that identity of "heavy" to consider. Either all companies would have to go along with the idea, or likely it will be scuttled.

$5-Mil Budget for 'Solomon and Sheba'

Inspired by Bible and Today's Egyptian-Israeli Tension; Vidor Directs for Hornblow-U.A.

Hollywood, July 16.

"Solomon and Sheba," to be produced by Arthur Hornblow in association with Edward Small, will be one of the most expensive features ever made, Hornblow disclosed here. Preliminary budget for the United Artists release has been set at $5,000,000 and very likely will go higher. Only three or four films in industry history have hit the $5,000,000 mark.

Although no decision has been made as yet, Hornblow reported there is a strong probability the film will be lensed in Todd-AO. Process is now no more costly than other big screen aspects, Hornblow reported, because of recent improvements in Todd-AO. When Hornblow produced "Oklahoma," he said, use of Todd-AO upped cost approximately $1,000,000, due to fact it was unknown whether it could be converted into other processes which might be played generally, and a CinmeaScope version also was filmed.

Hornblow this week launches a series of confabs with director King Vidor on script written by Julius Epstein and Crane Wilbur. Camera work is now due to start next May, with picture to be limned in Israel, on actual sites of the Biblical story, and in either Italy or Spain. Duo leaves for Near East this Fall, after Hornblow completes "Witness for the Prosecution," currently in production by Hornblow and Small for UA, to scout locations and finalize the Italy or Spanish filming.

Hornblow reported that he and Small hit upon story due to its analogy to the world today—more particularly to fact that Israel and Egypt are at each other's throats, just as in Biblical times the same situation prevailed between the two countries.

Another reason for film, according to producer, is fact that Solomon was the greatest lover of his times, the Queen of Sheba the most glamorous, and film, based upon both the First Book of Kings and also the legend of Solomon and

Set Chaplin Premiere

London, July 16.

World preem of Charles Chaplin's "A King In New York" which is being released through Archway Films will take place at the Leicester Square Theatre on Sept. 12. All proceeds will be divided between The National Fund for Poliomyelitis Research and the Three Roses Society for Mentally Handicapped Children.

Chaplin will probably attend the opening along with his co-star Dawn Addams and other leading members of the cast. Joint chairmen of the Premiere Committee are Lady Jowett and Valerie Hobson.

Jerry Lewis In Toronto Fuss; Called 'Cheeky'

Toronto, July 16.

Stuart Kenney, a disk jockey on local CKEY who was retained to emcee the show at the Imperial Theatre, 3,344-seater here, in which comic Jerry Lewis made a personal appearance along with his latest Paramount release, "The Delicate Delinquent," went on the air to brand Lewis "a crushing boor."

To express his displeasure with the stage and microphone arrangements, Lewis had bawled out the stagehands, assistant manager Michael Bibun and the emcee.

Kenney admitted the first show might have been "trying" but stated that Lewis "instead of controlling his temper, as a nice guy would, cursed the stagehands and unleashed oaths rights and left." Win Barron, of Paramount Pictures publicity, and currently tied up in a tv program, "Front Page Challenge," which is taking up much of his time, admitted on press complaints that "Jerry Lewis is a most lackadaisical fellow who never worries about anything." General opinion of local film-reviewers is that Jerry Lewis, with his 18-man entourage, forgot to ask the right people, with the result that his Toronto visit was bad publicity. His new picture release was thereafter pointedly ignored by the columnists.

Lewis was also charged here with holding up Mayor Phillips' reception for 20 minutes; strolling into the tail-end of CBC-TV's "Tabloid" posh interview session, with "O.K., so where's the corpse?" a walk-on that puzzled staid Canadian listeners who considered it cheekiness.

Kenny forgot an interview with comic which he was to have taped for following day's broadcast. He informed his CKEY listeners; "Of all the Hollywood people I've met, Jerry Lewis was the most ill-tempered in his tantrums and unleashing of oaths. I didn't want him on my program and cancelled his appearance."

RKO Completes 3, Seeks Releases

States rights distributors are becoming more prominent in the RKO setup. Film company has decided to release a new feature through these local distrib agencies—possibly portending a pattern of operations for the future.

Feature is "Cartouche," produced in Europe by John Nasht with Richard Basehart and Patricia Roc in the leads. Already marketed abroad, the United States release is set for August.

Deal for the production comes on the heels of a newly-entered pact for the states righters to handle a group of 12 new RKO shorts. All arrangements were set via Budd Rogers, who in past has represented RKO in the licensing of reissues through the regional agencies.

Meanwhile, RKO has three other feature productions ready for exhibition. Two, Stanley Rubin's production of "Girl Most Likely" and

MAN-EATING TIGERS TAIL LEO

As Privately, Court Must Decide Who Gets What in Metro's Divorcement

Indications are that the decision relating to the division of the $30,000,000 funded debt between Loew's Inc. and Loew's Theatres will be made by the N.Y. Federal Court.

Despite constant negotiations between both groups, a satisfactory compromise has not been reached and both sides are reportedly ready to throw up their hands and let the court divvy up the debt.

Dispute has centered on the amount of the debt burden each divorcing company must accept when they eventually separate into separate firms. The final split of the two companies, ordered in 1950 by the Dept. of Justice, has been delayed over and over again because of the failure to reach a decision on the debt situation.

Harold Robbins, Budgeteer Turned Novelist, Now To Be an Allied Producer

Harold Robbins this week entered a deal to produce three pictures, two of them based on his own novels, in association with Allied Artists. Film company will provide the financing and take worldwide distribution rights.

On the basis of plans set so far, the product will represent a switch in policy for AA so far as negative investments are involved.

Properties are "Never Love A Stranger" and "77 Park Avenue," written by Robbins, and "Mr. Boston," adaptation of "I'd Do It Again," autobiography by James M. Curley, former mayor of Boston. Novelist, who has done his own scripts for the trio, will be making his debut as a producer via the deal. He had been on the exec end of the picture business until last year when he bowed out as Universal's director of budget planning and research. Set to work as his co-producer is Richard Day, who's had the spotlight as a seven-time Oscar winner for art direction.

Three films are to be lensed in New York with some photography also to be taken in Boston for the Curley entry.

Policy change for AA is in the fact that the pictures are slated for budgets of $1,000,000 to $1,500,000. Heretofore the company operated in smalltime brackets for the most part, big exceptions being "Friendly Persuasion," which cost $3,000,000, and "Love in the Afternoon," Brought in at around $2,100,000.

AA managed to eke out a small profit with "Persuasion" but it was a tough struggle — presumably tough enough to discourage any more shelling out of such fancy production money for the time being. Company is in fair enough financial shape for its size but the fact is that had "Persuasion" died AA would have suffered a serious fiscal setback.

Too early to tell about "Afternoon," this Billy Wilder production having played only a few dates.

The $1,000,000-$1,500,000 range means less risk. Product made at this dollar level can come out economically on top with good, and not necessarily blockbuster, boxoffice. And this same product can also elevate AA's status in the industry—can cause removal of the company from the smalltime identity. A headstart has been had in this direction through "Persuasion" and "Afternoon" but to stay with the tall budgets could be needlessly hazardous.

Columbia purchased the screen rights to "The Last Hurrah," generally regarded as a fictionalized version of Curley's career, but has not scheduled a starting date.

Robbins and Day have signed Dorothy Collins to make her screen bow in the film and are dickering with Allied Artists to release pic.

SEAL FOR '08/15'

German Feature Passed—MPAA More Simpatico?

Times Film Corp. has settled its tiff with the Motion Picture Assn. of America over the German "08/15" and a Code seal has been issued to the picture. Code originally had refused to give its approval.

Fight never reached the MPAA board level, but was settled after Times made what it describes as minor cuts.

Jean Goldwurm, Times prexy, saw in the Code decision an indication of a more "sympathetic view toward future foreign pictures submitted for Code approval." He said his outfit was certain that "08/15" wasn't an exception to the rule, but that "European pictures may be expected to benefit by progressive thinking from all sides in this country."

William Shelton, Times sales chief, originally opposed any cuts, explaining that deletions might "destroy the very purpose for which the picture was made." He said "08/15" was produced as "a realistic expose of the corruption, brutality and vulgarity that characterized the Nazi military system."

"08/15," first of a series of three involving barracks life in the Nazi army, has been dubbed into English for presentation in the States. Discussions with Times Film were carried on for the Code in N.Y. by Gordon White.

Glam Up Nabes For Non-B'way Film Openings

With new emphasis being placed on off-Broadway openings in New York, Paramount and Loew's Theatres now are taking the next step. This is to create some of the atmosphere of a showcase run at the neighborhood situations.

Film company's sales and ad-pub department heads will meet with the theatre and company's homeoffice execs and five division managers and 29 managers of the nabe situations next Monday and Tuesday (22 and 23) to map out promotion plans. Managers also will be informed of a competition among themselves for the best campaigns, with cash prizes for the winners.

All this is to focus on "Omar Khayyam," Y. Frank Freeman Jr. production which is to have a multiple opening throughout the Loew's chain in the metropolitan area in August.

Meetings are set for the Par homeoffice and will be addressed by Par board chairman Adolph Zukor, ad-pub v.p. Jery Pickman and Loew's v.p. Eugene Picker. Other participants will include the circuit's Ernest Emerling, ad-pub director; James L. Shanahan, assistant ad-pub chief; Ted Arno, publicity manager for the N. Y. theatres; and Par's Sid Blumenstock, ad manager; Herb Steinberg, national exploitation manager; Phil Isaacs, assistant eastern sales manager, and Myron Sattler, N. Y. branch manager.

Loew's will follow up with a meeting on its own of all assistant managers Jluy 29.

DIN IN THE DEN SMOTHERS BIZ

Loew's Inc. board meeting on the Coast last Thursday and Friday (11-12) pointed up the "lone wolf" status faced by prexy Joseph R. Vogel in his efforts to revitalize the company. Not only is Vogel harrassed by the Joseph Tomlinson-Stanley Meyer axis which, with the support of former studio chief Louis B. Mayer, is attempting to take over management of Loew's, but he is also being pressured by Wall Street banking groups which have financial interests in the film company.

The Wall St. "needling" consists mainly of complaints that Vogel is not moving fast enough in ridding the company of old-line executives and bringing in new exec blood. Vogel is well aware of the fact that he has to make changes in the top management, but he has stressed that the changes cannot be made rapidly, the point being that top-notch, capable executives cannot be found that easily.

It's understood that George Muchnic, frequently mentioned as a successor to v.p. and treasurer Charles C. Moskowitz, has been detached from Loew's International department and will spend several months on the Coast studying the studio operation. However, there have also been reports that Vogel has been dickering with an individual outside of the industry to take over the financial v.p. post.

Only Bickering

According to Coast reports, the board meeting on the Coast last week accomplished little in a business way for the company. Instead of performing constructive administrative work, it's said the meeting degenerated into what amounted to a 48-round of squabbling between the so-called Vogel and Tomlinson factions.

A number of important matters as a result never reached the board for approval. One big proposition that requires ratification of the board, but has yet to get it, is the Hecht-Hill-Lancaster deal calling for Burt Lancaster to star in two Metro pictures and for H-H-L to produce four films for Metro.

The Coast site for the board meeting was chosen to give a number of the directors who had never been on the lot an insight on how the studio functions. However, except for a luncheon on Thursday in the executive dining room attended by all the studio's producers, directors, writers, etc., at which each board member was introduced and applauded perfunctorily, the board members did little except stay locked in conflict. There are conflicting rumors of what took place within the board room.

Wanna Push Vogel Out?

One report is that the conflict was over the matter of which faction will run the company. The Tomlinson-Meyer axis is reported still trying to unseat Vogel as prexy and have Meyer take over as president, Tomlinson in the re-established post of chairman of the board, and bring Louis B. Mayer back as studio head, even if only an advisory capacity. That the Tomlinson-Meyer faction hasn't succeeded in the fight for control is evidence that Vogel still retains the support of the majority of the directors on the 13-man board. However, two Vogel supporters on board, Frank Pace Jr, and John Sullivan were absent from the meetings and their absence was sorely felt by Vogel and his supporters.

Tomlinson and Meyer are also reported to have aimed their guns at lack of Metro product for release now, even though that's factor not accountable to present regime in light of the short term it has been in office. (Vogel took over presidency last fall and Dore Schary was replaced as studio production chief last November). After the Friday meeting the board scattered and maintained a hush-hush policy on what transpired at the session.

Some N. Y. Execs Favor Compromise But Metro Still Dead-Against Italy Dictating (Viz, Selecting) 'Specials'

Five or six of the American companies are amenable to a compromise agreement with the Italians on a new film rental agreement. But distributors currently opposing concessions are Metro, United Artists and 20th-Fox.

Several of the foreign managers in New York believe it's a mistake to allow the situation to deteriorate in Rome to the point where the Italian Government steps in and issues its own decree.

(Word from Rome at press time is that U.S.-Italian film negotiations have again hit deadlock. Next move is up to N.Y.).

"The points at issue are really not important enough to allow this to happen," said one manager. However, New York in this instance is going along with the Continental managers who, so far, have insisted on the U. S. position.

Differences arise over the proposal by AGIS, the Italian exhibitors' group, plus the Italian membership in the distributors org, ANICA, that the free negotiable American films be picked and determined by a special committee on which the Italo government would be represented. Furthermore, the Italian want a committee to oversee the functioning of the entire agreement.

Yanks Squawked

These specifics were included in a draft agreement submitted recently by AGIS, which was nixed by the distributors on the strength of the American membership objections.

There are several executives in Gotham who now feel that it would be much wiser to compromise than to have the Government set terms, which may be quite unfavorable to the U. S. industry. This attitude gets further support from the belief that some Italian factions probably want the negotiations to break down and to force the government to issue a decree.

Company that has taken the most uncompromising stand on the question of selecting the "special" films is Metro, which is not a member of ANICA. Metro rep, at the meeting in New York last week, made it plain that his company would fight any committee selection procedure and that, if it couldn't proper terms for its top films, they just wouldn't be sent into Italy. He pointed out that M-G followed that procedure with "Gone With the Wind" in quite a few instances. Metro, at that meeting, was represented as being quite willing to suffer the consequences via Italo Government intervention rather than give in on the point of the special releases.

11 JOBS HELLERIZED

Loew's Employees Feel the Meaning of That Report

As a result of findings reported by the management consultancy firm of Robert Heller & Associates in survey of Loew's Inc. homeoffice operations, eleven persons have been lopped off the payroll of Loew's International, the company's foreign subsidiary.

It's understood there will be additional changes in the operation of the International department. One top-echelon executive is reported about to be given his notice.

Grim Data On Frenchmen: Don't Patronize Pix

Washington, July 16.

French film industry is in trouble because the French have stopped going to the cinema. Quoting from a recent French article, the Motion Picture Division of the U.S. Dept. of Commerce says the average Frenchman sees only nine pictures a year and spends a total of 1,180 francs annually for admission. That is less than $3.50 annually in American money.

Whether television has anything to do with this is not explained.

"In the largest movie houses in France," continues the Dept. of Commerce, "the number of vacant seats at the average showing is about 70%."

A second cause of difficulty is high production costs. What saves the French industry, says Commerce, is the fact that its product has acceptance on the world market, especially in Western Germany, Belgium, Switzerland and Italy. It also has a fairly good market in the U.S.

132 of Chi's 310 Houses Shaken Out; Kirsch Hits Municipality's 3% Tax

Chicago, July 16.

A blast at the overtaxing of theatres was loosed today (Tues.) at annual meeting of Allied Theatres of Illinois by its prexy Jack Kirsch in the Blackstone Hotel here. Kirsch poured out statistics to prove that the sorry fanancial plight of Chicago theatres could be greatly relieved by the lightening of local taxation.

Kirsch noted that since the postwar 3% (city) tax became effective, 132 of Chi's 310 theatres have had to cease operations and he characterized the remaining 178 as "Mostly sick theatres." Of the latter he claims that 33 currently on the fringe could be made profitable houses by elimination of the city tax. Another 108 he says are in the deep red and bound to go out of business unless favorable product restores business.

An Affair to Remember
(COLOR—C'SCOPE)

Sentimental love story with comedy overtones, played to the hilt by Cary Grant and Deborah Kerr. Shapes as sock attraction.

20th-Fox release of Jerry Wald production. Stars Cary Grant, Deborrah Kerr. Features Richard Denning, Neva Patterson, Cathleen Nesbitt, Robert Q. Lewis. Directed by Leo McCarey; screenplay, Delmer Daves and McCarey from original story by Mildred Gram and McCarey; camera (Color by De Luxe), Milton Krasner; songs by Harry Warren with lyrics by Harold Adamson and McCarey; editor, James B. Clark. Previewed in N.Y. aboard the U.S.S. Constitution, July 11, '57. Running time, 115 MINS.

Nickie Ferrante	Cary Grant
Terry McKay	Deborah Kerr
Kenneth	Richard Denning
Lois	Neva Patterson
Grandmother	Cathleen Nesbitt
Announcer	Robert Q. Lewis
Hathaway	Charles Watts
Courbet	Fortunio Bonanova
Father McGrath	Matt Moore
Mario	Louis Mercier
Miss Webb	Geraldine Wall
Gladys	Nora Marlowe
Miss Lane	Sarah Selby
Bartender	Alberto Morin
Gaimielle	Genevieve Aumont

Adding comedy lines, music, color and CinemaScope, Jerry Wald and Leo McCarey have turned this remake of the 1939 "Love Affair" into a winning film that is alternately funny and tenderly sentimental. It's got all the ingredients that should make it an ideal women's picture, and theme and treatment add up to prime b.o. appeal.

"An Affair to Remember," using plenty of attractive settings (on and off the U.S.S. Constitution), is still primarily a film about two people; and since those two happen to be Cary Grant and Deborah Kerr, one of the happiest screen combos to come along in many a moon, the bitter-sweet romance sparkles and crackles with high spirits.

Picture for the most part maintains a good pace, though it's overlong for several scenes. Particularly the final song number not only could but should be cut. It slows up and interrupts the mood building to the climax, which is played and directed with great sensitivity and excellent taste.

Story has Grant and Miss Kerr fall in love aboard ship, though both are engaged to other people. They decide to meet in six months atop the Empire State Building. Meanwhile, Grant, a faintly notorious bachelor, is to change his life in a more useful direction. He shows up for the rendezvouz, but she is struck by a car on her way to the meeting and may never walk again. Disappointed, he leaves, thinking she's changed her mind. Eventually he returns and the film heads for a happy ending as Grant discovers the truth.

Director McCarey, who with Delmer Daves wrote the screenplay, has done a fine job with this picture, though for some reason or other he cut short most of the romantic clinches between the principals. One lengthy shot has them kissing for the first time, but only their legs are shown on a ship's stairway. Several other times they kiss, but the director almost seems embarassed to make a point of it.

Nevertheless, McCarey has gotten the most out of his players' talents. Both are experts in restrained, sophisticated comedy. Both are able to get a laugh by waving a hand or raising an eyebrow. The Grant-Kerr romance is never maudlin, not even at the end. It's a wholly believable relationship between two attractive people who find themselves irresistibly attracted to one another.

The bit when the ship lands, and Grant and Miss Kerr critically eye their respective fiancees; the tv broadcast, when Grant is reluctantly interviewed; the scene when the two, already linked romantically by the other passengers, have their dinners separately, sitting back-to-back—all these are scenes done with a deft touch that strikes just the right note. In updating their property, McCarey and Daves have done an expert job.

Grant is in top form in a made-to-order role. He's still one of the best, and one of the most attractive of stars. Also, he's perfectly cast. Miss Kerr in the cliche "never looked lovelier" or gave a better performance. Picture will add to her stature.

Rest of the cast are all fine. Cathleen Nesbitt plays the grandmother with dignity and heart; Richard Denning is sympathetic in a somewhat improbable role; Neva Patterson is striking as the millionairess engaged to Grant; Robert Q. Lewis comes off well as the tv interviewer. Charles Watt registers as the intruding passenger.

Milton Krasner's lensing is tiptop, and so is the DeLuxe color, which is fresh and natural. Song, "An Affair to Remember," is sung by Vic Damone. It was written by Harry Warren, with lyrics by Harold Adamson and McCarey. Miss Kerr sings a couple of numbers in a nightclub and the main theme runs effectively throughout the film. It's also performed during a tender little scene (with a profusion of closeups) involving Miss Nesbitt at the piano, Grant and Miss Kerr.

This is Jerry Wald's first as an indie for 20th-Fox. Picture can't help being a hit. But, equally important, it's a production that 20th can be proud to sell. From the hilarious beginning (radio commentators in New York, Rome and London disclosing Grant's engagement in their individual styles) to the sock ending, this is the kind of tears-and-laughter film that exhibitors will call a boon for the business. Hift.

La Revolucion Mexicana
(THE MEXICAN REVOLUTION)
Berlin, June 26.

Clasa Films Mundiales production. Directed by Luis Spota, camera, J. Carlos Carbajal; music, G. Cesar Carrion. At Berlin Film Festival. Running time, 84 MINS.

This Mexican full-length documentary, presenting little known aspects of the big Movement of Modern Mexican painting through the medium of painters like Clemente Orozco, Diego Rivera, David Alfaro and others, became one of Berlin Film Festival disappointments. What might have been a fairly interesting short subject, proves a tiresome enterprise as a full-length film.

Photographed paintings and frescos were not particularly impressive. Worst of all the narrative text was so one-sided (politically speaking) and so hammering in its Leftist propaganda tendency that it was completely out of place at this festival. It did the Mexicans small credit. Hans.

Courage of Black Beauty
(COLOR)

Good for Saturday matinee crowd. For old folks horsey tale may be a yawn.

Hollywood, July 10.

20th-Fox release of an Alco (Edward L. Alperson) Pictures Corp. production. Co-stars John Crawford, Mimi Gibson, John Bryant, Diane Brewster, J. Pat O'Malley, Russell Johnson; with Ziva Rodann. Director, Harold Schuster; screenplay, Steve Fisher; camera, John W. Boyle; editor, John Ehrin; music, Edward L. Alperson Jr. Songs, "Black Beauty" by Alperson and Paul Herrick, "The Donkey Game Song" by Alperson, and Dick Hughes and Richard Stapley. Previewed, July 9, '57. Running time, 78 MINS.

Bobby Adams	John Crawford
Lily Rowden	Mimi Gibson
Sam Adams	John Bryant
Ann Rowden	Diane Brewster
Mike Green	J. Pat O'Malley
Ben Ferraday	Russell Johnson
Janet Corday	Ziva Rodann

The Saturday matinee crowd may be glued to its seats, but unless the accompanying older generation are avid animal lovers, the going will be otherwise rough. To credit of producer Edward L. Alperson, sequelling his previous "Black Beauty" feature, he's mounted a clean, wholesome tale. However, it's an infantile offering for infantile audiences.

Contrived screenplay by Steve Fisher relates conflict between difficult lad, Johnny Crawford, and his widower father, John Bryant. Father owns a San Fernando Valley horse ranch (and is also an agent, it's indicated) and gives boy a new-born foal, who grows up to be handsome Black Beauty. Thereafter, picture wanders through a couple of minor crises, until horse is seriously injured through father's carelessness. At last moment, when it seems the animal must be destroyed, forced finale pulls him through and affects reconciliation all around.

Harold Schuster's direction is slow-paced and elementary, aimed at pic's probable clientele. Young Crawford continues to impress as a good juve actor, despite plot confusions, but Bryant can't do much with father's role. Neither can Diane Brewster, as a widowed neighbor, and Russell Johnson, as her foreman. Cuteness of Mimi Gibson, as her moppest daughter, is continually stressed, but with complete lack of acting ability she cloys easily. J. Pat O'Malley scores as the father's trainer and the boy's confidante. Ziva Rodann is okay in a bit as one of pop's clients, directly responsible for the horse's injury.

Pathe color lensing of John W. Boyle wisely uses bright, primary colors throughout, in view of eventual audience. Cutting is extremely jerky, switching back and forth innumerable times between very short snippets of film. This eventually grates.

There's too much lush background music by Edward L. Alperson Jr., with never a moment of surcease throughout. Couple of Alperson's songs, "Black Beauty" with lyrics by Paul Herrick and "The Donkey Game Song" with lyrics by Dick Hughes and Richard Stanley, also stress kiddie orientation. Kove.

Bop Girl Goes Calypso
(SONGS)

Mild musical badly out-guessed by events on its premise that calypso would replace rock 'n roll. Strictly filler.

United Artists release of a Bel-Air production. Stars Judy Tyler, Bobby Troup, Margo Woode and the musical acts the Jerry Kaye Trio, The Goofers, Lord Flea and his Calypsonians, Nino Tempo, The Titans; features Lucien Littlefield, George O'Hanlon, Jerry Barclay, Judy Harriet. Producer, Aubrey Schenck; director, Howard W. Koch; screenplay, Arnold Belgard from a story by Hendrik Vollaerts; camera, Carl E. Guthrie; editor, Sam Waxman; music, Les Baxter. Previewed July 8, '57. Running time, 80 MINS.

Jo Thomas	Judy Tyler
Robert Hilton	Bobby Troup
Marion Hendricks	Margo Woode
Professor Winthrop	Lucien Littlefield
Barney	George O'Hanlon
Jerry	Jerry Barclay
Young girl singer	Judy Harriet
Drunk	Gene O'Donnell
Taxi Driver	Edward Kafafian
Record Company Reps	George Sawaya, Jerry Frank, Dick Standish
Musical Acts	Mary Kaye Trio, The Goofers, Lord Flea Calypsonians, Nino Tempo, The Titans, The Cubanos

Current trend has invalidated much of the basic premise of "Bop Girl Goes Calypso," vitiating the potential it might have had earlier as a musical programmer. Some top specialty acts give it some appeal but otherwise marquee names and exploitation pegs rate secondary position where response will be mild.

Bel-Air production was conceived during what then appeared to be a burgeoning calypso craze and is based on the theory that the Trinidado tempo would replace rock 'n roll. It didn't. In the course of attempting to prove its unprovable point, a pedestrian screenplay by Arnold Belgard gets spasmodic lifts from 14 musical numbers, some of them performed by such cafe greats as the Mary Kaye Trio or the novelty act, the Goofers. Only real Trinidado talent involved is Lord Flea and his Calypsonians, hardly well-known.

Story line is based on research conducted by psychologist Bobby Troup for a thesis entitled "Mass Hysteria and the Popular Singer." His charts show calypso coming and R&R going to singer Judy Tyler agrees to make a style switch. She gets both Troup and fame in time for the fadeout.

Major mystery of the production is why producer Aubrey Schenck cast a musician of Bobby Troup's competence in a straight dramatic role in a musical film. He's personable, but no actor. Miss Tyler, who was killed in a July 4 car crash, shows to tremendous advantage here, indicating the accident cut off what could have been a promising career. She was both pert and proficient. Sole other top billed performer is Margo Woode, back in films after a lengthy absence. She is attractive as a eugenics researcher and registers strongly in the part. Lucien Littlefield and George O'Hanlon are good in the key featured spots and young Judy Harriet scores with one song number.

Howard W. Koch directed with a light touch and Les Baxter has done a good job of integrating the music and providing an overall musical pattern. Oldie "Fools Rush In" is revived by the Mary Kaye Trio, in a sock rendition that reprises their topnotch nitery stints. Technical credits are stock. Kap.

Pawnee
(COLOR)

Stock cowboy-and-Indian, despite efforts to add story twists. Average outlook for western bookings.

Hollywood, July 9.

Republic release of a (Jack J.) Gross-(Philip N.) Krasne Production. Stars George Montgomery; co-stars Bill Williams, Lola Albright. Director, George Waggner; screenplay, Waggner, Louis Rohes, Endre Bohem; camera, Hal Mc-Alpin; editor, Kenneth G. Crane; art director, Nicolai Remisoff; music, Paul Sawtell. Previewed July 8, '57. Running time, 79 MINS.

Tall Tree	George Montgomery
Matt	Bill Williams
Meg	Lola Albright
Tip	Francis McDonald
Doc	Robert E. Griffin
Brewster	Dabbs Greer
Mrs. Carter	Kathleen Freeman
Dancing Fawn	Charlotte Austin
Wise Eagle	Ralph Moody
Mrs. Brewster	Anne Barton
Obie Dilks	Raymond Hatton
Crazy Fox	Charles Horvath
Carter	Robert Nash

Story twists planted in "Pawnee," in an effort to set it off from other cowboy-and-Indian epics, don't add up to anything significant. Result, despite apparent efforts of Gross-Krasne production outfit to lend class, is pretty stock. Still, there's always a market for an action western and "Pawnee" should fill this bill for moderate returns.

George Montgomery portrays paleface adopted into Pawnee tribe as a child by chief Ralph Moody. Perhaps if tale woven by George Waggner (who also directed), Louis Vittes and Endre Bohem had stressed Indian lore, impact would have been more striking.

However, most footage revolves around Montgomery's misadventures in guiding a wagon train to Oregon, in an effort to learn the ways of his real people. He gets it from both sides: Indians think he's turned against his adoptive folk and the whites, when they learn who he really is, think he's a treacherous renegade.

Hotheaded Pawnee rival Charles Horvath wrests control from Montgomery when the chief dies and puts tribe on warpath against the train. Montgomery, also driven away from the train by wagonmaster Bill Williams, brings the U.S. Cavalry in the nick of time to rescue the beseiged pioneers, killing Horvath in hand-to-hand combat.

Of course, there's romance, with Montgomery winning the love of Lola Albright away from Williams, foresaking redskin beauty Charlotte Austin in the process.

Waggner stages a good action sequence, but falls into cliches with subtle-relationships. Montgomery carries off required heroics ably enough, and Williams registers well as the doughty wagonmaster. Miss Albright is pictorially effective, but shows need of considerable thespic polish. Francis J. McDonald, Robert E. Griffin, Greer, Miss Barton and Kathleen Freeman as pioneers and Miss Austin, Horvath and Moody as the redskin contingent are okay.

Perhaps print viewed wasn't properly corrected, but Trucolor tint process was variable in quality, tending toward blues and purples of palette. Other technical credits are adequate, save one sequence in which a boom shadow was noticeable. Kove.

Hidden Fear

Senseless violence, obscure plotting. Cops 'n' robbers through Copenhagen's streets. John Payne's name and unusual Danish background only points in favor.

Hollywood, July 8.

United Artists release of a (Robert) St. Aubrey-(Howard E.) Kohn (II) Production. Stars John Payne; co-stars Alexander Knox, Conrad Nagel, Natalie Norwick, Anne Neyland; features Kjeld Jacobsen, Paul Erling. Director, Andre de Toth; screenplay, de Toth-John Ward Hawkins; camera, Wilfred M. Cline; editor, David Wages; music, Hans Schreiber. Reviewed, Iris Theatre, Hollywood, July 8, '57. Running time, 83 MINS.

Mike Brent	John Payne
Hartman	Alexander Knox
Arthur Miller	Conrad Nagel
Susan Brent	Natalie Norwick
Virginia Kelly	Anne Neyland
Lt. Knudsen	Kjeld Jacobsen
Gibbs	Paul Erling
Lund	Mogens Brandt
Helga Hartman	Marianne Schleiss
Jacobsen	Knud Rex
Inga	Elsie Albiin
Hans Ericsen	Buster Larsen
Jensen	Kjeld Petersen
Slim man	Preben Mahrt

While searching through Copenhagen for the baddies in this crime melodrama, John Payne should have dug himself up a plot, as well. This feature has the air of an early-day two-reeler, where the story was written on the director's cuffs. Overdrastic cutting doesn't help clarify matters. Despite the Payne name and the unusual locale, (shot in Denmark last year); this UA release seems destined to bore rather than entertain.

Andre de Toth-John Ward Hawkins story, if correctly deciphered, has something to do with Payne's efforts to clear his sister, Natalie Norwick, of a murder rap. Payne a Yank cop on leave, has a penchant for doing things the hard way and soon uncovers a counterfeiting ring, headed by Alexander Knox and with Conrad Nagel and Paul Erling as chief henchies.

After a full quota of beak-bustings and noggin-crackings, Payne practically singlehandedly polishes off the gang and clears sis, in a manner never clearly explained. Wandering through the strategic moments are a succession of Nordic beauties, who cast meaningful glances at Payne. Eventually, Anne Neyland, as a Yank performer in Copenhagen, leads the pack by an inch or two of chest expansion.

DeToth directed his own script, perpetuating his own confusion. Emphasis is on heavyhanded action and largely-senseless violence. De Toth is additionally hampered by technical work not up to U.S. standards. Sound recording is especially bad, with large patches of dialogue completely unintelligible. Additionally, print viewed was badly scratched.

Cast was distinctly uneven in quality, ranging from adequate downward. In the former category are Payne, Knox, Nagel, Erling, Miss Norwick and Kjeld Jacobsen as a Danish detective. Miss Neyland is blessed with a spectacular torso, which she exhibits more than customary on U.S. screens. Elsie Albiin, as a Copenhagen demimonde, also registers solidly in the s.a. department. Kove.

Man of Thousand Faces
(C'SCOPE)

Life of Lon Chaney translated to a tearjerker that should appeal to general audiences, particularly distaffers. Topnotch portrayal by James Cagney.

Universal release of Robert Arthur production. Stars James Cagney, Dorothy Malone and Jane Greer. Features Marjorie Rambeau, Jim Backus, Robert J. Evans, and Celia Lovsky. Directed by Joseph Pevney. Screenplay, R. Wright Campbell, Ivan Goff and Ben Robert from story by Ralph Wheelwright; camera (C'Scope), Russell Metty; editor, Ted J. Kent; music, Frank Skinner. Previewed in N.Y. July 9, '57. Running time, 122 MINS.

Having opened its own strain of biography ("The Glenn Miller Story," "To Hell and Back," and "The Benny Goodman Story"), Universal is again delving into the life of a famous personality in "Man Of A Thousand Faces." The title stems from the billing given the late Universal, later Metro, star, Lon Chaney by an alert publicity man. As everyone old enough to have lived through the silent film era is well aware, Chaney was one of the stalwarts of the period and any history of the motion picture industry would be woefully incomplete if it did not include this talented, tortured man, excellently portrayed by James Cagney in the present telling.

The R. Wright Campbell-Ivan Goff-Ben Roberts screenplay based on a story by Ralph Wheelwright is mainly concerned with Chaney's complicated domestic problems. His achievements as a consummate artist, while woven into the story, are secondary to his mixed up private life. As a result, "Man of a Thousand Faces," as presented in the Robert Arthur production, emerges as an unashamed soap opera tearjerker. This is not meant in a disparaging sense, for it is this very quality which will probably find favor with general audiences.

Here is not a film for the sophisticate or the discerning critic. But as a popular entry, it stands a good chance of duplicating U's previous successes with biofilms.

It'll have to be sold carefully. The majority of current film-goers may but barely remember Chaney or his accomplishments. However, it'll draw the silent-film buffs and the nostalgic oldsters. In addition, if the word gets around, it'll bring in the distaffers in droves, for it'll give 'em a chance to experience an emotional catharsis and exercise their tear ducts.

The story, in swift sequences, takes Chaney from his early boyhood to his death of throat cancer. Born of deaf and dumb parents, this an important emotional factor in Chaney's motivations. Screenplay ranges song-and-dance vaudeville days, two marriages, the birth of his son, early struggles as a Hollywood extra, eventual rise to stardom, and tragic death. He is presented as a stubborn, unforgiving man bitterly resentful of his first wife's walkout.

As Chaney, Cagney gives one of his most notable performances. He has immersed himself so completely in the role that it is difficult to spot any Cagney mannerisms. Jane Greer, as his second wife, is particularly appealing in her devotion to her "difficult" spouse. Dorothy Malone is fine as the wife who deems her career as a singer more important than raising children. Other good performances are turned in by Jim Backus, as Chaney's loyal and understanding press-agent friend; Robert J. Evans, as Irving Thalberg who is first production chief at Universal and then at Metro; Roger Smith, as Chaney's grown son, Creighton, who later assumed the name of Lon Chaney Jr., and Marjorie Rambeau, as a film extra.

A real heart-tug is provided by Celia Lovsky as Chaney's deaf and dumb mother. The scenes in which Miss Lovsky appears will have femme viewers drying their eyes. Nolan Leary is also effective as Pa Chaney.

Director Joseph Pevney gets the most out of the heart-tugging scenes. Technical aspects are top-notch, including Russell Metty's photography and the art direction of Alexander Golitzen and Eric Orbom. Bud Westmore deserves special mention for the excellent make-up jobs on the various characters portrayed by Chaney. The music by Frank Skinner has a hearts-and-flowers tinge. Holl.

INTERMISSION ON PERCENTAGE

New York Sound Track

Ogden Reid, Her-Trib publisher and Loew's board member, has political aspirations, according to associates. They say he wanted the GOP nomination for Mayor of Our Town but lost out to Robert Christenberry . . . Beverly Hills investor Moe Ellis apparently is giving up in his fight for control of Republic. Coast reports have it that his associates have lost interest. New York insiders say the fight was futile to begin with. Herb Yates being too substantial a stockholder to buck . . . Sol A. Schwartz exercised an option for an additional 5,000 shares of List Industries common . . . And Gerald Cantor is still buying up National Theatres stock.

Glenn Allvine, former MPAA public information head, had been a candidate for the ad-pub coordinator's job which Oscar Doob landed. Appointment of a Coast counterpart to Doob represents a problem for the companies' ad-pub directors. They'd like to find someone who would meet with the approval of all the studio publicity chiefs, which isn't easy. MPAA's Duke Wales, incidentally, is in from his Coast office for meetings on the various business-building projects.

Cary Grant says he never looks at his old films on tv. "I prefer to see the new ones," he added . . . The big 20th-Fox party aboard the U.S.S. Constitution last week, where "Affair to Remember" was previewed, was meant for 300 people. Almost twice that many showed up. Many had no tickets and got turned away due to the limited capacity. Many guests never got to see the film since the ship's theatre only seated 140. Lounge got so crowded, Leonard Lyons had trouble hopping all the "right" tables. Almost ended up talking to some of the wrong people! Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and wife were there. Ditto Shelley Winters, Julius La Rosa, Neva Patterson, Debra Paget (and mother), Anthony Franciosa and, of course Cary Grant . . . Earl Rakoff, manager of the 55th St. Theatre, newly acquired by the Charles Moss circuit, is an ordained rabbi. Doesn't work at the house Friday nights and Saturdays. Current at the theatre: The all-Irish "Rising of the Moon" . . . Ed Sullivan Aug. 4 will intro "the most photogenic girl in the world" as selected by Popular Photography. Would it be Venetia Stevenson, daughter of director Robert Stevenson? Gal debuts in "Darby's Rangers" . . . Authoress Pearl Buck handing interviewers autographed copies of her latest, "Letter from Peking" . . . Robert J. Corkery, MPEA exec in charge of Latin America, laid low again by a bug he caught on one of his trips . . . Companies budding out with soundtrack albums.

A budget estimate of $4,300,000 sent United Artists president Arthur Krim scurrying to Norway last week to see what could be done about cutting costs on "The Vikings," co-starring Kirk Douglas and Tony Curtis. By the time he got there, the budget had already been reduced to $3,700,000—and Krim reportedly was further satisfied by the fact that shooting was about 10 days ahead of schedule and the costs should eventually be cut still further.

French Film Office here categorically denies a French report that Joseph Maternati, head of the bureau, is resigning. Story was printed in the French tradesheet, France Film International. Maternati is currently vacationing in France . . . Perry Lieber heading up the 20th-Fox campaign for "South Pacific," which goes before the cameras in Hawaii in August. Film will be lensed in Todd-AO . . . "Around the World in 80 Days" has been dubbed into German. It'll have three West German openings—Berlin, Frankfort and Hamburg—but in the printdown, not the Todd-AO version.

Unable to find a property for her, Paramount has settled its contract with Jeanmaire for $50,000. French terper was to have drawn $100,000 for another film, but studio made the settlement in N.Y. when it couldn't come up with a property for her. William Morris agency negotiated the settlement for the dancer. Her last film at Paramount was "Anything Goes," which also starred Bing Crosby, Donald O'Connor and Mitzi Gaynor.

Title of the Metro film "Gigi," currently filming in Paris, has been changed to "The Parisians." Alan Jay Lerner and Frederick Loewe have written 11 new songs for the musical adaptation of the Broadway straight comedy. Picture stars Leslie Caron, Maurice Chevalier and Louis Jourdan. Incidentally, Lerner and Loewe are returning to the U.S. shortly to write additional songs for their "Paint Your Wagon," which Louis B. Mayer and Jack Cummings are bringing to the sreen.

James Stewart will visit 12 key cities in a whistle-stop chartered plane air tour on behalf of Universal's "Night Passage," in which he stars. Stewart has a participation in the film . . . Eli Wallach was unable to go to London last week to pick up his British Film Academy award as "most promising newcomer to films," so he designated his agent, Peter Witt, to accept it for him . . . Jessica Tandy signed for a starring role in Walt Disney's full-length, "The Light in the Forest," which will be filmed on location in Tennessee. EADY COMPUTATION CHANGES IN OCTOBER

London, July 16.

Out of the current Eady Fund yield of about $7,000,000 a year, British producers are receiving a bonus dividend of 30% on the domestic gross, but when the Fund becomes statutory next October and the yield will rise to close on $10,000,000, the share-out will be in the region of 50%.

In the latest return of the British Film Production Fund, the company presently administering the Eady levy, it's reported that cumulative rentals for British feature pix in the 43 weeks to May 25 last totalled $16,353,775, an improvement of $1,848,000 over the same period in the previous year. Fund income at $6,118,840 was $126,000 better than in the preceding year. Earnings for shorts, however, show a slight decline.

Brit. Pix Fund To Check Rent Terms

London, July 16.

New Governmental regulations under the Quota Act, approved in the House of Commons last Thursday (11), close a loophole which existed under the voluntary Eady scheme. The British Film Fund Agency, the authority who will administer the statutory levy, has been given powers to check and revise film rentals charged by a distributor to a circuit with which it is directly affiliitated.

In other words, if the Agency felt that, for example, either Rank Distributors were charging an excessive rental to their own theatres for a British pic, or AB-Pathe were demanding an unjust percentage for a film released on the Associated British circuit, they have authority to adjust the price.

This regulation, which received the unanimous approval of the industry, would make it impossible for any of the British majors to collect more than their due share of the statutory levy. The distribution of the Fund coin is calculated on the distributors' gross. With an inflated gross, the distrib would be getting an undue proportion—at the expense of other producers without circuit affiliations.

There is, as yet, no indication whether the Agency powers would extend to embrace a Warner Brothers-ABC releasing deal. The US major, of course, has a 37½% interest in the British group. A Board of Trade spokesman suggested that, if necessary, that particular point would warrant consideration by top legal experts.

There is no basic change in the eligibility of British films for participation in the statutory levy.

Nat'l Theatres' 12½c

Los Angeles, July 16.

Quarterly dividend of 12½c per share on the company's outstanding common stock has been voted by the Board of Directors of National Theatres.

Melon is payable Aug. 8, 1957, to record of July 25.

'Delinquent' Tops B.O. of 'Pardners'

"Delicate Delinquent," Jerry Lewis comedy sans Dean Martin, has outgrossed "Pardners," in which the two appeared together, in nearly all situations to date. The ironically-titled "Pardners" was the last in which Lewis and Martin worked as a team and was in release about this time last year. It played many of the spots now tenanted by "Delinquent."

Paramount, distributor of both pictures, originally had some uncertain moments with respect to "Delinquent." All pictures with the Martin-Lewis combo were successful taking domestic rentals of over $3,000,000 each. But there was no experience on which to crystalball "Delinquent" with Lewis as a single.

Comedian is now on tour with the picture, doing personals on opening days in 20 cities. His onstage work has consistently meant top business for the day and subsequent days' grosses for the most part have been ahead of the "Pardners" level.

Beyond Target Date, 'Arms' on Location; Winds at Cinecitta

Milan, July 16.

Director Charles Vidor has brought his "A Farewell to Arms" troupe to the Milan area for the long-postponed location work including scenes at the Campo Mirabelle racetrack and on Lake Maggiore.

David O. Selznick's CinemaScope production, currently running overtime (July 4 was original target date) started shooting March 23 in Northern Italy, then moved to Rome for interiors and some exteriors.

Following completion of local stints, company returns to Rome for another month's work at Cinecitta Studios and around the Eternal City. While most of the principals have finished work on the production, action now centers mainly around the two principal characters, played by Jennifer Jones and Rock Hudson.

FOOD TOPS BILL FOR NEW OZONERS

Boston, July 16.

George Roberts, treasurer of Rifkin Theatres here, operators of nine ozoners and three hardtops, contends that the drive-in spotlight is already focussed on food operations and, with tongue in cheek, pictures an upcoming situash which could result in such VARIETY headlines as:

"Shrimp Rolls Sockeroo In St. Loo."

"Pizza Clix In Pitts."

"Bagels Boffo In Buff."

"Turkeyburgers Wham In Birmingham."

"French Fries Fat In Fond Du Lac."

"Fish and Chips Fairish In Fargo."

"Marshmallows Mushy In Muncie."

"Things are really heading that way," says Roberts. "No longer do our patrons call and ask, 'What's playing?' They say 'What's on the menu tonight?'"

Actually the concession part of the ozone theatres is getting more ingenuity than latterday exhibitors typically give to screen showmanship itself. Extremely elaborate are some menus and the come-on advertising.

Quoting Roberts:

"One theatreman advertises special hamburgers made from beef grown on his own ranch (watch out for ozoners located near race tracks). Exhibs are promoting chicken dinners, chili, breaded shrimp, doughnuts, fish and chips, apples, Italian meatballs, hot peanuts, frankfurts and beans and a galaxy of gustatory delights to jar the jaded appetite."

Citadel of Service

Roberts also predicts. "Before long, they'll be selling dog food and advertising, 'bring the whole family including the dog.' Plenty of service at the drive-ins.

"With diapers, baby bottle warmers, windshield wipers, bumper strips, plugins for electric shaving, incar heaters, tranquilizer pills and playgrounds coming up, it's not difficult to see what the future will be.

"There will be a tiny corner at one extreme of the field where pictures will be shown for those few who care to see them. The rest of the area will consist of concession buildings with grocery stores, drug counters and jewelry counters. Pictures will be serviced free, but the distribs will want their share of the concession biz. They will demand a percentage of the food biz. Intermissions will be run on percentage only, with a checker stationed at each cash register. Their accountants will come in regularly to take stock. Exhibs will have to fill out new percentage forms. Daily forms will list the number of pizzas sold each night, popcorn, ice cream, egg rolls, pepper steaks.

'Crab Salad Week'

"A new form of advertising will be certain. Press books will describe the succulent food treats with little reference to the picture. You will see Jayne Mansfield stuffing a fistful of french fries into her mouth, Gina Lollobrigida hanging from a trapeze munching on a clam fritter, Rita Hayworth doing the rhumba while eating a sizzling hot dog. And think of the tieins:

"Think of the possibilities: Allied Artists press book could tie in 'Attack of Crab Monsters' with Crab Salad Week, Warners could feature 'Giant' Pizza Week, and our press agents will have to go to cooking schools and haunt restaurant kitchens for new ideas.

Roberts final crack:

"The alert drive-in operator who sends his employees to cooking school will get to know the 'Sweet Smell of Success.'"

Politz Vs. Sindlinger Ticket Count

Your conviction of how many people in the United States attend motion picture shows each week apparently depends on which survey you read. There is a marked discrepancy between the figures issued by Look Magazine (based on Alfred Politz media studies) and those compiled by researcher Albert Sindlinger, who has made a specialty of compiling film industry statistics.

Sindlinger finds a number of loopholes in the Politz study, which indicates that 23,600,000 persons attended a motion picture during one week in February of this year. According to Sindlinger, the Politz findings did not take into consideration (1) multiple admissions, (2) children's admissions, (3) drive-in admissions, and (4) free admissions.

When these four categories are included, Sindlinger notes the average weekly attendance during February would total 34,396,000. According to Sindlinger finding's for the same period, 23,694,000 attended a four-wall theatre. However, Sindlinger stresses that 3,142,000 of these people bought additional tickets; that is they went to a theatre twice or perhaps three times during the same week. These multiple admissions, he points out, are not included in the Politz survey.

Hardtop Vs. Drive-In

Sindlinger emphasizes, too, that his researchers have discovered that when people are asked if they attended a motion picture show, they refer only to a four-wall theatre. It's Sindlinger's contention that the public regards the drive-in theatre as a separate entity and in order to determine total motion picture attendance it must be asked specifically if it attended a drive-in theatre. Sindlinger maintains that during the stanza of the Politz study 5,196,000 people attended drive-in theatres.

He claims that the Politz report did not take into consideration the large number of drive-ins that are open during February in five southern states and in a number of northern communities where ozoners operate all year round by using in-car heaters. Sindlinger states, too, that the Politz study is only based on a sampling of 2,000 people and therefore missed the area in which ozoners were operating. In comparison, he declared that his own studies are based on samplings of 7,200 weekly and a total of about 30,000 people monthly.

Children's admissions and free admissions (mostly special promotional nights at drive-ins) amounted to 1,337,000 and 1,002,000 respectively weekly during the period of the Politz survey, Sindlinger claims.

The Politz study also provides a breakdown of age, sex, annual household income, metropolitan versus non-metropolitan areas, and geographic regions. It notes that of the 23,600,000 who attended a motion picture show during an average week in February, 19.2% were male and 18% were female. Largest group of filmgoers or 44%, according to the Politz report, were in the 15 to 19 age bracket. The next largest group, 35.1%, were 10 to 14 years old. The 20 to 29-year-olds made up 30.7%; the 30 to 39s, 14.6%; the 40 to 54s, 10.3%, and the 55s and over, 4.1%.

The largest number of filmgoers or 21.2% were in the $3,000 to $3,999 income bracket. Earning $5,000 or more were 19.9%, from $2,000 to $2,999, 18.8%; from $4,000 to $4,999; 18.3%; under $2,000, 11.8%.

The west, with 21.1%, provided the largest number of filmgoers. The northeast area was second with 19.9%. the south third with 19.6%, and the north central territory last with 15.1%. Metropolitan areas, according to the Politz report, provided 19.1% of the picture patrons as compared with 17.8% from all non-metropolitan areas. The central cities in the met areas provided 21.4% of the attendance while 16.6% came from outside the central cities. In the non-met areas, 21.3% were urban and 15.7% were rural.

Holdovers are dominating first-runs this frame with only one newcomer, "Johnny Tremain," paired with "Pawnee". It's not too forte at four houses. "Pride and the Passion," holding strong at $19,500 for third round at the Fox Wilshire, is best of the newer material while "Seven Wonders" at the Warner Hollywood continues to lead the town with another walloping $40,900 in its sixth week.

"Around the World" at the Carthay is about a capacity $27,000 for the 30th frame. "10 Commandments" is a fine $16,500 for its 35th week at the Warner Beverly. "Tremain"-"Pawnee" combo is sighting a mild $17,700 at the Los Angeles, Iris, Uptown and Loyola.

Estimates for This Week

Los Angeles, Iris, Uptown, Loyola (FWC) (2,097; 756; 1,715; 1,248; 90-$1.50) — "Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Pawnee" (Rep). Okay $17,700. Last week, Los Angeles, Iris, with El Rey, "Bachelor Party" (UA) and "Hidden Fear" (UA) (1st pop price), $9,500.

Hollywood Paramount (F&M) (1,468; 90-$1.80)—"Beau James" (Par) (2d wk). Fair $10,100. Last week, $13,100, plus $15,000 for pre-opening benefit preem.

Pantages (RKO) (2,812; $1.10-$1.75)—"Man on Fire" (M-G) (2d wk). Thin $6,100. Last week, $7,500.

Downtown Paramount, Ritz, Vogue (ABPT-FWC) (3,300; 1,330; 825; 80-$1.80)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB) (2d wk). Slow $12,800. Last week, $17,100.

Orpheum, Hawaii, El Rey (Metropolitan-G&S-FWC) (2,213; 1,106; 861; 80-$1.50)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) and "Fort Laramie" (UA) (2d wk, Orpheum, Hawaii; 1st wk, El Rey). Fair $11,800. Last week, Orpheum, Hawaii, Uptown, Loyola, $26,100.

Downtown, Hollywood, Fox Beverly (SW-FWC) (1,757; 756; 1,334; 90-$1.50) — "Fire Down Below" (Col) and "Utah Blaine" (Col) (2d wk). So-so $15,200. Last week, $22,800.

State, New Fox, Wiltern (UTAC-FWC-SW) (2,404; 956; 2,344; 90-$1.50)—"Gunfight at OK Corral" (Par) and "Crowded Paradise"

'Fire' Hot 27½G, Hub, 'Love' 16G

Boston, July 11.

Big pickup at the Hub b.o. with winning new entries this frame and cooler weather. "Fire Down Below" is hottest thing in town with lofty gross combo at the State and Orpheum. "Curse of Frankenstein" horror bill at Paramount and Fenway is soaring. "Nana" is slick at the Beacon Hill. "Love in Afternoon" is fairish at the Metropolitan. "Midnight Story" is perky at the Pilgrim. "Island in Sun" is terrific in second round at the Keith Memorial. "Monte Carlo Story" is good at the Kenmore in second frame. Mayflower returned to second runs.

Estimate for This Week

Astor (B&Q) (1,372; $1.90-$2.75)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (35th wk). Dwindling $4,000. Last week, $4,500.

Beacon Hill (Beacon Hill) (678; 90-$1.25)—"Nana" (Times). Hotsy $14,000. Last week, "St. Joan" (UA) (2d wk), $2,400.

Boston (SW-Cinerama) (1,354; $1.25-$2.65) — "Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (47th wk). Stout $14,000. Last week, $15,000.

Exeter (Indie) (1,200; 60-$1.25)—"French They Are Funny Race" (Cont) (2d wk). Second week opened Sunday (14). Last week, $8,000.

Fenway (NET) (1,373; 60-$1.10)—"Curse of Frankenstein" (WB) and "X the Unknown" (WB). Bright $7,000. Last week, "Beau James" (Par) and "Calypso Joe" (AA), $6,500.

Kenmore (Indie) (700; 85-$1.25)—"Monte Carlo Story" (UA) (2d wk). Oke $6,500. Last week, $7,500.

Memorial (RKO) (3,000; 75-$1.25)—"Island in Sun" (20th) (2d wk). Hotsy $20,000 or near. Holds for third. Last week, $31,000.

Mayflower (ATC) (689; 65-95)—Back to second runs. Last week, "Johnny Tremain" (BV) (2d wk), $4,000.

Metropolitan (NET) (4,357; 90-$1.25)—"Love in Afternoon" (AA) and "Dragoon Wells Massacre"

'Success' Wow $12,000, Prov.; 'Love' Happy 9G

Providence, July 16.

Still scorching weatherwise hereabouts with Rhode Island's beaches getting the big play. On the mainstem, Loew's State is leading with "Sweet Smell of Success." Majestic is good with "Love In The Afternoon." RKO Albee is happy with second week of "Island In Sun." Strand had fairly good Sunday opening with "Fire Down Below."

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (2,200; 65-80)—"Island In Sun" (20th) and "Rebel In Town" (AA) (2d wk). Fairly good $7,000. Last week, neat $10,000.

Avon (L-G) (527; 60-90)—"High Society" (M-G) and "Rainmaker" (Par) (reissues). Oke $2,000. Last week, "Green Man" (DCA). So-so $1,400.

Majestic (S-W) (2,200; 65-80)—"Love In Afternoon" (AA) and "Last of the Badmen" (AA). Happy $9,000. Last week, "Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Neat $9,000.

State (Loew) (3,200; 65-80)—"Sweet Smell Success" (UA) and "Big Boodle" (UA). Peppy $12,000. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) and "Tomahawk Trail" (UA). Strong $10,500.

Strand (Silverman) (2,200; 65-80) — "Fire Down Below" (Col). Opened Sunday (14). Last week, "Gunfight at O.K. Corral" (Par). Neat $11,000.

'Man' Lame 10G, Pitt; 'Fire' $9,000

Pittsburgh, July 16.

Longrun roadshow pix, "Around World" at Nixon and "Ten Commandments" at Warner, are the big noises. They're both shooting ahead while everything else seems to be at a standstill. The two new ones, "Man on Fire" at Penn and "Fire Down Below" at Harris, are very disappointing and holdovers of "Delicate Delinquent" at Stanley and "Bernardine" at Fulton are just so-so.

Estimates for This Week

Fulton (Shea) (1,700; 80-$1.25)—"Bernardine" (20th) (3d wk). Slipping to $6,500. Special morning shows for femmes only, with autographed picture of Pat Boone to every patron, have been helping. Last week, good $10,500.

Harris (Harris) (2,165; 80-$1.25)—"Fire Down Below" (Col). Heavy sugar expended on campaign and Hayworth-Mitchum-Lemmon on the marquee was figured to pay off. It isn't. Not much more than $9,000, pretty dismal under circumstances. Last week, 4th of "Island in Sun" (20th), fine $7,500.

Guild (Green) (500; 85-99)—"Gold of Naples" (DCA) (3d wk). Off a bit, but about $2,100. Last week, $2,600.

Penn (UA) (3,300; 80-$1.25)—"Man On Fire" (M-G). Good notices for the non-singing Bing

'Tammy' Tasty $8,000, L'ville

Louisville, July 16.

Business at downtown first-runs is maintaining a robust pace, in spite of hot, July temperatures. "Tammy and Bachelor" is slick at the Kentucky, but Loew's with "Sweet Smell of Success," at tilted prices, is slow. H.O.'s at the Brown, Mary Anderson and Rialto, are fair. Plethora of outdoor diversions, golf, hot rod races, baseball, etc., are weaning away quite a segment of potential film house clientele.

Estimates for This Week

Brown (Fourth Ave.-U.A.) (900; $1.25-$2.40) — "Around World" (UA) (7th wk). Moderate $10,000. Last week, neat $12,000.

Kentucky (Switow) (1,000; 50-85)—"Tammy and Bachelor" (U) and "Fear Strikes Out" (U). Slick $8,000. Last week, "Joe Butterfly" (U). Oke $6,000.

Loew's (United Artists) (3,000; 74-99)— "Sweet Smell Success" (UA). Modest $5,500 for nine days. Last week, "Man On Fire" (M-G). Slow $3,500.

Mary Anderson (People's) (1,000; 50-85) — "Prince and Showgirl" (WB) (2d wk). Nice $5,000 after first week's sock $8,000.

Rialto (Fourth Avenue) (3,000; 50-85) — "Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk). "Lure of Swamp" (20th) (2d wk). Healthy $9,000 after solid $14,000.

'Man' Fairish 9G, Cincy; 'Prince' Tall 12G, 'Fire' Disappointing 7½G, 2d

Cincinnati, July 16.

Front line pict trade this stanza tops midsummer par. "Prince and Showgirl," sweet in the flagship Albee, and "Man on Fire," a medium Palace marker, are the newcomers. Holdovers "Delicate Delinquent" and "Fire Down Below" shape fairish. "Seven Wonders" and "Around World" continue hotsy. Traffic at hilltop arties is in normal gait.

Estimates for This Week

Albee (RKO) (3,100; 90-$1.25)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Good $12,000. Last week, "Delicate Delinquent" (Par), with Jerry Lewis personals two days, $19,000.

Capitol (SW-Cinerama) (1,376; $1.20-$2.65) — "Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (58th wk). Holding to last week's hefty $17,500 on surge of vacationists.

Esquire (Shor) (500; 50-90)—"Saint Joan" (UA) (2d wk). So-so $750 after $1,200 bow.

Grand (RKO) (1,400; 90-$1.25)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par) (m.o.). Okay $7,500. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk), $6,500.

Guild (Vance) (300; 50-90)—"Great American Pastime" (M-G). Mild $1,300. Last week, "Barrets of Whimpole Street" (M-G) (2d wk), $1,000.

Hyde Park (Shor) (617; 50-90)—"Fire Under Her Skin" (Indie) (m.o.) (2d wk). Okay $1,000 after last week's $1,500.

Keith's (Shor) (1,500; 75-$1.25)—"Fire Down Below" (Col) (2d wk). Disappointing $7,500 trailing last week's $9,000, sorry in view of heavy press and air ad outlays.

Palace (RKO) (2,600; 90-$1.25)—"Man on Fire" (M-G). Lukewarm $9,000. Last week, "Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk), six days, $7,500.

Valley (Wiethe) (1,300; $1.50-$2.50)—"Around World" (UA) (5th wk). Great $19,000 on heels of last week's $19,900, setting Cincy precedent for successive advances over four-week stretch.

Cleveland, July 16.

Cool weather is boosting newcomers. "The D. I." is town's leader with "Delicate Delinquent" a close runner-up. Long-running "Around the World" is holding up nicely as is "Cinerama Holiday." "Bernardine" is offish in second frame at the Hipp.

Estimates for This Week

Allen (S-W) (3,800; 70-$1)—"D. I." (WB). Good $16,500. Last week, "Island in Sun" (20th) (4th wk), $13,000.

Hippodrome (Telem't) (3,700; 70-$1)—"Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk). Tumbled to fair $12,000. Last week, $18,000.

Ohio (Loew) (1,244; $1.25-$2.50)—"Around World" (UA) (5th wk). Excellent $23,000. Last week, $23,500.

Palace (SW-Cinerama) (1,523; $1.25-$2.40)—"Cinerama Holiday" (Cinerama) (2d wk). Husky $21,500 after $30,000 for first nine days.

State (Loew) (3,500; 70-90)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par). Satisfactory $18,000. Last week, "Man on Fire" (M-G), $10,000.

Stillman (Loew) (2,700; 70-90)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) (2d wk). Smart $12,000. Last week, $15,000.

Rain Dampens Indpls. B.O., But 'Beau' Robust $9,000; 'Fire' Cool 7G

Indianapolis, July 16.

Frequent rain and American Legion state convention parade that disrupted downtown biz Saturday night are holding first-run grosses to modest level this week. "Beau James" looks to lead with nice take at Circle. "Bernardine" is still oke in five-day second stanza at Indiana and "10 Commandments" only slightly off in 24th week at Lyric (closing Aug. 4).

Estimates for This Week

Circle (Cockrill-Dolle) (2,800; 60-90)—"Beau James" (Par) and "Calling Homicide" (Indie). Good $9,000. Last week, "Joe Butterfly" (U) and "Hell's Crossroads" (Rep); $7,500.

Indiana (Cockrill-Dolle) (3,200; 60-90)—"Bernardine" (20th) and "Affair in Reno" (20th) (2d wk). Nifty $8,500 in five days, cut short for Jerry Lewis appearances at opening of "Delicate Delinquent" Monday. Last week, great $17,000.

Keith's (Cockrill-Dolle) (1,200; 70-$1.25)—"Prince and Showgirl" (WB) (2d wk). Mild $6,000 after $11,000 opener.

Loew's (Loew's) (2,426; 60-85)—"Fire Down Below" (Col) and "Flight to Hong Kong" (Col). Modest $7,000. Last week, "Man on Fire" (M-G) and "Sierra Stranger" (Col), $8,000.

Lyric (Cockrill-Dolle) (900; $1.25-$2.20) — "Ten Commandments" (Par) (24th wk). Still oke at $8,500. Last week, $9,000.

'Delinquent' Fast 19G, Buff; 'Value' $13,500

Buffalo, July 16.

"Delicate Delinquent," which opened last Monday (8) at the Paramount, is pacing the town with a fine $19,000. Horror bill at the Center, "Curse of Frankenstein"-"X the Unknown," is mopping up. "Fire Down Below" failed to ignite at the Lafayette in its second frame. "Something of Value" is nice at the Buffalo.

Estimates for This Week

Buffalo (Loew) (3,000; 60-85)—"Something of Value" (M-G) and "Bailout at 43,000" (UA). Nice $13,500. Last week, "Island in Sun" (20th) and "Gun Duel in Durango" (20th) (4th wk), $12,000.

Paramount (ABPT) (3,000; 60-85)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par) (2d wk). Opened last Monday (8). Last week, fine $19,000.

Center (ABPT) (2,000; 60-85)—"Curse of Frankenstein" (WB) and "X The Unknown" (WB). Fancy $18,000. Last week, "Prince and Showgirl" (WB) (2d wk), $8,000.

Lafayette (Basil) (3,000; 50-85)—"Fire Down Below" (Col) (2d wk). Soggy $6,000. Last week, $13,000.

Century (Buhawk) (1,400; $1.50-$3)—"Around World" (UA) (15th wk). Strong $12,000. Last week, same.

Teck (Cinema Products) (1,200; $1.20-$2.40) — "Seven Wonders of the World" (SW) (46th wk). Fair $7,000. Last week, same.

Cinema (Martina) (450; 60-90)—"St. Joan" (UA) (2d wk). Closed with dismal $1,000. Last week, under $2,500.

New Product Ups Balto; 'Bernardine' Brisk 11G, 'Love' Fancy $8,000

Baltimore, July 16.

New entries and hot, muggy weather that made the air-cooled houses nice places to be, raised the biz picture just slightly this week but there was still nothing to shout about. "Love in the Afternoon" is giving the Stanley the nicest take it's had in weeks and "Bernardine" at the Century is making a great showing in opening week.

Estimates for This Week

Century (Fruchtman) (3,100; 50-$1.25)—"Bernardine" (20th). Brisk $18,000. Last week, "Island in Sun" (20th) (4th wk), $7,000.

Cinema (Schwaber) (460; 50-$1.25)—"Miller's Beautiful Wife" (DCA) (2d wk). Nice $2,500 after $3,500 in first.

Film Centre (Rappaport) (890; $1.25-$2.50) — "Around World" (UA) (30th wk). Solid $10,000 after near same last week.

Five West (Schwaber) (460; 50-$1.25)—"Green Man" (DCA) (6th wk). Good 2,300 after $3,000 last week.

Hippodrome (Rappaport) (2,300; 50-$1.25)—"Fire Down Below" (Col) (2d wk). Okay $6,000 after $12,000 opener.

Mayfair (Hicks) (980; 50-$1.25)—"Tammy and Bachelor" (U). Trim $4,500. Last week, "Joe Butterfly" (U) (2d wk), $3,000.

New (Fruchtman) (1,600; 50-$1.25)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) (2d wk). Nice $7,000 after $12,000 in first.

Playhouse (Schwaber) (410; 50-$1.25)—"Bachelor Party" (UA) (5th wk). Good $3,700 after same last week.

Stanley (SW) (3,200; 50-$1.25)—"Love in Afternoon" (AA). Fine $8,000. Last week, "Prince and Showgirl" (WB), $8,000.

Town (Rappaport) (1,400; 50-$1.25)—"Man On Fire" (M-G). Mild $9,000. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk), $6,500.

'80 Days' Mighty $19,000 Tops Mpls.; 'Happy'-Shriner Dismal 10G, 'D.I.' 8G

Minneapolis, July 16.

Although the Shriners' big national convention here has such counter attractions as a night street parade and a spectacular outdoor show, fresh pix at downtown deluxers are benefitting from the army of visitors. "Around World" is off to a terrific start at the Academy. Exception, however, is Radio City's vaudefilm layout which is topped by Herb Shriner and the Jimmy Dorsey band.

Estimates for This Week

Academy (Mann) (847; $1.50-$2.65)—"Around World" (UA). Teed off last Friday (12), but first two nights were taken over by organizations so Sunday (14) really was first week's start. Stiff night scale of $2.65 and $2.45 for lower and balcony, respectively (no cheaper seats), should boost take. Mighty $19,000 with biz at capacity.

Century (S-W) (1,150; $1.75-$2.65)—"Seven Wonders of World" (Cinerama) (49th wk). Still going great guns. Big $15,000. Last week, $13,000.

Gopher (Berger) (1,000; 85-90)—""Bride Goes Wild" (M-G) and "Our Vines Have Tender Grapes" (M-G) (reissues). Slow $3,500. Last week, "Something of Value" (M-G) (3d wk), $2,800.

Lyric (Par) (1,000; 85-90)—"The D.I." (WB) (m.o.). Here after big Radio City first week and still demonstrating boxoffice strength. Big $8,000. Last week, "Tammy and Bachelor" (U) (2d wk), $5,000.

Radio City (Par) (4,100; 90-$1.50) —"Let's Be Happy" (AA) and stage show with Herb Shriner, Jimmy Dorsey Band, etc. First vaudefilm here in years, but very poor $10,000. Last week, "The D.I." (WB), $15,000.

RKO Orpheum (RKO) (2,800; 75-90)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) (2d wk). Bouquets tossed at it, but boxoffice response has left something to be desired. Fairly good $5,500. Last week, $8,500.

RKO Pan (RKO) (1,800; 75-90)—"Utah Blaine" (Col) and "Ride the High Iron" (Col). Loop's only twin bill and attracting quantity hunters. Good $4,500. Last week, "Monsters That Challenged World" (UA) and "The Vampire" (UA), $5,000.

State (Par) (2,300; 85-90)—"Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk). Big $10,000. Last week, $13,500.

Suburban World (Mann) (800; 85)—"Baby Doll" (WB) (2d run). This theatre, ordinarily a first-run house, playing it day and date with several other local art houses. Okay $1,800. Last week, "Tears for Simon" (Rep), $2,000.

World (Mann) (400; 85-$1.25)—"La Strada" (Indie). This long awaited award winner is being helped by critics' praises and favorable word-of-mouth. Moderate $4,000. Last week, "Saint Joan" (UA) (2d wk), $2,500.

H.O.s, Rain Dip Chi Biz, But 'Bambi' Smash $24,000; 'Beau' Fancy 9G, 'Value' Bright 25G, 'Fire' 22G, All 2d

Chicago, July 16.

With holiday product still holding on most downtown screens and a consequent lack of openers, Loop grosses this frame are taking a small dip. Meanwhile, Paramount released "Loving You" for its first-run showing here at 49 nabe theatres, where it plays with an assortment of subsequent run second features.

Weekend was no indication of grossing power of the outlying first-run Elvis Presley-Elizabeth Scott starrer because of a record rainstorm Friday night and the Saturday consequences. However, drive-ins in Gary and Hammond report the picture did a record Saturday night business.

Only major starter this frame is "Bambi," reissue at the Garrick headed for a smash $24,000, tops for this house since it reopened this spring. Otherwise, two double action bills are the only new downtown entries, "Kiss Before Dying" with "Three Bad Sisters" topping a hot so bad $7,000 at the Grand, and "Fire Maidens of Outer Space" with "Bride of Monster" a gargantuan $5,500 at the Monroe.

Outstanding of the holdovers are "Beau James" at the Esquire for its second fast frame, and "Silk Stockings" doing a well-rounded third at the Loop, "Something of Value" marks off a nifty second at the Woods, and "Invitation to Dance" sails comfortably through second at the World.

"Johnny Tremain" runs par for second at the Roosevelt, while at the Chicago "Fire Down Below" manages an ample second. "Pride and Passion" in third stanza at the State-Lake, "Island in Sun" for its fifth at the Oriental, and "Green Man" rounding third at the Surf are all good to excellent. "Gunfight at O.K. Corral" gets held over for a seventh stretch at the United Artists.

Roadshows continue through their fast summer pace with little letup.

Estimates for This Week

Carnegie (H&E Balaban) (480; 90)—Subsequent run. Last week, "Papa, Mama, Maid and I" (Teitle) (2d wk). Steady $1,800.

Chicago (B&K) (3,900; 90-$1.50)—"Fire Down Below" (Col) (2d wk). Warm $22,000. Last week, $28,900.

Esquire (H&E Balaban) (1,400; $1.25)—"Beau James" (Par) (2d wk). Chipper $9,000. Last week, $17,000.

Garrick (B&K) (850; 90-$1.25)—"Bambi" (BV) (reissue). Hot $24,000. Last week, "St. Joan" (UA) (2d wk), $4,000.

Grand (Indie) (1,200; 90-$1.25)—"Kiss Before Dying" (UA) and "Three Bad Sisters" (UA).

'Tremain' Oke $12,500, Frisco; 'Love' Adequate 10G, 'Man' 8½G, Both 2d

San Francisco, July 16.

First-run business is off somewhat, but longruns are holding up well. "Johnny Tremain" is okay at the Fox. Of the holdovers "Love in the Afternoon" is adequate at the Golden Gate, "Fire Down Below" is mediocre at the Paramount, "Prince and Showgirl" is good at the St. Francis as is "Sweet Smell of Success" at the United Artists. "Around World" is terrific at the Coronet.

Estimates for This Week

Golden Gate (RKO) (2,859; 90-$1.25)—"Love In Afternoon" (AA) and "Dragoon Wells Massacre" (AA) (2d wk). Okay $10,000. Last week, $14,000.

Fox (FWC) (4,651; $1.25-$1.50)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Phantom Stagecoach" (20th). Okay $12,500. Last week, "Bernardine" (20th) and "Way To The Gold" (20th), $19,500.

Warfield (Loew's) (2,656; 90-$1.25)—"Man On Fire" (M-G) (2d wk). Disappointing $8,500. Last week, $12,500.

Paramount (Par) (2,646; 90-$1.25)—"Fire Down Below" (Col) and "Last Man To Hang" (Col) (2d wk). So-so $10,000. Last week, $15,000.

St. Francis (Par) (1,400; 90-$1.25) — "Prince and Showgirl" (W-B) (3d wk). Good $5,500 on four days after $11,000 last week.

Orpheum (SW-Cinerama) (1,458; $1.75-$2.65) — "Seven Wonders of

Estimates Are Net

Film gross estimates as reported herewith from the various key cities, are net; i.e., without usual tax. Distributors share on net take, when playing percentage, hence the estimated figures are net income.

The parenthetic admission prices, however, as indicated, include the U. S. amusement tax.

'Silk' Big 20G, D.C.; 'Bernardine' 24G

Washington, July 16.

Two major ozone attractions, Ringling Bros. Circus at Griffith Stadium, and the Jimmy Durante show at Carter Barron, are cutting into mainstem b.o. A pair of sturdy newcomers are bringing some life, however, to an otherwise dull session. "Bernardine," at Loew's Capitol, and "Silk Stockings," at Loew's Palace, are both meeting the outdoor competition, though neither is up to hopes. "Delicate Delinquent" at RKO Keith's is okay, but way down from its initial sock week.

Estimates for This Week

Ambassador (SW) (1,490; 85-$1.25) — "Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Good $8,000 and holds. Last week, "D.I." (WB) (3d wk). Big $8,500.

Capitol (Loew) (3,434; 85-$1.25)—"Bernardine" (20th). Solid $24,000, and stays. Last week, "Island in Sun" (20th) (4th wk). Oke $13,000.

Columbia (Loew) (1,174; 85-$1.25)—"Sweet Smell Success" (UA) (2d wk). Fine $12,000 after smash, and near record, $20,000. Stays.

Keith's (RKO) (1,859; 85-$1.25)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par) (2d wk). Dipped to fair $9,000 after whopping $20,000 last week. Latter hypoed by personal appearance of Jerry Lewis, who set all-time house record for single day.

Metropolitan (SW) (1,100; 85-$1.25) — "Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Busy $12,000 and holds. Last week, "D.I." (WB) (3d wk). Sock $11,500.

Palace (Loew) (2,360; 85-$1.25)—"Silk Stockings" (M-G). Brisk $20,000, but not up to hopes. Last week, "Man on Fire" (M-G) (2d wk). Satisfactory $11,000.

Plaza (T-L) (290; 90-$1.50)—"Miller's Beautiful Wife" (DCA) (4th wk). Down to snail's pace of $2,000 after fast start. Last week, fine $3,000. Stays.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (600; 90-$1.25)—"Fire Down Below" (Col) (2d wk). Slow $3,500 after pretty good $6,000 last week. Stays.

Uptown (SW) (1,100; $1.25-$3)—"Around the World" (UA) (15th wk). Bright $21,000 after $22,500 last week. Holds.

Warner (SW-Cinerama) (1,300; $1.20-$2.40) — "Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (29th wk). New low of $12,000 after $14,000 last week. Stays.

Heat Hits Omaha, But 'Fire' Torrid $8,500

Omaha, July 16.

Blistering heat and a trio of holdovers are stifling biz at downtown first-runs this week. The only new entry, "Fire Down Below," is the ace at the Orpheum and is rated hotsy. "Delicate Delinquent" is still solid at the Brandeis, but "Bernardine" is thinning at the Orpheum and "Something of Value" is down to mild at the State.

Estimates for This Week

Brandeis (RKO) (1,100; 75-90)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par) and "Weapon" (Rep) (2d wk). Oke $3,500 after $6,500 debut.

Omaha (Tristates) (2,066; 75-90)—"Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk). Falling to $4,500. Last week, $8,500.

Orpheum (Tristates) (2,980; 75-90)—"Fire Down Below" (Col). Sturdy $8,500. Last week, "Island in Sun" (20th) (2d wk), $6,500.

State (Goldberg) (850; 75-90)—"Something of Value" (M-G) (2d wk). Mild $3,000 and bows after five days. Last week, $5,500.

'LOVE' PERT 8G, PORT.; 'PRINCE' SLIM $6,500

Portland, Ore., July 16.

Biz is perking at nearly all first-runs despite the heat and transient name attractions. "Love In Afternoon" at the Orpheum looks best for new entries. "Around World" stays for a solid 13th week at the Broadway. "Prince and Showgirl" is disappointing at the Fox.

Estimates for This Week

Broadway (Parker) (980; $2.00-$2.50)—"Around World" (UA) (13th wk). Steady $12,000. Last week, $12,100.

Fox (Evergreen) (1,536; $1.00-$1.50) — "Prince and Showgirl" (WB) and "Dark Web" (Col). Disappointing $6,500. Last week, "Fire Down Below" (Col) and "The Burglar" (UA), $7,300.

Guild (Indie) (400; $1.25)—"La Strada" (Indie) (3d wk), with English subtitles. Fine $2,000. Last week, $2,800.

Liberty (Hamrick) (1,890; 90-$1.25)—"Land Unknown" (UI) and "Midnight Story" (UI). Slim $5,000. Last week, "Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Duel At Apache Wells" (Rep) (8 days), $6,500.

Orpheum (Evergreen) (1,600; $1.00-$1.50)—"Love In Afternoon" (AA) and "Young Guns" (AA). Nice $8,000. Last week, "Bernardine" (20th) and "Way To The Gold" (20th), $12,200.

Paramount (Port-Par) (3,400; 90-$1.25) — "Delicate Delinquent" (Par) and "Revolt At Fort Laramie" (UA) (2d wk). Okay $6,500. Last week, $8,100.

'Bernardine' Hep $14,000, Philly

Philadelphia, July 16.

Midtown business for the most part was off. The national Boy Scout Jamboree at nearby Valley Forge brought people to the center of the city, but it had little effect on grosses. Only "Bernardine," in its first stanza at the Goldman, and "Delicate Delinquent" at the Stanley attracted the Scouts. "Sweet Smell of Success" and "Beau James" were most powerful of the holdovers.

Estimates for This Week

Arcadia (S&S) (526; 99-$1.80)—"Something of Value" (M-G) 2d wk). Okay $10,500. Last week, $16,500.

Boyd (SW-Cinerama) (1,430; $1.25-$2.80) — "Seven Wonders" (Cinerama) (64th wk). Good $10,300. Last week, $13,000.

Fox (20th) (2,250; 55-$1.80)—"Island in Sun" (20th) (4th wk). Very good $20,000. Last week, $28,000.

Goldman (Goldman) (1,250; 65-$1.25) — "Bernardine" (20th). Strong $14,000. Last week, "D.I." (WB) (2d wk), $11,000.

Green Hill (Serena) (750; 75-$1.25) (Closed Sundays) — "Green Man" (DCA) (7th wk). Moving $3,500. Last week, $4,200.

Mastbaum (SW) (4,370; 90-$1.49)—"Love in Afternoon" (AA) (3d wk). Slow $7,500. Last week, $8,000.

Midtown (Goldman) (1,000; $2-$2.75) — "Around World" (UA) (29th wk). Excellent $13,500. Last week, $13,000.

Randolph (Goldman) (2,250; $1.40-$2.75)—"Beau James" (Par). Fine $14,000. Last week, "Prince and Showgirl" (WB) (2d wk), $8,500.

Stanley (SW) (2,900; 99-$1.49)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par) (2d wk). Fair $11,500. Last week, $18,000.

Stanton (SW) (1,483; 99-$1.49)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) (2d wk). Pretty good $12,000. Last week, $20,000.

Trans-Lux (T-L) (500; 99-$1.80)—"Bambi" (BV) (2d wk) (reissue). Great $10,000. Last week, $14,000.

Viking (Sley) (1,000; 75-$1.40)—"Man on Fire" (M-G). Okay $12,000. Last week, $15,400.

'Bernardine' Tall 22G, Det.; 'Beau' Neat $15,000

Detroit, July 16.

"Bernardine," with strong bobbysox appeal, is pacing the downtown deluxers. "Beau James" is good at the Michigan while "Man on Fire" is okay at the Adams.

Estimates for This Week

Fox (Fox Detroit) (5,000; 90-$1.25) — "Bernardine" (20th) and "Smiley" (20th). Bobbysox sock $22,000. Last week, "Island in Sun" (20th) and "Two Grooms for Bride" (20th) (4th wk), $17,000.

Michigan (United Detroit) (4,000; 90-$1.25)—"Beau James" (Par) and "Pawnee" (Col). Good $15,000. Last week, "Prince and Showgirl"

Arties Pace So-So B'way; Gable 'Band' Big 48G, 'Moon' 14G Busts House Mark; French 'Maid' 10G; 'Pride' OK 52G, 3d

Rain, the usual ally of Broadway business during the summer months, did not provide its customary elixir quality to Main Stem business this past session. Despite an intermittent downpour all day Saturday (13) there was no significant parade to the Broadway boxoffices. Theatre operators described the wicket activity for the week as fair-to-good, but except for two new art house entries, there was no general elation.

Sole newcomer in a big Broadway house—Warner Bros.' "Band of Angels" at the Paramount—looks headed for a good run on the basis of its first week's showing. Despite lukewarm reviews, the Clark Gable starrer appears likely to score a strong $48,000 or near for week ending today (Wed.). Actually the take is only for six days since the picture opened last Wednesday night with an invitational premiere and started its regular run on Thursday morning.

Perhaps the biggest surprise is the sleeper, "The Rising of the Moon," the John Ford entry being distributed by WB. For its first week at the newly reopened 55th St. Playhouse (now under Charles B. Moss ownership), the Irish-made film broke a 30-year house record, tallying a boffo $14,000 or near for opening round ended yesterday (Tues.) at the 253-seat theatre.

"Maid in Paris," a Continental Film French import, is also displaying strong potential. It appears likely to rack up a great $10,000 for opening round ending tomorrow (Thurs.) at Walter Reade's artie Baronet Theatre.

UA's blockbuster "Pride and Passion" continued at a good pace at the Capitol with $52,000 estimated for third week concluding tomorrow (Thurs.). "Beau James," in third Astor session, is expected to reach an okay $21,000 or near. "Delicate Delinquent" at Mayfair is seen hitting a fine $22,000 for its initial holdover week.

Two longrunners—"The Prince and the Showgirl" at Radio City Music Hall and "Island in the Sun" at Roxy—are winding up engagements this week with good takes. "Prince," which will be followed by "Silk Stockings" (M-G), tallied a strong $123,000 while "Island" brought in solid $56,000. "Sweet Smell of Success" at Loew's State was okay in third round with $26,000. Hard-ticket "Around World in 80 Days" at Rivoli again had SRO sign up selling out to tune of $37,100 in 11 performances.

Estimates for This Week

Astor (City Inv.) (1,300; 75-$2)—"Beau James" (Par) (4th wk). Third round ending today (Wed.) looks likely to hit okay $21,000 or near. Previous session tallied $26,000.

Little Carnegie (L. Carnegie) (550; $1.25-$1.80)—"Nana" (Times) (14th-final wk). The 13th week ended Thursday (11) racked up a neat $5,100 after $6,000 for the 12th round. Pic ends up a successful run on Sunday (21). "Lovers' Net" (Times), another French import, opens Monday (22).

Baronet (Reade) (430; $1.25-$1.80)—"Maid in Paris" (Cont) (2d wk). Appears likely to score a great $10,000 for initial round winding up tomorrow (Thurs.). In ahead, "French They Are A Funny Race." $5,400 for final 11 days.

Capitol (Loew) (4,820; $1-$2.50)—"Pride and Passion" (UA) (4th wk). Third canto concluding tomorrow (Thurs.) is estimated to reach a good $52,000. Second week rolled up $65,000. Continues.

Criterion (Moss) (1,671; $1.80-$3.30)—"10 Commandments" (Par) (36th wk). The 35th week winding up tomorrow (Thurs.) is seen hitting big $43,000 for 16 performances. Previous round, also for 16 performances, was $44,500.

Fine Arts (Davis) (468; 90-$1.80)—"Torero" (Col) (9th wk). Eighth stanza concluded Monday (15) with good $5,400, same as the previous session. Continues until July 29 when "The Light Across the Street" (UMPO) opens.

55th St. Playhouse (E-F) (300; $1.25-$1.50)—"The Rising of the Moon" (WB) (2d wk). Initial week ending yesterday (Tues.) of John Ford entry hit a boffo $14,000 or near for opening round at this 253-seat house, setting record for 30-year history of theatre. Continues. natch!

Globe (Brandt) (1,500; 70-$1.50—"Face In the Crowd" (WB) (8th wk). Seventh stanza of Elia Kazan-Budd Schulberg pic scored mild $6,000 for frame ended yesterday (Tues.). Sixth was $7,000.

Guild (Guild) (450; $1-$1.75)—"Green Man" (DCA) (9th wk). British entry continues brisk pace with nice $8,000 for eighth session. Preceding round tallied $9,500. Continues.

Mayfair (Brandt) (1,736; 79-$1.80)—"Delicate Delinquent" (Par) (3d wk). First holdover stanza of initial Jerry Lewis solo effort looks to hit solid $22,000 or near for period ending today (Wed.). Opening round was $27,000. "Night Passage" (U), James Stewart-Audie Murphy starrer, opens July 24.

Normandie (Trans-Lux) (592; 95-$1.80)—"Miller's Beautiful Daughter" (DCA) (6th-final wk). Fifth session finished Monday (15) was weak $3,300. Winds up today (Wed.). "Bambi" (BV) (reissue) takes over tomorrow (Thurs.). Fourth round of "Miller's" was $4,400.

Palace (RKO) (1,700; 50-$1.60)—"Trooper Hook" (UA) and vaude. Week ending tomorrow (Thurs.) looks to score good $18,500. In ahead, "Midnight Story" (U) and vaude, $23,500 for eight days.

Paramount (AB-PT) (3,665; $1-$2)—"Band of Angels" (WB). Opening round of Clark Gable starrer is seen hitting solid $48,000 for six days ending today (Wed.). Take does not include full week since pic opened with invitational preem last Wednesday night. In ahead, "Beginning of End" (ABPT) and Alan Freed rock 'n' roll show, $116,000.

Paris (Pathe Cinema) (568; 90-$1.80) — "Fernandel the Dressmaker" (Indie) (3d wk). First holdover round of French comedy tallied okay $6,000. Opening week take was $8,500. "Passionate Sum-

Kansas City, July 16.

Week's trend is moderate as trade is back to average after spurting during the previous holiday frame. Better turn is being shown by "Sweet Smell of Success" at the Midland, holding close to recent strong trend at this house. "Johnny Tremain" in three Fox Midwest houses and "Lonely Man" at the Paramount are fairish, as is "Young Stranger" in four Dickinson situations. Fox Midwest has shifted three ordinarily subsequents to first-run temporarily, the Apollo, Brookside and Vista day and dating with "Kronos" for moderate play.

Estimates for This Week

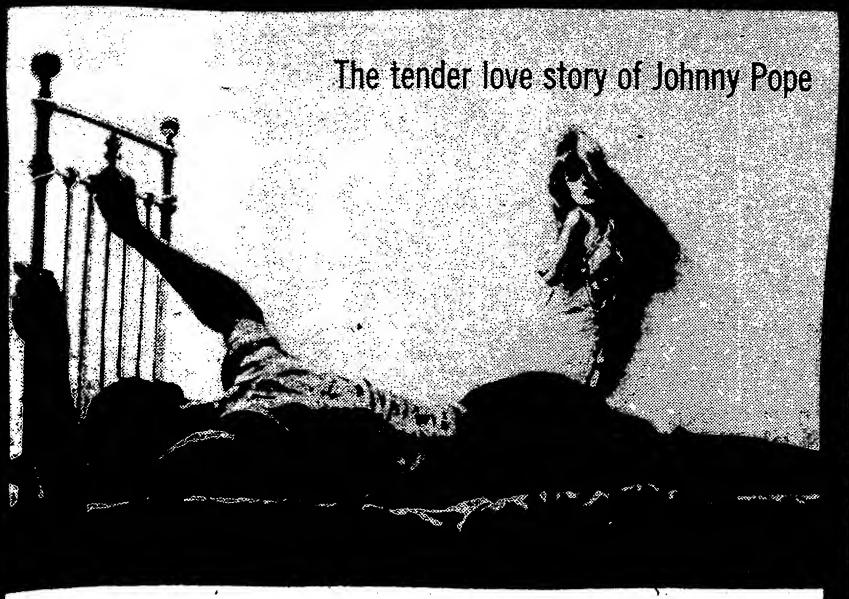
Apollo, Brookside, Vista (Fox Midwest) (1,050; 1,100; 800; 85c)—"Kronos" (20th) and "She Devil" (20th). Mild $6,000. Last week, subsequent runs.

Dickinson, Glen, Shawnee Drive-in, Leawood Drive-in (Dickinson) 750; 700; 1,100 cars; 900 cars; 85c person)—"Young Stranger" (RKO-U) and "Man in the Vault" (RKO-U). Fair $9,000. Last week, "The Oklahoman" (AA) and "Footsteps in the Night" (AA). Sock $18,000, best of season.

Kimo (Dickinson) (504; 75-90)—"Gold of Naples" (Indie). Fancy $1,800, holds. Last week, "African Queen" (UA) and "Moulin Rouge" (UA) (reissues) (3d wk). Oke $900.

Midland (Loew) (3,500; 60-80)—"Sweet Smell of Success" (UA) and "Spoilers of Forest" (Rep). Nifty $9,000. Last week, "Man on Fire" (M-G) and "Lawless Eighties" (Rep). Favorable $8,000.

Missouri (SW-Cinerama) (1,194; $1.25-$2) — "Cinerama Holiday" (Cinerama) (19th wk). Satisfactory $9,000. Last week, $10,000.



Paramount (UP) (1,900; 75-90)—"Lonely Man" (Par). Fair $6,000. Last week, "Prince and Showgirl" (WB). Ordinary $7,000.

Rockhill (Little Art Theatres) (750; 75-90)—"Edge of the City" (M-G) (2d wk). Light $900. Last week, $1,600, moderate.

Tower (Fox Midwest) (1,143; $1.25-$2)—"Around World" (UA) (7th wk). Steady $12,000. Last week, $11,000.

Uptown (Fox Midwest) (2,043; 75-90)—"Bernardine" (20th) (2d wk). Mild $5,500. Last week, in combo with three other houses.

Esquire, Fairway, Granada (Fox Midwest) (820; 700; 1,217; 75-90)—"Johnny Tremain" (BV) and "Badge of Marshall Brennan" (Rep). Mild $9,000, as three house hook-up is temporary. Last week, in combo with Uptown, "Bernardine" (20th). Bright $17,000.

COMMIE BERLIN'S 'OPEN HOUSE'

Karlovy Vary Charvari

By GENE MOSKOWITZ

Karlovy Vary, July 16.

Film Festival here opened with a party all over the grounds of one of the plush hotels. Nations commingled and seemed evident by the turnout and attitudes that the Czech Fest heads are determined to make this a real "A" festival.

Machaty's Long-Time-No-See

Gustave Machaty, the man who made the famed "Ecstacy," with a nude Hedy Lemarr, is back to his country on a visit. Machaty is a U.S. citizen working in West Germany and this is his first visit in over 20 years. Intense Czech. coproduction activities are leading to overtures to Machaty, but he heads back to his German base soon.

Swedes and Nudes Toujours

A turnabout was noticed in the Swedish-Argentine pic "The Springtime of Life" which instead of the usual nude Svenska had the boy nude, while his clothes were drying after a plunge into the river, and his girlfriend fully clothed, discreetly hld him to make the scene uncensorable.

India's Silver Lining

An Indian delegate says that a recent law there cut U.S. entries from 100 to 75 pix per year and upped the film import tax 50%. However this has led to more careful choice of films which are doing better biz and may eventually make up for the cuts and upped taxes.

Isabelle Salvi Comes Far

As with most European film festivals of late there is shortage of visiting dames. This is aggravated by the un-pinup quality of most of the Eastern actresses. Drawing most of the photog salvos now is Isabelle Salvi. She came in alone from Argentina on her own to be present at the showing of the first Argentinian-Paraguayan coproduction "Thunder Among the Leaves." She is a well set up girl and getting the lion's share of attention.

Highbrow Interest

Edouard Lorot, an editor on the U.S. quarterly, "Film Culture," arrived with full photographic gear, and plans to shoot a documentary of the Festival. He's been shooting local stuff all over Continent. Another highbrow here is John H. Winge, ex of U.S. and now a Viennese.

Seek Czech Puppet Films

Two Americans, Bill Snyder and Jay Frankel are here—both out of possible market interest in Czech puppeteer films.

No Air Conditioning

Festival entries unspool officially at three a day which makes this a much more rugged festival than Cannes. Lack of air conditioning is making it tough in the main film hall, though the outdoor theatre for CinemaScoped pix is bearable.

Adult Hypocrisy

Swedish-Argentine "Livets Var" (The Springtime of Life) of Arne Mattsson is another tale of young love thwarted by adult hypocrisy. Tragic tale is melodramatic rather than deep or compelling and it passable technically.

Boys Love Blast Furnace

Russian "Bibocitt" (On Top) is a tale of blast furnace workers which though having its quota of propaganda, has a human, real treatment of individuals and for the first time shows work influenced by human emotions. Boy does not only love blast furnace, but a young fellow femme worker.

Yugo Thriller

Yugoslavia had a tight, extremely well made resistance thriller in "Veliki I Mali" (The Big and Small); Japan a neatly made tale of village graft.

Fest again points up the "socially" slanted features still being made in the East. But these are being tempered with more humane, individual interest and show less rigidity than in Stalin era. One Russian put it rather well when he said here: "The film art has become the most powerful and most popular of all arts. It has become a giant, a national hero, but this hero can do both good and evil. All depends on the ideas and sentiments which lead it."
